The circulation of the blood, the milky and lymphatic vessels, the motion of the heart, &c.
 Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 342.

2. Mad; raving; extravagant; enthusiastick.

A negro stood by us trembling, whom we could see now and then lift up his hands and eyes, muttering his black art, as we apprehended, to some hobgoblin; but, when we least suspected, [he] skipt out, and as in a lymphatick rapture unsheathed a long skean or knife.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 27.

Horace either is, or feigns himself, lymphatic.
 Ld. Shaftesbury.

LYMPHEDUCT, n. s. [lymph and ductus, Lat.] A vessel which conveys the lymph.

The glands,
 All artful knots, of various hollow threads,
 Which lympheducts, an artery, nerve, and vein,
 Involved and close together wound, contain.
 Blackmore.

LYNDEN tree. [tilia, Lat.] A plant. See LIND.

LYNX, n. s. [Latin.] A spotted beast, remarkable for speed and sharp sight.

He that has an idea of a beast with spots, has but a confused idea of a leopard, it not being thereby sufficiently distinguished from a lynx.
 Locke.

What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
 The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam.
 Pope.

LYRE, n. s. [lyre, Fr. lyra, Lat.] A harp;
 a musical instrument to which poetry is, by poetical writers, supposed to be sung.

With other notes than to the Orphean lyre.
 Milton, P. L.

My softest verse, my darling lyre,
 Upon Utopia's toilet lay. Prior.
 He never touch'd his lyre in such a truly chromatick manner as upon that occasion.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

LYRICAL, } adj. [lyricus, Latin; lyrique, LYRICK } French.] Pertaining to a harp, or to odes or poetry sung to a harp; singing to a harp.

All his trophies hung and acts enroll'd*
 In copious legend, or sweet lyrick song.

Milton, S. A.

Somewhat of the purity of English, somewhat of more equal thoughts, somewhat of sweetness in the numbers; in one word, somewhat of a finer turn, and more lyrick verse, is yet wanting. Dryd.

The lute neglected, and the lyrick muse,
 Love taught my tears in sadder notes to flow,
 And tun'd my heart to elegies of woe. Pope.

LYRICK, n. s. A poet who writes songs to the harp.

The greatest conqueror in this nation, after the manner of the old Grecian lyricks, did only compose the words of his divine odes, but set them to musick himself. Addison.

LYRIST, n. s. [lyristes, Latin.] A musician who plays upon the harp.

His tender theme the charming lyrist chose Minerva's anger, and the direful woes
 Which voyaging from Troy the victors bore. Pope.

M.

M A C

M Has, in English, one unvaried sound, by compression of the lips; as, mine, tame, camp: it is never mute.

M.* A numeral letter signifying one thousand.

MAB.* n. s.

1. The queen of the fairies, in the superstitious mythology of elder days; probably derived from the Welsh mab, anciently signifying a little child.

O, then, I see queen Mab hath been with you: She is the fairies' midwife; and she comes In shape no bigger than an agate stone On the fore-finger of an alderman.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
Her chariot of a snail's fine shell,
Which for the colours did excell,
The fair queen Mab becoming well,

Drayton, Nymphidia.
This is Mab, the mistress fairy
That doth nightly rob the dairy.

B. Jonson, Entert. at Altopre.
With stories told of many a feat,
How fairy Mab the junkets eat. Milton, L' All.

2. A slattern. North. Ray, and Grose.

To MAB.* v. a. To dress carelessly. North. Ray, and Grose.

To MA'BBLE.* v. a. To wrap up. See To MOBBLE.

Their heads and faces are mabled in fine linen, that no more is to be seen of them than their eyes.

Sandys, Travels.

MACARO'NI.* n. s. [Ital. maccaroni.]

1. A kind of paste meat boiled in broth, and dressed with butter, cheese, and spice. Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598. A favourite dish among the Italians; and now common, in our own country, at dinners; a sort of vermicelli.

He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat anchovies, maccaroni, &c.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

2. A sort of droll or fool; and thence the application of the word to a fop. [maccarone, Ital.] See also MACAROON.

There is a set of merry drolls whom the common people of all countries admire, and seem to love so well, that they could eat them, according to the old proverb; I mean those circumferentious wits whom every nation calls by the name of that dish of meat which it loves best. In Holland, they are termed "pickled herrings;" in France, "Jean potages;" in Italy, "maccaronies;" and in Great Britain, "Jack puddings."

Addison, Spect. No. 47.
You are a delicate Londoner; you are a maccaroni; you can't ride.

Boswell, Tour to the Hebr. p. 84.

MACARO'NICK.* n. s. [macaronique, Fr.; from the Ital. maccaroni.]

1. A confused heap or mixture of several things. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

M A C

2. Ludicrous mixture of languages; a kind of burlesque.

To be travestied or turned into burlesque or macaronique.

Bp. Ward, Apol. for the Myst. of the Gos. (1673), p. 42.

MACARO'NICK.* adj. [macaronique, Fr. The adjective in both languages is modern: not so the substantive.] Denoting a kind of burlesque poetry, intermixing several languages, latinizing words of vulgar use, and modernizing Latin words. Dr. Johnson, in macaroon, has considered this application as derived from the person, the macaroni, whom he calls a coarse, rude, low fellow; but it is much more probably from the combination, the mixed food, maccaroni.

Our author gives an account of this new species of poetry, since called macaronic.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 357.

MACARO'ON.† n. s. [maccaroni, Italian.]

1. A coarse, rude, low fellow; whence macaronick poetry, in which the language is purposely corrupted. Dr. Johnson.— But see MACARONICK. Donne means not such a person as Johnson has described, but a pert, meddling fellow; a busy body; and the poet has placed the accent on the first syllable. But it was also accented on the last.

Like a big wife at sight of loathed meat,
Ready to travail; so I sigh and sweat,
To hear this macaron talk in vain: for yet,
Either my humour or his own to fit;—
He names a price for every office paid,
He saith our wars thrive ill because delay'd.

Donne, Poems, p. 132.

A macaroon,
And no way fit to speak to clouted shoon.

El. on Donne's Death by R. B. Donne's Poems, (ed. 1650.)

2. A kind of sweet biscuit, made of flour, almonds, eggs, and sugar. [from the Italian word; whence macaron, French.]

MACA'W.† n. s. A large species of parrot, distinguished also by the length of its tail. There are three sorts of this bird brought over into Europe. Chambers.

Where pheasants, parrots, and macaws unfold,
Their many-colour'd plumes, suffus'd with gold.

Anon.

MACAW-TREE. n. s.

A species of the palm-tree, very common in the Carribee islands, where the negroes pierce the tender fruit, whence issues a pleasant liquor; and the body of the tree affords a solid timber, supposed by some to be a sort of ebony.

Miller.

MACE.† n. s. [magga, Saxon; maça, Spanish.]

M A C

1. An ensign of authority borne before magistrates.

Who mightily upheld that royal mace,
Which now thou bearest. Spenser, F. Q.

2. [mace, old French; massa, Latin.] A heavy blunt weapon; a club of metal.

Some have an axe, and some a mace of stele.
Chaucer, Kt. Tale.

O murderous slumber!

Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy
That plays thee musick? Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

The Turkish troops breaking in with their scymitars and heavy iron maces, made a most bloody execution. Knolles.

Death with his mace petrified smote.

Milton, P. L.

With his mace their monarch struck the ground;

With inward trembling earth receiv'd the wound,
And rising streams a ready passage found.

Dryden.

The mighty maces with such haste descend,
They break the bones and make the armour bend.

Dryden.

3. [macis, Lat. and old French.] A kind of spice.

The nutmeg is inclosed in a threefold covering, of which the second is mace: it is thin and membranaceous, of an oleaginous, and a yellowish colour: it has an extremely fragrant, aromatick, and agreeable smell, and a pleasant but acid and oleaginous taste. Hill, Mat. Med.

Water, vinegar, and honey, is a most excellent sudorifick: it is more effectual with a little mace added to it. Arbuthnot.

MACE'ALE. n. s. [mace and ale.] Ale spiced with mace.

I prescribed him a draught of maceale, with hopes to dispose him to rest. Wiseman, Surgery.

MA'CEBEARER. n. s. [mace and bear.] One who carries the mace before persons in authority.

I was placed at a quadrangular table opposite to the mace-bearer. Spectator.

To MAC'ERATE.† v. a. [macero, Latin; macerer, French.]

1. To make lean; to wear away.

Recurrent pains of the stomach, megrims, and other recurrent head-aches, macerate the parts, and render the looks of patients consumptive and pining. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. To mortify; to harass with corporal hardships.

No such sad cares, as wont to macerate
And rend the greedie minds of covetous men,
Do ever creep into the shepherd's den.

Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

Sorrow which contracts the heart, macerates the soul, subverts the good estate of the body, hindering all the occupations of it, causing melancholy, and many times death itself.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 25.

Covetous men are all fools: for what greater folly can there be, or madness, than for such a man to macerate himself when he need not?

Burton, Anat. of Mel.

Out of an excess of zeal they practise mortifications; they macerate their bodies, and impair their health. Fiddes.

3. To steep almost to solution.

A vessel—wherein the meat must be macerated for a certain season. Smith on Old Age, p. 84.

In lotions in women's cases, he orders two portions of hellebore, macerated in two coyle of water. Arbutnot.

MAC'ERATION.† n. s. [maceration, French; from macerate.]

1. The act of wasting, or making lean.

Cockeram.

2. Mortification; corporal hardship.

The faith itself, being clear and serene from all clouds of ceremonies, yet retaineth the use of fastings, abstinencies, and other macerations and humiliations of the body, as things real and not figurative. Bacon, Advan. of Learning, B. 2.

What maceration is there here, with fears and jealousies? Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 26.

Envy is not pleasure, but the maceration of the body. Feltham, Res. ii. 56.

Long fastings, and macerations of the flesh.

Howell, Lett. iv. 36.

3. Maceration is an infusion either with or without heat, wherein the ingredients are intended to be almost wholly dissolved.

Quincy.

He took only a maceration of rhubarb, infused into a draught of white wine and beer.

Rauley, Life of Lord Bacon, (1657.)

They beat the whole plant in a mortar, roots, stalks, flowers, leaves and all, till it be reduced to a confused mass. Then after maceration, fermentation, separation, and other workings of art, there is extracted a kind of ashes or salt.

Gregory, Notes on Script. (ed. 1684), p. 126.

The saliva serves for a maceration and dissolution of the meat into a chyle. Ray on Creation.

MACE-REED. n. s. [typha.] An herb.

MACHIAVEL'IAN.* n. s. [from Nicholas

Machiavel, a Florentine, of the fifteenth century; who inculcated the most detestable notions, and encouraged the "art of reigning tyrannically." He was an enemy to religion, as well as to sound politics; for he taught, that the most solemn obligations might be broken, and that no scruples should be entertained of any action that might compass a design.] A follower of the opinions of Machiavel. Bullockar.

Subtle Machiavelians, and those which are frequently called the prudent.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1694), p. 46.

As our Saviour said, to forewarn all revolvers, "Remember Lot's wife;" so say I, to forewarn all arch-politicians, and cunning Machiavelians of this world, Remember poor Naboth's vineyard. Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639), p. 626.

MACHIAVEL'IAN.* adj. Denoting the notions of Machiavel; crafty; subtle; roguish.

My brain
Italianates my barren faculties
To Machiavelian blackness.

The Valiant Welshman, (1615.)

A most barbarous fellow, using Machiavelian atheism.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633), p. 208.

MAC'HIAVELISM.* n. s. [machiauelisme, French; from Machiavel.] The notions of Machiavel; cunning roguery. See MACHIAVELIAN.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

MAC'HINAL. adj. [from machina, Latin.] Relating to machines. Dict.

To MAC'HINATE.† v. n. [machinor, Lat. machiner, Fr.] To plan; to contrive; to form schemes; to plot; to conspire against. Cotgrave.

How long will you machinate!

Persecute with causeless hate! Sandys, Ps. p. 96.

MACHINA'TION. n. s. [machinatio, Lat. machination, French; from machinate.] Artifice; contrivance; malicious scheme.

If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
O from their machinations free,
That would my guiltless soul betray;
From those who in my wrongs agree,
And for my life their engines lay.

Sandys, Paraph. Ps.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
And devilish machinations come to nought.

Milton, P. R.

How were they zealous in respect to their temporal governors? Not by open rebellion, not by private machinations; but in blessing and submitting to their emperors, and obeying them in all things but their idolatry. Sprat.

MAC'HINATOR.* n. s. [machinator, Lat. machinator, Fr.] One who plots or forms schemes.

This is the design and the mischievous issue, which to cover and propagate, the cunning machinator pretends the exaltation of the freeness of that grace which he designs to dishonour and defeat. Glanville, Serm. x. p. 380.

MACHINE.† n. s. [machina, Latin; machine, French. This word is pronounced masheen. Dr. Johnson. — But formerly it had the Latin accent, viz. on the first syllable. See the example from Ben Jonson. Dr. Johnson's earliest example is junior by nearly half a century to this.]

1. Any complicated work in which one part contributes to the motion of another.

But who hath them interpreted, and brought Lucan's whole frame into us, and so wrought, As not the smallest joint or gentler word In the great mass or machine there is stir'd?

B. Jonson, Verses pref. to May's Lucan, (1627.)
We are led to conceive this great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity, as to conceive a watch to have been once in its first materials. Burnet.

In a watch's fine machine,
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary power
From that which simply points the hour Prior.

2. An engine.

In the hollow side
Selected numbers of their soldiers hide;
With inward arms the dire machine they load,
And iron bowels stuff the dark abode. Dryden.

3. Supernatural agency in poems.

The changing of the Trojan fleet into water-nymphs is the most violent machine in the whole Æneid, and has given offence to several critics.

Addison, Spect.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.

Pope.

4. One name for a stage coach.

MACHIN'ERY.† n. s. [from machine.]

1. Machinery; complicated workmanship; self-moved engines.

The Arabians were also famous for other machineries of glass. T. Warton.

2. The machinery signifies that part which the deities, angels, or demons, act in a poem.

Dryden—gives an account of his design of writing an epic poem on the actions either of Arthur or the Black Prince, and of the machinery he intended to have used on that occasion.

Dr. J. Warton.

MACHIN'ING.* adj. [from machine.] Denoting the machinery of a poem.

Of Venus and Juno, Jupiter and Mercury, I say nothing; for they were all machining poetry.

Dryden on Epic Poet.

MAC'HINIST.† n. s. [machiniste, French; from machina, Latin.] A constructor of engines or machines.

Has the insufficiency of machinists hitherto disgraced the imagery of the poet?

Stevens on Shakespeare's Macbeth.

MAC'ILENCY. n. s. [from macilent.] Leanness. Dict.

MAC'ILENT. adj. [macilentus, Latin.] Lean.

MACK.* n. s. [A corruption of make, common in the north of England. Westmoreland and Craven Dialects, &c.] A sort; a kind; a fashion.

MAC'KEREL.† n. s. [mackerel, Dutch; maquereau, French.]

1. A sea-fish.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whitening and mackerel.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Law ordered that the Sunday should have rest; And that no nymph her noisy food should sell, Except it were new milk or mackerel.

King, Cookery.

Sooner shall cats disport in water clear,
And speckled mackerels graze the meadows fair,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love.

Gay, Pastorals.

2. A pander; a pimp. [maquerel, old Fr. Minsheu.] Obsolete.

MACKEREL Gale seems to be, in Dryden's cant, a strong breeze; such, I suppose, as is desired to bring mackerel fresh to market.

They set up every sail;
The wind was fair, but blew a mackerel gale.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

MACKEREL Sky.* A sky streaked or marked like a mackerel.

Let "water'd" signify a sky that has many high, thin, and small clouds, looking almost like water'd tabby, called in some places a mackerel sky. Hooke, in Sprat's Hist. R. Soc. p. 177.

MACRO'LOGY.* n. s. [μακρός, long, and λόγος, discourse, Gr.] Long and tedious talk without matter. Bullockar, edit. 1656. It is, in rhetoric, a redundant or too copious style.

MAC'ROCOSM.† n. s. [macrocosme, French; μακρός, and κόσμος.] The whole world, or visible system, in opposition to the microcosm, or world of man.

Throughout all this vast macrocosm.

Watson, Quodlibets, (1602), p. 274.

There is a very rigid and strict analogy and conformity between the macrocosm and the microcosm, the world and man.

Spenser on Prodigies, p. 70.

MACT'ATION.† n. s. [mactatus, Latin.] The act of killing for sacrifice.

Here they call Cain's offering, which is described and allowed to be of the fruits of the ground only, Swallow, a sacrifice, or mactation.

Shuckford on the Creation, Pref. p. ciii.

MACULA. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A spot.

And lastly, the body of the sun may contract some spots or macule greater than usual, and by that means be darkened.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. [In physick.] Any spots upon the skin, whether those in fevers or scorbutick habits.

To MACULATE.† v. a. [maculo, Latin.] To stain; to spot.

They would not maculate the honour of their people with such a reproche.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 80. b.

MACULATE.* adj. [from the verb; maculatus, Lat.] Spotted; stained.

Arm. My love is most immaculate white and red.

Moth. Most maculate thoughts, master, are masked under such colours.

Shakespeare, Lov. Lab. Lost.

MACULA'TION.† n. s. [maculation, old French.] Stain; spot; taint.

I will throw my glove to death himself, That there's no maculation in thy heart.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

MACULE. n. s. [macula, Latin.] A spot; a stain.

MAD.† adj. [zemaad, Saxon; matto, Ital. Dr. Johnson.—“It is merely matte, mæb, (d for t), the past tense and past participle of the Sax. metan, somniare, to mete, to dream. The verb mete was formerly in common use for dream.

‘I fell eftsones a slepe, and sodainly me mette.’ Vis. of P. Pl. ‘As he satte and woke, his spiritte mete that he her saugh.’ Chaucer, Tr. and Cress.—The Ital. matto is the same Sax. participle, with the Italian terminating vowel.

The decided opinion of Menage and Junius, that matto is derived from the Greek ματαιος, is overruled in my mind, by the consideration of the time when the word matto was first introduced into the Italian language: for the Greek derivatives, in that language, proceed to it through the Latin. And in the Latin, there is nothing which resembles matto.”

Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 341.—Mr. Tooke has here overlooked our word from the Goth. mod, anger; whence our mood for rage, or heat of mind; moody, passionate, angry; mobian, Saxon, to be angry. Thus also Mr. Haslam, in his Observations on Madness, refers to the Gothick word, without noticing the preceding sophistry of Mr. Tooke; and adds, “It is true that we have now converted the o into a, and write the word mad; but mod was anciently employed:

There is so great a resemblance between anger and violent madness, that there is nothing which could more probably have led to the adoption of the term.” Observ. &c. 1809, p. 3. The word modnesse, however, which Mr. Haslam has cited, is not the genuine reading of the old poet. The best manuscripts, and correct editions, of Chaucer, read woodness or woodness, which is the ancient term for madness; and modnesse is most undoubtedly an oversight or error.]

1. Disordered in the mind; broken in the understanding; distracted; delirious without a fever.

Alack, sir, he is mad.
—’Tis the time’s plague when madmen lead the blind. Shakespeare.

This musick mads me, let it sound no more; For though it have help’d madmen to their wits, In me, it seems, it will make wisemen mad. Shakespeare.

Cupid, of thee the poets sung,
Thy mother from the sea was sprung;
But they were mad to make thee young. Denham.

We must bind our passions in chains, lest like mad-folks they break their locks and bolts, and do all the mischief they can. Bp. Taylor, Worthly Communicant.

A bear, enrag’d at the stinging of a bee, ran like mad upon the bee-garden, and over-turn’d all the hives. L’Estrange.

Madmen ought not to be mad;
But who can help his frenzy?
Dryden, Span. Friar.

But some strange graces and odd flights she had,
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

2. Expressing disorder of mind.
His gestures fierce
He mark’d, and mad demeanour when alone. Milton, P. L.

3. Over-run with any violent or unreasonable desire; with on, after, of, perhaps better for, before the object of desire.
It is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols. Jer. l. 38.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry, or rather the judgement that is fallen upon dramatic writing. Dryden, Pref. to Cleomenes.

The people are not so very mad of acorns, but that they could be content to eat the bread of civil persons. Rymer.

4. Enraged; furious.
They that are mad upon me are sworn together against me. Ps. cii. 8.

Holy writ represents St. Paul as making havoc of the church, and persecuting that way unto the death, and being exceedingly mad against them. Decay of Chr. Piety.

To MAD. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make mad; to make furious; to enrage.
O villain! cried out Zelmane, *madd*ed with finding an unlooked-for rival. Sidney.

This will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. Shakespeare, Cym.

This mads me, that perhaps ignoble hands
Have overlaid him, for they could not conquer. Dryden.

To MAD.† v. n.

1. To be mad; to be furious.
Many of them seiden, he hath a deivel, and mad-deth. Wicliffe, St. John, x.

The madding wheels
Of brazen chariots rag’d: dire was the noise
Of conflicts! Milton, P. L.

She, mixing with a throng
Of madding matrons, bears the bride along. Dryden.

2. To be wild.

Here grows melampode every where,
And terribith good for goates;
The one my madding kids to smere,
The next to heale their throates. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

MAD.† n. s. [matha, Goth. maða, Saxon, MADE, maade, mad, Dutch.] An earth-worm. Essex. Ray, and Grose.

MA'DAM.† n. s. [ma dame, French, my dame.] The term of compliment used in address to ladies of every degree. It was anciently spoken as in French, with the accent upon the last syllable. Dr. Johnson.—It was anciently also used for mistress, or lady, without being the term of compliment. And vulgarly it is now so used: as, she is a proud madam.
She became a glorious madame of the earth. Bale, Yet a Course, (1543.) fol. 38. b.

They have alwaies for lucre’s sake gloriously garnished their holy mother, the madame of mischief. Bale on the Revel. P. i. sign. A. vi. b.

Certes, madame, ye have great cause of plaint. Spenser, F. Q.

Madam, once more you look and move a queen! Philips, Distrest Mother.

MA'DBRAIN. adj. [mad and brain.] MA'DBRAINED. } Disordered in the mind; hotheaded.

I gave my hand oppos’d against my heart,
Unto a madbrin Rudesby, full of spleen. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

He let fall his book,
And as he stoop’d again to take it up,
This madbrin’d bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

MA'DCAP. n. s. [mad and cap; either taking the cap for the head, or alluding to the caps put upon distracted persons by way of distinction.] A madman; a wild hotbrained fellow.

That last is Biron, the merry madcap lord;
Not a word with him but a jest. Shakespeare.

The nimble-footed madcap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daft the world aside,
And bid it pass. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

To MA'DDEN. v. n. [from mad.] To become mad; to act as mad.

The dog-star rages, nay ’tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out;
Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land. Pope.

To MA'DDEN. v. a. To make mad.
Such mad’ning draughts of beauty,
As for a while overwhelm’d his raptur’d thought. Thomson.

MA'DDER. n. s. [mattepe, Sax.] A plant.

The flower of the madder consists of one single leaf, which is cut into four or five segments, and expanded at the top; the flower-cup afterwards becomes a fruit, composed of two juicy berries closely joined together, containing seed for the most part, hollowed like a navel; the leaves are rough, and surround the stalks in whorles. Miller.

Madder is cultivated in vast quantities in Holland; what the Dutch send over for medicinal use is the root, which is only dried; but the greatest quantity is used by the dyers, who have it sent in coarse powder. Hill.

To MA'DDLE.* v. n. To forget; to wander; to be in a kind of confusion. Common in Cumberland, and other parts of the north. See Craven Dial. and Brockett's N. C. Words.

4 s

MADE, participle preterite of make.

Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest. St. John, ix. 3.

MADEFACTION. n. s. [madefacio, Latin.]

The act of making wet.

To all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon.

TO MADEFY.† v. a. [madefio, Latin; madefier, Fr. Cotgrave.] To moisten; to make wet. Cockeram.

MADEIRA Wine.* A rich wine made at the island of Madeira.

A cup of Madeira, and a cold capon's leg.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

MADEMOISELLE.* n. s. [French; ma damoiselle, an ancient term of compliment to young ladies.] A miss; a young girl.

Courtiers and court ladies with their grooms and mademoiselles. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

I cannot fancy that miss in a boarding-school is more an economist than mademoiselle in a nunnery. Goldsmith, Ess. 15.

MADGEHO'WLET.† n. s. [machette, Fr. Cotgrave.] An owl. See HOWLET.

MADHEADED.* adj. [mad and head.] Hot-headed; full of fancies.

Out, you madheaded ape!

A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen, As you are loss'd with. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

MADHOUSE. n. s. [mad and house.] A house where madmen are cured or confined.

A fellow in a madhouse being asked how he came there? Why, says he, the mad folks abroad are too many for us, and so they have mastered all the sober people, and cooped them up here. L'Estrange.

MAD'DLY.† adv. [from mad.]

1. Without understanding; furiously. He wav'd a torch aloft, and madly vain, Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.

2. Wildly; in disorder. Her matted tresses madly spread, To every sod which wraps the dead She turns her joyless eyes. Collins, Ode 5.

MADMAN. n. s. [mad and man.] A man deprived of his understanding.

They shall be like madmen, sparing none, but still sporting. 2 Esdr. xvi. 71.

He that eagerly pursues any thing, is no better than a madman. L'Estrange.

He who ties a madman's hands, or takes away his sword, loves his person while he disarms his frenzy. South.

MADNESS. n. s. [from mad.]

1. Distraction; loss of understanding; perturbation of the faculties.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again: he so buffets himself on the forehead, that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameless and civility to this distemper. Shakespeare, Mer. Wives of Windsor.

There are degrees of madness as of folly, the disorderly jumbling ideas together, in some more, some less. Locke.

2. Fury; wildness of passion; rage.

The power of God sets bounds to the raging of the sea, and restrains the madness of the people. King Charles.

He rav'd with all the madness of despair, He roar'd, he beat his breast, and tore his hair. Dryden.

MADO'NA.* } n. s. [Italian; i. e. ma
MADO'NNA.* } ma donna, my lady.]

1. A name given to pictures of the Virgin Mary.

The Italian painters are noted for drawing the Madonnas by their own wives or mistresses. Rymer, View of Tragedy, p. 157.

2. Term of compliment, like madam. Not in use.

Olivia. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clown. Two faults, madness, that drink and good counsel will amend. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

MADRIER.† n. s. [madrier, Fr. a plank, or piece of timber, whose grain is full of crooked and speckled streaks. Cotgrave. From materiarium, Lat.] "L'isle Madera, a été dite demesme de materia, parcequ'elle est fertile en bois." Menage.]

1. Madrier, in war, is a thick plank armed with iron plates, having a cavity sufficient to receive the mouth of the petard when charged, with which it is applied against a gate, or other thing intended to be broken down. Bailey.

2. A long plank of broad wood used for supporting the earth in mining, carrying on saps, and the like. Chambers.

MADRIGAL.† n. s. [madrigal, Spanish and French, from mandra, Latin; whence it was written anciently mandriale, Italian. Dr. Johnson.—Others refer the word to the Italian madriale, i. e. alla madre, hymns to the virgin mother. The Italians also use madrigali, which Florio translates, "a kind of short songs or ditties in Italy." A pastoral song; any light airy short song.

A madrigal is a little amorous piece, which contains a certain number of unequal verses, not tied to the scrupulous regularity of a sonnet, or subtlety of an epigram: it consists of one single rank of verses, and in that differs from a canzone, which consists of several strophes, which return in the same order and number. Bailey.

Waters, by whose falls

Birds sing melodious madrigals. Shakespeare.

Thyrsis, whose artful strains have oft delay'd The huddling brook to hear his madrigal. Milton, Comus.

Their tongue is light and trifling in comparison of the English; more proper for sonnets, madrigals, and elegies, than heroic poetry. Dryden.

MADWORT. n. s. [mad and wort.] An herb.

MERE. adv. It is derived from the Saxon mep, famous, great, noted: so ælmere is all famous; æthelmere, famous for nobility. Gibson's Camden.

MAESTO'SO.* [Ital.] A musical term, directing the part to be played with grandeur, and consequently slow, but yet with strength and firmness.

TO MAFFLE.† v. n. [maffelen, Teut. balbutire. Kilian. This word was in use nearly two centuries before the time of Ainsworth, whom alone Dr. Johnson cites as authority for it. See also To FAFFLE.] To stammer. The word is still used in the north of England.

Huloet, and Cockeram. [He] so stammered, or maffled in his talke, that he was not able to bring forth a readable word. Barret, Tr. of Sueton. in V. Stammer, dlv. (1580.)

MAFFLER. n. s. [from the verb.] A stammerer. Ainsworth.

MAGAZINE.† n. s. [magazin, French; magazzino, Italian; from the Arabick machsan, a treasure.]

1. A storehouse; commonly an arsenal or armoury, or repository of provisions.

If it should appear fit to bestow shipping in those harbours, it shall be very useful that there be a magazine of all necessary provisions and ammunitions. Raleigh, Essays.

Plain heroic magnitude of mind; Their armories and magazines contemns

Milton, S. A.

Some o'er the publick magazines preside, And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden, Virg.

Useful arms in magazines we place, All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace. Pope.

His head was so well stored a magazine, that nothing could be proposed which he was not master of. Locke.

2. Of late [that is, in the year 1737,] this word, Dr. Johnson says, has signified a miscellaneous pamphlet, from a periodical miscellany called The Gentleman's Magazine, and published under the name of Sylvanus Urban, by Edward Cave. This miscellany, which gave rise to the London, the Lady's, and various other Magazines, still continues, as Dr. Johnson said of it in his Life of Cave, to enjoy the favour of the world, and is one of the most successful and lucrative pamphlets which literary history has upon record.

We essayists, who are allowed but one subject at a time, are by no means so fortunate as the writers of magazines, who write upon several. Goldsmith, Ess. 9.

MAGAZ'NER.* n. s. [from magazine.] One who writes an article for a magazine. A bad word.

If a magaziner be dull upon the Spanish war, he soon has us up again with the Ghost in Cock-Lane: if the reader begins to doze upon that, he is quickly roused by an Eastern tale. Goldsmith, Ess. 9.

MAGE.† n. s. [magus, Latin; mage, Fr.] A magician.

The hardy Mayd [with love to friend] First entering the dreadful mage there fownd Deep busied 'bout worke of wondrous end. Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 14.

MAGGOT. n. s. [magrod, Welsh; milpepa, Latin; maða, Sax.]

1. A small grub, which turns into a fly. Out of the sides and back of the common caterpillar we have seen creep out small maggots. Ray on Creation.

From the sore although the insect flies, It leaves a brood of maggots in disguise. Garth.

2. Whimsy; caprice; odd fancy. A low word.

Taftata phrases, silken terms precise, Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation, Figures pedantic, these summer flies, Have blown me full of maggot ostentation; I do forswear them.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest
In russet yeas, and honest kersy noes. Shakspeare.
To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our breth'ren though by other venters,
Unite them and their different maggots,
As long and short sticks are in faggots. Huilibras.
She pricked his maggot, and touched him on the tender point; then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbutnot.

MA'GGOTTINESS. n. s. [from maggotty.]
The state of abounding with maggots.

MA'GGOTTY. adj. [from maggot.]

1. Full of maggots.

2. Capricious; whimsical. A low word.

To pretend to work out a neat scheme of thoughts with a maggotty unsettled head, is as ridiculous as to think to write strait in a jumbling coach. Norris.

MA'GGOTTYHEADED.  adj.* [from maggotty and head.] Having a head full of fancies.

He [Aubrey] was a shiftless person, roving and maggottheaded, and sometimes little better than crased. Life of A. Wood, p. 209.

MA'GI.  n. s. pl.* [Latin.] Wise men of the East.

Not only the philosophers among the Greeks,
but even the magi in the extremest east.

Eotherby, Atheism. p. 36.
The inspired magi from the orient came,
Prefer'd my star before their Mithra's flame,
And at my infant feet devoutly fell.

Sandys, Christ's Passion, p. 2.
MA'GIAN.  adj.* [from magi.] Denoting
the magi of the East.

A future resurrection was the belief of the magian sect so famous all over the east.

Peters on Job, (2d ed. 1757,) p. 406.
Cyrus was a Persian, had been brought up in the religion of his country, and was probably addicted to the magian superstition of two independent Beings. Bp. Watson, Apol. for the Bible, p. 160.

MA'GICAL. † adj. [from magicus, Latin; magique,
French.]

1. Acting, or performing by secret and invisible powers, either of nature, or the agency of spirits.

I'll humbly signify what, in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected.

Shakspeare.
They beheld unveiled the magical shield of your Ariosto, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness; they can no longer hold up their arms. Dryden.

By the use of a looking-glass, and certain attire made of cambrick, upon her head, she attained to an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes. Tatler.

2. Applied to persons using enchantment.
Not common.

Some of the natives are doubtless magical; and this reason I give for it: Another gentleman and myself one evening sitting under a tree to avoid a storm, (for at that time it thundered and rained excessively,) a negro stood by us trembling, whom we could see now and then lift up his hands and eyes, muttering his black art, as we apprehended, to some hobgoblin; but, when we least suspected,
skipped out, and as in a lymphatic rapture unsheathed a long skean or knife, which he brandished about his head seven or eight times, and after mutering as many spells put it up again; then kissed the earth three times: which done, he rose; and upon a sudden the skie cleared, and no more noise afrighted us. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 27.

MA'GICALLY. adv. [from magical.] According to the rites of magic; by enchantment.

In the time of Valens, divers curious men, by the falling of a ring magically prepared, judged that one Theodorus should succeed in the empire.
Canden.

MAG'ICIAN. † n. s. [from magicien, Fr. Cotgrave; and so Chaucer writes the word; magicus, Latin.] One skilled in magic;
an enchanter; a necromancer.

What black magician conjures up this fiend
To stop devoted charitable deeds?

Shakspeare, Rich. III.
An old magician, that did keep
The Hesperian fruit, and made the dragon sleep;
Her potent charms do troubled souls relieve,
And, where she lists, makes calmest souls to grieve.
Waller.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as, whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician or a magician. Locke.

MA'GICK. † n. s. [from magia, Latin; magie, French; which language has the adjective magique, as in the old dictionary of Cotgrave.]

1. The art of putting in action the power of spirits: it was supposed that both good and bad spirits were subject to magic; yet magic was in general held unlawful; sorcery; enchantment.

She once being loof,
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,
Claps on his sea wing. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.
What charm, what magic, can over-rule the force of all these motives? Rogers.

2. The secret operations of natural powers.
The writers of natural magic attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse immaterial virtue into the part severed. Bacon.

MA'GICK. † adj. [from magicus, Latin; magique,
French.]

1. Acting or doing by powers superiour to the known power of nature; enchanted;
necromantick.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that distill'd by magic slights
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Like castles built by magic art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear.
Granville.

2. Done or produced by magic.

And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake
Till all thy magic structures rear'd so high,
Were shatter'd into heaps. Milton, Comus.

MAGISTERIAL. † adj. [from magisterial, old French; from magister, Latin.]

1. Such as suits a master.

Such a government is paternal, not magisterial.
King Charles.
He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him; and uses a magisterial authority while he instructs him. Dryden.

2. Lofty; arrogant; proud; insolent;
despotic.

We are not magisterial in opinions, nor, dictator-like, obtrude our notions on any man.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words and magisterial looks, for current payment. L'Estrange.

Those men are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South.

3. Chemically prepared, after the manner of a magistrery.

Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magisterial salt, to good purpose in some fevers: the tincture is no more than a solution of the magisterial salt.

Grew, Museum.
MAGISTERIALLY. adv. [from magisterial.]
Arrogantly; with an air of authority.

A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magisterially. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.
Over their pots and pipes, they claim and engross all wholly to themselves, magisterially ensuring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all pity, and new modelling the world. South.

MAGISTERIALNESS. † n. s. [from magisterial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.

Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a ma-gisterialness in matters of opinion and speculation, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact:
in the one we impose upon men's understandings,
in the other on their faith.

Gov. of the Tongue, p. 188.

He chargeth him with too much precipitancy and magisterialness in judging.

Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull, p. 225.

MA'GISTERY. n. s. [from magisterium, Latin.]

Magistry is a term made use of by chymists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c. and sometimes resins and resinous substances; as those of jalap, scamony, &c.
but the most genuine acceptation is to express that preparation of any body wherein the whole, or most part is, by the addition of somewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.

Paracelsus extracted the magistry of wine, exposing it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be uncon-gealed in the centre. Brown.

The magistry of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.

MA'GISTRACY. n. s. [from magistratus, Latin.]

Office or dignity of a magistrate.

You share the world, her magistracies, priest-hoods,
Wealth, and felicity, amongst you, friends.

B. Jonson.
He had no other intention but to dissuade men from magistracy, or undertaking the public offices of state. Broune.

Some have disputed even against magistracy itself. Atterbury.

Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistracy and good government. Richardson, Clarissa.

MA'GISTRAL.  adj.* [from magistral, French; magistralis, low Latin.]

1. Authoritative; suiting a magistrate or master. magisterial. Cotgrave.

The whole race or corporation of sheep have sent four ambassadors to this court: — whereupon a great and goodly magistral ram of Lincolnshire, in an articulate bleating voice, uttered these words.

Transl. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 99.

2. Masterly; artificial; skillful; cunning.
This sense is also given by Cotgrave.

Opiates, juleps, apozems, Magistral syrups. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

MA'GISTRAL.  n. s.* A sovereign medicine:
an artificial preparation. See the second sense of MAGISTRAL. Not in use.

I find a vast chaos of medicines, a confusion of receipts and magistrals, amongst writers, appropriated to this disease. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 891.

A cure and magistral against melancholy beyond the syrup. Whilcock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 106.
MAGISTRALITY.* n. s. [from magistral.]
 Despotick authority in opinions.

Those who seek truths, and not magistrality.

Bacon on Learning.

MAGISTRALLY.† adv. [from magistral.]
 Despotically; authoritatively; magistrally.

What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a license to controul so magistrally.

Bp. Bramhall, against Hobbes.

MAGISTRATE.† n. s. [magistrat, old French; magistratus, Latin.] A man publicly invested with authority; a governor; an executor of the laws.

They chose their magistrate!

And such a one is he, who puts his shall, His popular shall, against a graver bench Than ever frown'd in Greece. Shakespeare, Coriol.

I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

MAGISTRATICK.* adj. [from magistrate.]
 Having the authority of a magistrate.

Both civil and religious acts study to conciliate to themselves a majesty, and reverence, by habits and ornaments; by comely robes and costly vests; which, though they are not of the internal and essential glory which is in magistratick or ecclesiastick power and order, (which are both divine), yet are so far not only convenient, but almost necessary, as they help to keep both laws and religion from contempt, and from that vulgar insolence to which seditious and atheistical humours are subject.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 169.

MAGNA CHARTA.* n. s. [Latin.]
 The great charter of liberties granted to the people of England in the ninth year of Henry the Third, and confirmed by Edward the First.

The walls, instead of being adorned with pictures and maps, were hung with many acts of parliament written in golden letters. At the upper end of the hall was the Magna Charta, with the Act of Uniformity on the right hand, and the Act of Toleration on the left. Addison, Spect. No. 3.

MAGNALITY. n. s. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; something above the common rate. Not used.

Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths. Brown.

MAGNANIMITY. n. s. [magnanimité, Fr.; magnanimitas, Latin.] Greatness of mind; bravery; elevation of soul.

With deadly hue, and armed corse did lie,
 In whose dead face he read great magnanimity.

Spenser, F. Q.

Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weighed, from whose magnanimity, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match. Hooker.

They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd Their foe to misery beneath their fears,
 The rest was magnanimity to remit,
 If some convenient ransom were propos'd.

Milton, S. A.

Exploding many things under the name of trifles, is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.

MAGNANIMOUS. adj. [magnanimus, Latin.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment; brave.

To give a kingdom hath been thought Greater and nobler done, and to lay down Far more magnanimous, than to assume.

Milton, P. R.

In strength
 All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
 With youthful courage, and magnanimous thoughts
 Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits.

Milton, S. A.

Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work.

Grew, Cosmol.

MAGNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.

A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, skilfully, and magnanimously, all the offices of peace and war.

Milton on Education.

MAGNES.* See MAGNET.

MAGNESIA.* n. s. [magnesie, French.] A white alkaline earth, used in medicine, gently purgative.

MAGNET.† n. s. [magnes, Lat.] Spenser calls it the magnes-stone; and it is so given in Sherwood's dictionary, 1632. The Latin magnes is thought to be from the city of Magnesia in Lydia, where the stone is said to have been first found. Magnet is the Su. Goth. as well as the English word.] The loadstone; the stone that attracts iron.

Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliss,
 The larger loadstone that, the nearer this. Dryden.

It may be reasonable to ask, Whether obeying the magnet be essential to iron? Locke.

MAGNETICAL. } adj. [from magnet.]
MAGNETICK. }

1. Relating to the magnet.

Review this whole magnetick scheme.

Blackmore.

Water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold is so rare as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetick effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton, Opticks.

2. Having powers correspondent to those of the magnet.

The magnet acts upon iron through all dense bodies not magnetick, nor red hot, without any diminution of its virtue; as through gold, silver, lead, glass, water. Newton, Opticks.

3. Attractive: having the power to draw things distant.

The moon is magnetical of heat, as the sun is of cold and moisture. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

She should all parts to reunion bow;
 She, that had all magnetick force alone,
 To draw and fasten hundred parts in one. Donne.

They, as they move tow'rd's his all-cheering lamp,
 Turn swift their various motions, or are turn'd
 By his magnetick beam. Milton, P. L.

4. Magnetick is once used by Milton for magnet.

Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
 At will the manliest, resoluteest breast,
 As the magnetick hardest iron draws. Milt. P. R.

MAGNETICALLY.* adv. [from magnetical.]
 By the power of attraction.

Many green wounds — magnetically cured.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 94.

MAGNETICALNESS.* n. s. [from magnetick.] Magnetickness. adj. Quality of being magnetick, or attractive.

The magnetickness of their external success.
Waterhouse, Com. on Fortescu, (1663), p. 187.

It related not to the instances of the magnetickness of lightning. Hist. of the Royal Soc. iv. 253.

MAGNETISM.† n. s. [from magnet; magnetisme, modern French.]

1. The tendency of the iron towards the magnet, and the power of the magnet to produce that tendency. Reid.

Very likely that gravity proceeds from a kind of magnetism, and attractive virtue in the earth.

Glanville, Pre-exist. p. 130.

Let them tell us then what is the chain, the cement, the magnetism, what they will call it, the invisible tie of that union, whereby matter and an incorporeal mind, things that have no similitude nor alliance to each other, can so sympathize by a mutual league of motion and sensation! No, they will not pretend to that. Bentley, Serm. ix.

Many other magnetisms, and the like attractions through all the creatures of nature.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Power of attraction.
 By the magnetism of interest our affections are irresistibly attracted. Glanville, Scepis.

MAGNIFIABLE. adj. [from magnify.]
 Worthy to be extolled or praised. Unusual.

Number, though wonderful in itself, and sufficiently magnifiable from its demonstrable affection, hath yet received adjections from the multiplying conceits of men. Brown.

MAGNIFICENT.† adj. [magnificus, Latin.]
MAGNIFICK. } Illustrious; grand; great; noble. Proper, but little used.

They hoped that through liberality of the king, or of the nobles, a more magnificent building, able to receive the multitude of that university, should have been erected.

Fulke, Answ. to Fovrine, (1580), p. 42.

The house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and glory throughout all countries. 1 Chron. xxii. 5.

That magnificick feast which Ahasuerus made for an hundred and eighty days to the nobles and princes of his empire. Sir T. Herbert, Trau. p. 300.

In this magnificent state his progress he Through his usurp'd world did pretend to make.

Beaumont, Psyche, i. 168.

Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, pow'rs!

If these magnificent titles yet remain,
 Not merely titular. Milton, P. L.

O parent! these are thy magnificent deeds;
 Thy trophies! Milton, P. L.

To MAGNIFICATE. v. a. [magnifico, Lat.]
 To praise extremely; to commend highly. Not in use.

I cannot with swoll lines magnificate
 Mine own poor worth.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. Pr. B. 2. (1599.)

[He] that with oath
Magnificates his merit. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

MAGNIFICENCE. n. s. [magnificentia, Latin.] Grandeur of appearance; splendour.

This desert soil

Wants not her hidden lustre, gems, and gold,
 Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence. Milton, P. L.

Not Babylon,
 Nor great Alcaïro, such magnificence
 Equall'd in all her glories to enslave
 Belus or Serapis, their gods; or 'seat
 Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
 In wealth and luxury. Milton, P. L.

One may observe more splendour and magnificence in particular persons' houses in Genoa, than in those that belong to the publick.

Addison on Italy.

MAGNIFICENT. adj. [magnificus, Lat.]

1. Grand in appearance; splendid: pompous.

Man he made, and for him built Magnificent this world. Milton, P. L.
It is suitable to the magnificent harmony of the universe, that the species of creatures should, by gentle degrees, ascend upward from us toward his perfection, as we see they gradually descend from us downwards. Locke.

Immortal glories in my mind revive,
When Rome's exalted beauties I descry, Magnificent in piles of ruin lie. Addison.

2. Fond of splendour; setting greatness to shew.

If he were magnificent, he spent with an aspiring intent: if he spared, he heaped with an aspiring intent. Sidney.

MAGNIFICENTLY. adv. [from magnificent.] Pompously; splendidly.

Beauty a monarch is,
Which kindly power magnificently proves,
By crowds of slaves and peopled empire's loves. Dryden.

We can never conceive too highly of God; so neither too magnificently of nature, his handy-work. Grew, Cosmol.

MAGNIFICO.† n. s. [Italian.] A grandee of Venice.

The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port, have all proceeded with him. Shakespeare.
All but the old magnifico Volpone. B. Jonson, Fox.

If the Venetians have their senate and magnificoes, they [the bees] have the same.
Parthenia Sacra, (1633), p. 71.

MA'GNIFIER.† n. s. [from magnify.]

1. One that encreases, or enlarges.
A merry heart is one of the three Salernitan doctors, Dr. Merriman, Dr. Diet, and Dr. Quiet, which cures all diseases; [and] is a great magnifier of honest misdeeds. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 297.

2. One that praises; an encomiast; an extoller.
Which erroneous doctrine many of our modern divines have dictated privately to their magnifiers of manuscripts. Stafford, Niobe, P. ii. (1611), p. 109.

The primitive magnifiers of this star were the Egyptians, who notwithstanding chiefly regarded it in relation to their river Nilus. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. A glass that encreases the bulk of any object.

The imagination is a greater magnifier than a microscopic glass. Shenstone.

TO MAGNIFY.† v. a [magnifico, Latin; magnifier, French.]

1. To praise greatly; to extol highly.
My soul doth magnify the Lord. St. Luke, i. 46.
2. To make great; to exaggerate; to amplify.

The ambassadour, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.

Why art thou proud, O dust and vanity, vile earth, stink lapped up in silk, magnified dung, gilded rottenness! Dr. White, Sermon. (1615), p. 67.

3. To exalt; to elevate; to raise in estimation.

The Lord his God was with him, and magnified him exceedingly. 2 Chron. i. 1.

Greater now in thy return,
Than from the giant-angels: thee that day
Thy thunders magnified, but to create
Is greater than created to destroy. Milton, P. L.

4. To raise in pride or pretension.

He shall exalt and magnify himself above every god. Dan. xi. 36.

If ye will magnify yourselves against me, know now that God hath overthrown me. Job, xix. 5.
He shall magnify himself in his heart. Dan. viii. 25.

5. To encrease the bulk of any object to the eye.

They magnifyen hemmes, [in the present version, enlarge the borders of their garments.] Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxiii. 5.

How these red globules would appear, if glasses could be found that could magnify them a thousand times more, is uncertain. Locke.

By true reflection I would see my face;
Why brings the fool a magnifying glass? Granville.

The greatest magnifying glasses in the world are a man's eyes, when they look upon his own person. Pope.

As things seem large which we through mists descry, Dulness is ever apt to magnify. Pope, Ess. on Criticism.

6. A cant word for to have effect.

My governess assured my father I had wanted for nothing; that I was almost eaten up with the green-sickness: but this magnified but little with my father. Spectator.

MAGN'LOQUENCE.* n. s. [magniloquentia, Lat.] A lofty manner of speaking; boasting.

Our author might have seen how all the other sects ridiculed this magniloquence of Epicurus, as inconsistent with his whole system. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 44.

MA'GNITUDE. n. s. [magnitudo, Lat.]

1. Greatness; grandeur.

He with plain heroic magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemns. Milton, S. A.

2. Comparative bulk.

This tree hath no extraordinary magnitude, touching the trunk or stem; it is hard to find any one bigger than the rest. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.
Never repose so much upon any man's single counsel, fidelity and discretion, in managing affairs of the first magnitude, that is, matters of religion and justice, as to create in yourself, or others, a diffidence of your own judgement. King Charles.

When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of heaven and earth consisting; and compute
Their magnitudes; this earth a spot, a grain,
An atom, with the firmament compar'd. Milton, P. L.

Convince the world that you're devout and true;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden, Jew.

Conceive these particles of bodies to be so disposed amongst themselves, that the intervals of empty spaces between them may be equal in magnitude to them all; and that these particles may be composed of other particles much smaller, which have as much empty space between them as equals all the magnitudes of these smaller particles. Newton, Opticks.

MAGNOLIA.* n. s. An exotic plant, commonly called the laurel-leaved tulip tree. Miller specifies four kinds of it.

G. Mason.

The rich magnolias claim
The station. W. Mason, English Garden.

MA'GOT-PIE.* See MAGPIE.

MAGPIE.† n. s. [from pie, pica, Latin, and mag, contracted from Margaret, as phil is used to a sparrow, and poll to a parrot.] Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Steevens calls it a contraction of the old French magot; and our word was also magot-pie, as in the example from Shakspeare's Macbeth, where Dr. Johnson has given it magpies instead of magot-pies. Minsheu and Cotgrave call this bird a magatapie. Yet it is most likely from mag, a colloquial expression in some places for chatter; especially as the bird is also known by the vulgar name of chatter-pie.] A bird sometimes taught to talk.

Augurs, and understood relations, have
By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth

The secret'st man of blood. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Dissimulation is expressed by a lady wearing a vizard of two faces, in her right-hand a magpie, which Spenser described looking through a lattice. Peachment on Drawing.

So have I seen in black and white,
A prating thing, a magpie hight,
Majestically stalk;
A stately, worthless animal,
That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
All flutter, pride, and talk. Swift.

MA'GYDARE. n. s. [magudaris, Lat.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

MAHO'GANY.* n. s. A reddish wood brought from some of the West India islands, and the continent on the south of the gulf of Mexico. In French, Bois d'Acajou.

There are many beautiful varieties [of timbers] adapted for cabinet work; — among others, the bread-nut, the wild-lemon, and the well-known mahogany. Guthrie, of Jamaica.

MAHO'MEDAN.* n. s. A mussulman; a MAHO'METAN. } professor of the reli- MAHO'METIST. } gion of Mahomet.

MAHU'METAN. } Our old lexicography writes the word Mahumetan. The most usual, though not correct, way of writing it, is Mahometan. "I call him every where Mahomet, although Mohammed be the alone true and proper pronunciation of the name." Pridaux's Life of Mahomet, Pref.

The subjection of Papists to their judges doth no more prove their religion to be true, than the obedience of Mahometists to their superiors both in cases of religion, and of the commonwealth, doth justify their sect to be of the religion of God. Fulke, Retentive, &c. (1580), p. 84.

It is the custom of the Mahometans, if they see any printed or written paper upon the ground, to take it up, and lay it aside carefully, as not knowing but it may contain some piece of their Alcoran. Addison, Spect. No. 85.

The Mahomedans are enthusiasts. Guthrie, of Egypt.

MAHO'METAN.* adj. Denoting the followers or the religion of Mahomet.

My purpose was to give an account first of the controversies, which miserably divided those Eastern churches; and then of that grievous calamity and ruin, which happened to them thereupon, through that deluge of Mahometan tyranny and delusion which overwhelmed all those provinces in which they were planted.

Pridaux, Life of Mahomet, Pref. p. xv.

MAHO'METANISM.* MAHO'METISM. } n. s. The religion MAHO'METRY. } of Mahometans. MAHU'METISM.

The standers by, to joy his initiation into Mahometry, salute him by the name of mussulman. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 303.

Pity, that so noble a place, and so populous, should continue so long uncivilized and corrupted by Mahometism and Gentilism; which, as with an impure breath, has infected the whole island.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 22.

Who now sustains a Persian storm :
There hell (that made it) suffers schism :
This war, forsooth, was to reform
Mahometism.

Fanshau, Poems, (1676), p. 210.

That abominable imposture of Mahometism.

Prideaux, Life of Mahomet, Pref. p. 9.

He thought popery and Mahometanism were equally dangerous to Christianity.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 170.

TO MAHO'METANIZE.* v. a. [from mahometan.] To render conformable to any mode or custom of the Mahometans.

From these differential marks, I am inclined to suspect that our old structures have been new-named, and mahometanised without sufficient proof of their Arabic origin.

Swivburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

MA'HOUND.* n. s. A contemptuous name of old for Mahomet; sometimes also used by our ancestors for the devil, and sometimes for any savage character. It is said to have been common in the religious interludes. See TERMAGANT.

Like Mahound in a play,

No man dare him withsay, Skelton, Poems, p. 158.

When judgement in causes of religion is committed to soche monstrous mahoundes, what godlynesse can followe ?

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543), fol. 5.

He gan to curse and swear,
And vow by Mahoune that he should be slaine.

Spenser, F. Q.

MAID.† } n. s. [Icel. megd; Saxon, MAIDEN.† } mægden, mæben; Dutch, mægd. See MAY. Our maid was formerly may.]

1. An unmarried woman; a virgin.

Your wives, your daughters,

Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust, Shakespeare, Macbeth.

This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd,
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakespeare.

I am not solely led

By nice direction of a maiden's eyes. Shakespeare.

She employed the residue of her life to repairing of highways, building of bridges, and endowing of maidenes. Curew.

Your deluded wife had been a maid;
Down on the bridal bed a maid she lay,
A maid she rose at the approaching day.

Dryden, Juv.

Let me die, she said,

Rather than lose the spotless name of maid.

Dryden.

2. A woman servant.

My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Shakespeare.

Old Taucerd visited his daughter's bow'r;
Her cheek, for such his custom was, he kiss'd,
Then bless'd her kneeling, and her maids dismiss'd. Dryden.

Her closet and the gods share all her time,
Except when, only by some maids attended,
She seeks some shady solitary grove. Rowe.

A thousand maidens ply the purple loom,
To weave the bed, and deck the regal room.

Prior.

3. Female. [mæben-cild, Sax.]

If she bear a maid child,

Lev. xii. 5.

At sea in childbed died she, but brought forth
A maid child call'd Marina. Shakespeare, Pericles.

4. In some places, maiden is the name of a tub in which linen is washed.

MAID.† n. s. [raia vel squatina minor.]

A species of skate fish.

The — mayd, and mullet, dainty fish.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 25.

MA'IDEN.† adj.

1. Consisting of virgins.

Nor was there one of all the nymphs that rovd

O'er Mænalus, amid the maiden throng

More favor'd once. Addison, Oo.

2. Fresh; new; unused; unpolluted.

He fleshed his maiden sword. Shakespeare.

When I am dead, strew me o'er

With maiden flowers, that all the world may know

I was a chaste wife to my grave.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

By this maiden blossom in my hand

I scorn thee and thy fashion. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. Applied to assizes; meaning where no person is condemned to die.

MA'IDEN.* adj. [Not a corruption of the old French magne, or mayne, as Mr.

Warton has asserted; but rather perhaps the Saxon, mægen, great, strong; mægn, strength. But Mr. Archdeacon Nares, in his Glossary, says, that the word "as applied to a fortress, or fortified town, meant properly one that had never been taken, or was deemed impregnable;

and still holds, in military language."

Strong; impregnable.

At Cattle Well near Wooler — is an intrenchment called by this same name of the maiden castle.

Wallis, Hist. of Northumberland.

The old Roman camp near Dorchester in Dorsetshire, a noble work, is called maiden castle, the capital fortress in those parts. We have maiden down in Somersetshire with the same signification.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 13.

TO MA'IDEN.* v. n. To speak or act demurely like a maiden.

The courteous citizen bade to his feast,

With hollow words, and overly request :

"Come, will ye dine with me this holy day?"

I yielded, though he hop'd I would say nay;

For had I mayden'd it, as many use,

Loath to grant, but loath to refuse;

"Alack, sir, I were loath; another day, —

"I should but trouble you, — pardon me, if you may;" —

No pardon should I need : for, to depart

He gives me leave, and thanks too, in his heart !

Ep. Hall, Sat. iii. 3.

MA'IDENHAIR. n. s. [maiden and hair;

adiantum.] This plant is a native of the southern parts of France and in the Mediterranean, where it grows on rocks, and old ruins, from whence it is brought for medicinal use.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass green, upon his head a garland of bents, king's-cup, and maidenhair. Peacham.

MA'IDENHEAD. } n. s. [from maiden.]

MA'IDENHOPE. } n. s. [from maiden.]

MA'IDENHOOD. } n. s. [from maiden.]

1. Virginity; virginal purity; freedom from contamination.

And, for the modest lore of maidenhood,

Bids me not sojourn with these armed men.

Oh whither shall I fly; what sacred wood

Shall hide me from the tyrant? or what den?

Fairfax.

She hated chambers, closets, secret mewes,

And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhead.

Fairfax.

Example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for that dissuade succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them.

Shakespeare.

Maidenhood she loves, and will be swift

To aid a virgin. Milton, Comus.

2. Newness; freshness; uncontaminated state. This is now become a low word.

The devil and mischance look big
Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Some who attended with much expectation, at their first appearing have stained the maidenhead of their credit with some negligent performance.

Wotton.

Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no joy's maidenhead,
Then spousal rites prejudice the marriage-bed.

Crashaw.

MA'IDENLINESS.* n. s. [from maidenly.] The behaviour of a maiden; gentleness; modesty. Sherwood.

MA'IDENLIP. n. s. [lappago.] An herb. Ainsworth.

MA'IDENLIKE.* adj. [maiden and like; mæbenlic, Saxon.] Like a maiden; modest; decent.

A little before the beginning of this interval did

Honorius the third appoint the Carmelites to go in white, that they might look more maidenlike; and decreed that they should be called the family of the Virgin.

More, Expos. of the Sev. Churches, p. 79.

MA'IDENLY.† adj. [maiden and like; mæbenlic, Sax.] Like a maid; gentle; modest; timorous; decent.

'Tis not maidenly;

Our sex as well as I, may chide you for it.

Shakespeare.

You virtuous ass, and bashful fool; must you be blushing? what a maidenly man at arms are you become?

Shakespeare.

Under the veil of maidenly priesthood.

Ep. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 164.

That same maidenly saint was subject to the like manner of scandal.

By maidhood, honour, and every thing,

I love thee. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

MAIDMA'RIEN.† n. s. [puer ludius, Lat.]

A kind of dance, so called from a buffon dressed like a man, who played tricks to the populace. Dr. Johnson. —

Maid Marian was originally a woman, the queen of the May; one of the company of our old Morris dancers; but, as Mr. Steevens has observed, after the Morris degenerated into a piece of coarse buffoonery, and Maid Marian was personated by a trumpet or clown, this once elegant queen obtained the name of Malkin, or Maukin. See MALKIN.

So the hobbihorse, and so the maid-marian was attired in colours.

Old Meg of Heref. for a Mayd-Mar. (1609.) B. 4. b.

For womanhood, maid-marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. 1.

Great was the number of the preachers, [during Cromwell's usurpation;] for a lying spirit made both some lords, and their coachmen; some mechanicks and their apprentices; yea, some mistresses, and their maid-maukins, all gifted in that kind: which were not able to discern and distinguish between faith and faction, reformation and rebellion, conscience and conspiracy, holiness and hypocrisy.

Dr. Griffiths, Samaritan Revived, (1660), p. 23.
A set of morrice-dancers danced a maidmair with a tabor and pipe. Temple.

MA'IDPALE. adj. [maid and pale.] Pale like a sick virgin.

Change the complexion of her mailpale peace
To scarlet indignation. Shakespeare.

MAIDSE'RVANT. n. s. A female servant.
It is perfectly right what you say of the indifference in common friends, whether we are sick or well; the very maidse'rvants in a family have the same notion. Swift.

MAJESTA'TICAL.* adj. [majestas, ma-
MAJESTA'TICK. } jestatis, Lat.] Great in appearance; having dignity.

In the earth of the house of my majestick presence.

Scott's Works, (ed. 1718), ii. 493.

MAJE'STICAL. } adj. [from majesty.]
MAJE'STICK. }

1. August; having dignity; grand; imperial; regal; great of appearance.

They made a doubt
Presence majestick would put him out:
For, quoth the king, an angel shalt thou see,
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously. Shakespeare.

Get the start of the majestick world,
And bear the palm alone. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

We do it wrong, being so majestick,
To offer it the shew of violence.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.
In his face
Sate meekness, heighten'd with majestick grace.

Denham.
A royal robe he wore with graceful pride,
Embroider'd sandals glitter'd as he trod,
And forth he mov'd, majestick as a god.

Pope, Ode.
2. Stately; pompous; splendid.

It was no mean thing which he purposed; to perform a work so majestick and stately was no small charge. Hooker.

3. Sublime; elevated; lofty.

Which passage doth not only argue an infinite abundance, both of artizans and materials, but likewise of magnificent and majestick desires in every common person. Wotton.

The least portions must be of the epic kind; all must be grave, majestick, and sublime. Dryden.

MAJE'STICALNESS.* n. s. [from majes-
MAJE'STICKNESS. } tical.] State or manner of being majestick.

He was pleased with the gravity and majestickness of our order.

Oldenburg to Boyle, Boyle's Works, v. 307.

MAJE'STICALLY. adv. [from majestick.]

Dan. v. 18.

3. Dignity; elevation of manner.
The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
The next in majesty. Dryden.

4. The title of kings and queens. The use of majesty has been ascribed to Gondemar king of the Visigoths, and to the kings of Lorraine in the seventh century; but in France is not traceable before the year 1360; and, according to Camden, "majesty came hither in the time of King Henry the Eighth, as sacred majesty lately in our memory."

See Douce's Illustr. of Shakespeare, ii. 12.
Selden has adduced an instance of our word so early as in the reign of Henry the Second.

Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than what your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I have a garden opens to the sea,
From whence I can your majesty convey
To some nigh friend. Waller.

He, who had been always believed a creature of the queen, visited her majesty but once in six weeks. Clarendon.

1. Principal; chief; leading.

In every grand or main public duty which God requireth of his church, there is, besides that matter and form wherein the essence thereof consisteth, a certain outward fashion, whereby the same is in decent manner administered. Hooker.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased;
The which observ'd a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he had once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.

Shakespeare.
There arose three notorious and main rebellions, which drew several armies out of England.

Davies on Ireland.

The nether flood,
Which now divided into four main streams,
Runs diverse. Milton, P. L.

I should be much for open war, O peers,
If what was urg'd
Main reason to persuade immediate war,
Did not dissuade me most. Milton, P. L.

All creatures look to the main chance, that is, food and propagation. L'Estrange.

Our main interest is to be as happy as we can, and as long as possible. Tillotson.

Nor tell me in a dying father's tone,
Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
Put out the principal in trusty hands;
Live on the use, and never dip thy lands.

Dryden, Pers.

Whilst they have busied themselves in various learning, they have been wanting in the one main thing.

Baker.

Nor is it only in the main design, but they have followed him in every episode.

Pope.

2. Mighty; huge; overpowering; vast.

Think, you question with a Jew,

You may as well go stand upon the beach,

And bid the main flood bate his usual height.

Shakespeare.

See'st thou what rage

Transports our adversary whom no bounds,——

—— nor yet the main abyss,

Wide interrupt, can hold?

Milton, P. L.

3. Gross; containing the chief part.

We ourselves will follow

In the main battle, which on either side,

Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.

Shakespeare.

All abreast

Charg'd our main battle's front.

King Charles.

These notions concerning coinage have, for the main, been put into writing above twelve months.

Locke.

3. The ocean; the great sea, as distinguished from bays or rivers.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Where's the king?

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea;

Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,

That things might change? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He fell, and struggling in the main,

Cry'd out for helping hands, but cry'd in vain.

Dryden.

Say, why should the collected main

Itself within itself contain?

Why to its caverns should it sometimes creep,

And with delighted silence sleep

On the lov'd bosom of its parent deep.

Prior.

4. Violence; force.

He gan advance,

With huge force, and with importable main,

And towards him with dreadful fury prance.

Spenser, F. Q.

fox,

With brazen trumpets, and inflated box.

Dryden.

5. A hand at dice. [main, French; "faire et lever la main, to take up the trick at cards," Cotgrave; from manus, Latin, the hand.]

Were it good,

To set the exact wealth of all our states,

All at one cast; to set so rich a main

In the nice hazard of one doubtful hour.

Shakespeare.

To pass our tedious hours away,

We throw a merry main.

Ld. Dorset, Song.

Writing is but just like dice,

And lucky mains make people wise:

That jumbled words if fortune throw them,

Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem.

Prior.

6. A cockfighting match. [probably from the French à la main, signifying "a battle of hand."] See Brand's Popular Antiq. i. 481.]

Her husband hath utterly made them void on he day he heard them.

When he had made a convenient room, he set it in a wall, and made it fast with iron.

He made the water wine. St. John, iv. 46.
He was the more inflamed with the desire of battle with Waller, to make even all accounts.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Permitted you to fight for this usurper;
All to make sure the vengeance of this day,
Which even this day has ruin'd.

In respect of actions within the reach of such a power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him.

9. To bring into any state or condition.

I have made thee a god to Pharaoh.

Joseph made ready his chariot, and went up to meet Israel.

Who made thee a prince and a judge over us.

Ye have troubled me to make me to stink among the inhabitants.

He made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant.

He should be made manifest to Israel.

St. John, i. 31.

Though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more.

He hath made me a by-word of the people.

Make ye him drunken; for he magnified himself against the Lord.

Joseph was not willing to make her a public example.

By the assistance of this faculty we have all those ideas in our understandings, which, though we do not actually contemplate, yet we can bring in sight, and make appear again, and be the objects of our thoughts.

The Lacedæmonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness by bringing a drunken man into their company, and shewing them what a beast he made of himself.

To form; to settle; to establish.

Those who are wise in courts
Make friendships with the ministers of state,
Nor seek the ruins of a wretched exile.

To hold; to keep.

Deep in a cave the sybil makes abode.

To secure from distress; to establish in riches or happiness. In this sense, formerly much used with mar, by way of contrast, i. e. save or destroy.

Unequall were her hands twain;
That one did reach, the other push'd away;
That one did make, the other marr'd againe.

In vaine I seeke my duke's love to expound,
The more I seek to make, the more I marr'd.

He hath given her this monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

This is the night,
That either makes me, or foredoes me quite.

Each element his dread command obeys,
Who makes or ruins with a smile or frown,
Who as by one he did our nation raise,
So now he with another pulls us down.

To suffer; to incur.

The loss was private that I made;
'Twas but myself I lost; I lost no legions.

He accuseth Neptune unjustly, who makes shipwreck a second time.

To commit.

I will neither plead my age nor sickness in excuse of the faults which I have made.

To compel; to force; to constrain.

That the soul in a sleeping man should be this moment busy a thinking, and the next moment in a waking man not remember those thoughts, would need some better proof than bare assertion to make it be believed.

They should be made to rise at their early hour; but great care should be taken in waking them, that it be not done hastily.

To intend; to purpose to do. In this sense it is used only in interrogation.

What dost thou here now make?

But what make you here?

Who brought thee hither? and what makest thou in this place?

He may ask this civil question, friend!—
What dost thou make a shipboard? to what end?

Gomez; what mak'st thou here with a whole brotherhood of city-bailiffs?

To raise as profit from any thing.

He's in for a commodity of brown pepper; of which he made five marks ready money.

Did I make a gain of you by any of them I sent?

2 Cor. ix. 19.

If Auletes, a negligent prince, made so much, what must now the Romans make, who govern it so wisely.

If it is meant of the value of the purchase, it was very high; it being hardly possible to make so much of land, unless it was reckoned at a very low price.

18. To reach; to tend to; to arrive at: a kind of sea term.

Acosta recordeth, they that sail in the middle can make no land of either side.

I've made the port already,

And laugh securely at the lazy storm.

They ply their shatter'd oars
To nearest land, and make the Libyan shores.

Did I but purpose to embark with thee,
While gentle zephyrs play in prosperous gales;
But would forsake the ship, and make the shore,
When the winds whistle, and the tempests roar?

19. To gain.

The wind came about, and settled in the west for many days, so as we could make little or no way.

I have made way
To some Philistian lords, with whom to treat.

Now mark a little why Virgil is so much concerned to make this marriage, it was to make way for the divorce which he intended afterwards.

20. To force; to gain by force.

Rugged rocks are interpos'd in vain;
He makes his way o'er mountains, and contemns
Unruly torrents, and unforded streams.

The stone wall which divides China from Tartary, is reckoned nine hundred miles long, running over rocks, and making way for rivers through mighty arches.

21. To exhibit.

When thou makest a dinner, call not thy friends but the poor.

22. To pay; to give.

He shall make amends for the harm that he hath done.

23. To put; to place.

You must make a great difference between Hercules's labours by land, and Jason's voyage by sea for the golden fleece.

24. To turn to some use.

Whate'er they catch,
Their fury makes an instrument of war.

25. To incline to; to dispose to.

It is not requisite they should destroy our reason, that is, to make us rely on the strength of nature, when she is least able to relieve us.

26. To effect as an argument.

Seeing they judge this to make nothing in the world for them,

You conceive you have no more to do than, having found the principal word in a concordance, introduce as much of the verse as will serve your turn, though in reality it makes nothing for you.

27. To represent; to show.

He is not that goose and ass that Valla would make him.

28. To constitute.

Our desires carry the mind out to absent good, according to the necessity which we think there is of it, to the making or encrease of our happiness.

29. To amount to.

Whosoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's person.

Gal. ii. 16.

30. To mould; to form.

Lye not erect but hollow, which is in the making of the bed; or with the legs gathered up, which is the more wholesome. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some undeserved fault

I'll find, about the making of the bed. Shakspeare.
They now fern green, and burning of them to ashes, make the ashes up into balls with a little water. Mortimer.

31. To fasten; to bar: an expression used in several of the midland counties.

Steevens.

Make the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement. Shakspeare, As you like it.
The doors are made against you.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

32. To MAKE away. To kill; to destroy.

He will not let slip any advantage to make away him whose just title, ennobled by courage and goodness, may one day shake the seat of a never-secure tyranny. Sidney.

Clarence was, by practice of evil persons about the king his brother, called thence away, and soon after, by sinister means, was clean made away. Spenser on Ireland.

He may have a likely guess,

How these were they that made away his brother. Shakspeare.

Trajan would say of the vain jealousy of princes that seek to make away those that aspire to their succession, that there was never king that did put to death his successor. Bacon.

My mother I slew at my very birth, and since have made away two of her brothers, and happily to make way for the purposes of others against myself. Hayward.

Give poets leave to make themselves away. Roscommon.

What multitude of infants have been made away by those who brought them into the world. Addison.

33. To MAKE away. To transfer.

Debtors,

When they never mean to pay,
To some friend make all away. Walker.

34. To MAKE account. To reckon; to believe.

They made no account but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon, War with Spain.

35. To MAKE account of. To esteem; to regard.

36. To MAKE free with. To treat without ceremony.

The same who have made free with the greatest names in church and state, and exposed to the world the private misfortunes of families. Dunciad.

37. To MAKE good. To maintain; to defend; to justify.

The grand master, guarded with a company of most valiant knights, drove them out again by force, and made good the place. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

When he comes to make good his confident undertaking, he is fain to say things that agree very little with one another. Boyle.
I'll either die, or I'll make good the place. Dryden.

As for this other argument, that by pursuing one single theme they gain an advantage to express, and work up, the passions, I wish any example he could bring from them could make it good. Dryden on Dram. Poesy.

I will add what the same author subjoins to make good his foregoing remark. Locke on Education.

38. To MAKE good. To fulfil; to accomplish.

This letter doth make good the friar's words. Shakspeare.

39. To MAKE light of. To consider as of no consequence.

They made light of it, and went their ways. St. Matth. xxii.

40. To MAKE love. To court; to play the gallant.

How happy each of the sexes would be, if there was a window in the breast of every one that makes or receives love. Addison, Guardian.

41. To MAKE a man. To make the fortune of a person. Still a common expression.

Were I in England now, and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver; there would this monster make a man; any strange beast there makes a man; when they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Shakspeare, Tempest.

We are all made men.

Shakspeare Mids. N. Dream.

What poor man would not carry a great burden of gold to be made a man for ever? Tillotson.

42. To MAKE merry. To feast; to partake of an entertainment.

A hundred pound or two, to make merry withal? Shakspeare.

The king went to Latham to make merry with his mother and the earl. Bacon, Hen. VII.

A gentleman and his wife will ride to make merry with his neighbour, and after a day, those two go to a third: in which progress they increase like snowballs, till through their burthensome weight they break. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

43. To MAKE much of. To cherish; to foster.

The king hearing of their adventure, suddenly falls to take pride in making much of them, extolling them with infinite praises. Sidney.

The bird is dead

That we have made so much on!

Shakspeare, Cymb.

It is good discretion not to make too much of any man at the first. Bacon, Essays.

The easy and the lazy make much of the gout; and yet making much of themselves too, they take care to carry it presently to bed, and keep it warm. Temple.

44. To MAKE of. What to make of, is, how to understand.

That they should have knowledge of the languages and affairs of those that lie at such a distance from them, was a thing we could not tell what to make of. Bacon.

To MA'LETREAT.* See To MALTREAT.
MA'LEVOLENCE. n. s. [malevolencia, Lat.] Ill will; inclination to hurt others; malignity.

The son of Duncan
Lives in the English court; and is receiv'd
Of the most pious Edward with such grace,
That the malevolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

MA'LEVOLENT. adj. [malevolus, Lat.] Ill-disposed towards others; unfavourable; malignant.

I have thee in my arms
Though our malevolent stars have struggled hard,
And held us long asunder. Dryden, K. Arthur.

MA'LEVOLENTLY. adv. [from malevolence.] Maliciously; malignantly; with ill-will.

The oak did not only resent his fall, but vindicate him from aspersions malevolently cast upon him.

Hovel.

MA'LEVOLOUS.* adj. [malevolus, Latin; malivole, French.] Malevolent; malicious. In use more than two centuries since, as by Cotgrave and Sherwood; and revived, in modern times, by a writer of high distinction. I have brought also into the Dictionary of our Language, the opposite to this word, benevolous.

Hitherto we see these malevolous critics keep their ground.

Warburton on Prodigies, p. 109.

MA'LICE. n. s. [malice, French; malitia, Latin.]

1. Badness of design; deliberate mischief. God hath forgiven me many sins of malice, and therefore surely he will pity my infirmities.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

2. Ill intention to any one; desire of hurting.

Duncan is in his grave;
Malice domestick, foreign levy, nothing
Can touch him further! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

When Satan, who late fled before the threats
Of Gabriel out of Eden, now improv'd
In meditated fraud and malice, bent
On man's destruction, maugre what might hap
Of heavier on himself, fearless return'd!

Milton, P. L.

To MA'LICE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To regard with ill-will. Obsolete, but formerly much used.

The cause why he this fly so maliced,
Was that his mother which him bore and bred,
The most fine-fingered workman on the ground,
Arachne, by his means, was vanquished.

Spenser, Muopotmos.

I am so far from malicing their states,
That I begin to pity them.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

We malice them not; we are not enemies unto them.

Bp. Jewel, Sermon. (1611), p. 203.

MALICIOUS. adj. [malicieux, French; maliciosus, Latin.] Ill-disposed to any one; intending ill; malignant.

We must not stint

Our necessary actions, in the fear
To cope malicious censurers; which ever,

As ravenous fishes do a vessel follow
That is new trimm'd. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
I grant him bloody,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Thou knowest,
What hath been warn'd us, what malicious foe,
Envyng our happiness, and of his own
Despairing, seeks to work us woe and shame.

Milton, P. L.
The air appearing so malicious in this moribund conspiracy, exacts a more particular regard.

Harvey on Consumptions.

MALICIOUSLY. adv. [from malicious.]
With malignity; with intention of mischief.

An intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers maliciously bent against me, broke out,
and had like to have ended in my utter destruction.

Swift.

MALICIOUSNESS. † n. s. [from malicious.]
Malice; intention of mischief to another.

Lay aside all maliciousness, guile, and dissimulation. Knight, Tr. of Truth, (1580), fol. 62.

1. Unfavourable; ill-disposed to any one; malicious.

Witchcraft may be by operation of malign spirits.

Bacon.

Such as, to set forth

Great things by small, if nature's concord broke,
Among the constellations war were sprung,
Two planets, rushing from aspect malign
Of fiercest opposition, in mid sky,

Should combat, and their jarring spheres confound. Milton, P. L.

Of contempt, and the malign hostile influence it has upon government, every man's experience will inform him. South.

2. Infectious; fatal to the body; pestilential.

He that turneth the humours back, and maketh
the wound bleed inwards, endangereth malign ulcers, and pernicious imposthumations,

Bacon, Essays.

TO MALIGN. † v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To regard with envy or malice.

The people practise what mischiefs and villainies
they will against private men, whom they malign, by stealing their goods, or murdering them.

Spenser on Ireland.

It is hardly to be thought that any governor should so malign his successor, as to suffer an evil to grow up, which he might timely have kept under.

Spenser on Ireland.

Strangers conspired together against him, and malign'd him in the wilderness. Ecclesi. xlv. 18.

If it is a pleasure to be envied and shot at, to be malign'd standing, and to be despised falling; then is it a pleasure to be great, and to be able to dispose of men's fortunes. South.

2. To mischief; to hurt; to harm.

Fruit-trees too much malign'd by the arsenical fumes.
Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 87.

TO MALIGN.* v. n. To entertain malice.
This odious foul, when he meets with aught above the cogitation of his reading, leaves the noisome stench of his rude stoll behind him, maligning that any thing should be spoke or understood above his own genuine baseness.

Milton, Colasterion.

MALIGNANCY. n. s. [from malignant.]
1. Malevolence; malice; unfavourableness.

My stars shine darkly over me; the malignancy of my fate might, perhaps, distemper yours; therefore I crave your leave, that I may bear my evils alone. Shakespeare.

2. Destructive tendency.

The infection doth produce a bubo, which,
according to the degree of its malignancy, either proves easily curable, or else it proceeds in its venom. Wiseman, Surgery.

MALIGNANT. adj. [malignant, French.]

1. Malign; envious; unpropitious; malicious; mischievous; intending or effecting ill.

O malignant and ill-boarding stars!

Now art thou come unto a feast of death.

Shakespeare.

His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

To good malignant, to bad men benign.

Milton, P. L.

They have seen all other notions besides their own represented in a false and malignant light, whereupon they judge and condemn at once.

Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

2. Hostile to life; as, malignant fevers.

They hold, that the cause of the gout is a malignant vapour that falls upon the joint; that the swelling is a kindness in nature, that calls down humours to damp the malignity of the vapours, and thereby assuage the pain. Temple.

Let the learn'd begin

The enquiry, where disease could enter in;
How those malignant atoms forc'd their way,
What in the faultless frame they found to make their prey? Dryden.

MALIGNANT. † n. s.

1. A man of ill intention; malevolently disposed.

Occasion was taken, by certain malignant, secretely to undermine his great authority in the church of Christ. Hooker.

2. It was a word used of the defenders of the church and monarchy by the rebel sectaries in the civil wars.

How will dissenting brethren relish it?

What will malignant say? Hudibras, i. ii.

MALIGNANTLY. adv. [from malignant.]
With ill intention; maliciously; mischievously.

Now arriving

At place of potency, and sway o' the state,
If he should still malignantly remain
Fast foe to the Plebeians, your voices might Be curses to yourselves. Shakespeare, Coriol.

MALIGNER. † n. s. [from malign.]

1. One who regards another with ill will.
The envious maligners of your majesty's felicity.
Earl of Carlisle to the King, (1623), Cabal, p. 269.

Jude calleth contemners of lordshippe.

Fulke, Retentive, (1590), p. 111.

Such as these are philosophers' maligners, who pronounce the most generous contemplations, needless unprofitable subtleties.

Glanville, Apology.

MALIGNITY. n. s. [malignité, French.]

1. Malice; maliciousness.

Deeds are done which man might charge aright
On stubborn fate, or undiscerning night,
Had not their guilt the lawless soldiers known,
And made the whole malignity their own. Tickell.

2. Contrariety to life; destructive tendency.

Whether any tokens of poison did appear, reports are various; his physicians discerned an invincible malignity in his disease. Hayward.

No redress could be obtained with any vigour proportionable to the malignity of that far-spread disease. King Charles.

3. Evilness of nature.

This shows the high malignity of fraud, that in the natural course of it tends to the destruction of common life, by destroying trust and mutual confidence. South.

MALIGNLY. † adv. [from malign.] Enviously; with ill will; mischievously.

Such are evermore the unworthy ways of this world, malignly to blame men for their well doings. Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543), fol. 52.

Let you think I railly more than teach,
Or praise malignly arts I cannot reach;
Let me for once presume t' instruct the times.

Pope.

MALISON.* n. s. [old French, malison, a curse.] A malediction. Obsolete.

God will yewe his malison to swiche lord-shippes as susteine the wickedness of their servants.
Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

MAL'KIN. † n. s. [from mal, of Mary, and kin, the diminutive termination. Dr. Johnson.—
Dr. Johnson's etymology is, I apprehend, erroneous.
The kitchen-wench very naturally takes her name from this word, a scullion; another of her titles is in like manner derived from escouillon, the French term for the utensil called a mal'kin.
Malone.—It may perhaps be derived from the Sax.
mal, a spot, and the termination kin.
G. Chalmers.] A kind of mop made of clouts for sweeping ovens; thence a frightful
See MAID MARIAN.

The kitchen mal'kin pins
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck,
Clambering the walls to eye him.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

None would look on her,
But cast their gazes on Marina's face;
Whilst ours was blurted at, and held a mal'kin.

Shakespeare, Pericles.

MALL. n. s. [malleus, Lat. a hammer.]

1. A kind of beater or hammer.

He took a mall, and after having hollowed the handle, and that part which strikes the ball, he enclosed in them several drugs. Addison, Spect.

2. A stroke; a blow. Not in use.

With mighty mall,

The monster merciless him made to fall.

Spenser, F. Q.

Give that reverend head a mall,
Of two or three against a wall. Hudibras.

3. A walk where they formerly played with malls and balls. Moll is, in Ice-landick, an area or walk spread with shells.

This the beau monde shall from the mall survey,
And hail with musick its propitious ray. Pope.

mallard, shoveler, and goose.

Peachment on Drawing.

Arm your hook with the line, and cut so much of a brown mallard's feather as will make the wings. Walton, Angler.

MALLEABILITY. n. s. [from malleable.] Quality of enduring the hammer; quality of spreading under the hammer.

Supposing the nominal essence of gold to be a body of such a peculiar colour and weight, with the malleability and fusibility, the real essence is that constitution on which these qualities and their union depend. Locke.

MALLEABLE. adj. [malleable, French; from malleus, Lat. a hammer.] Capable of being spread by beating; this is a quality possessed in a most eminent degree by gold, it being more ductile than any other metal; and is opposite to friability or brittleness. Quincy.

Make it more strong for falls, though it come not to the degree to be malleable. Bacon.

The beaten soldier proves most manful,
That like his sword endures the anvil;
And justly's held more formidable,
The more his valour's malleable. Hudibras.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pression, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastic, returning to its figure, with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts; if the parts slide upon one another, the body is malleable or soft.

Newton, Opticks.
MALLEABLENESS. n. s. [from malleable.] Quality of enduring the hammer; malleability; ductility.

The bodies of most use that are sought for out of the earth are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.

To MALLEATE. † v. a. [from malleus, Lat.] To hammer; to forge or shape by the hammer.

Look upon every circumstance in the story of Pharaoh, and we cannot find one which was not as a hammer to malleate and soften his story heart. Farinond, Sermon. 1647, p. 218.

He first found out the art of melting and malleating metals, and making them useful for tools. Derham.

MALLEATION.* n. s. [malleation, French, Cotgrave; from malleate.] Act of beating.

Shards or mallows for the pot,
That keep the loosen'd body sound. Dryden.

MALMSEY. † n. s. [from Malvasia, a city of Peloponnesus. A kind of wine was called malvasy, or malvesy; Ital. malvosio; Teut. malvesey; and another sort of wine made in Provence had the same name. So, in our old lexicography, "Malvesey, malmsey wine." Huloet.]

1. A sort of grape.

2. A kind of wine.

With him he brought a jubble of Malvesie,
And eke another full of fine Vernage.

Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.

Metheglin, wort, and malmsey. Shakespeare.

MALT. † n. s. [mealt, Sax.; mout, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — It is nothing, says Mr. H. Tooke, "but the French word mouillé, the past participle of the verb mouiller, to wet or moisten: mouillé, anglicised, becoming mouillé, mouill'd, mould: then mout, mault, malt: wetting or moistening of the grain is the first and necessary part of the process in making what we therefore term malt." Diversions of Purley, ii. 70. — There is much ingenuity in this deduction, which is applied also to mould, evidently with greater force; for that word was written mowle, and moule; thus marking precisely, as it were, its origin. See MOULD, and To MOULD. But the Sax. mealt, or malt, as well as the Teut. malt, seem to point out the origin of the present word: and these may have been easily formed from the Greek μαλάττω, to soften, to make soft.] Grain steeped in water and fermented, then dried on a kiln.

Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MALTDUST. n. s. [malt and dust.]

Burke, Speech on Mr. Fox's E. India Bill.

MAMMA. n. s. [mamma, Latin: this MAMMA'] word is said to be found for the compellation of mother in all languages: and is therefore supposed to be the first syllables that a child pronounces.] The fond word for mother.

Poor Cupid sobbing scarce could speak;
Indeed, mamma, I did not know ye;
Alas! how easy my mistake?

I took you for your likeness Chloe. Prior.

Little masters and misses are great impediments to servants; the remedy is to bribe them, that they may not tell tales to papa and mamma.

Swift, Rules to Servants.

MAMALUKE.* n. s. [mamaluq, Fr. mamaluco, Ital. from the Arab. mamluc, subject, under the command of another.]

One of those, who were originally slaves or mercenary soldiers, and usurped the sovereignty of Egypt in the thirteenth century, and maintained their usurpation till the beginning of the sixteenth: they are said to have been originally Circassian or Mingrelian slaves; and have, in modern times, been called the military force of Egypt. They have both fought against that enemy of the world's happiness, Napoleon Buonaparte; and they have also joined the French.

He [Saladin] sent to the Circassians by the lake of Meotis, near Taurica Cheronesus, and thence brought many slaves of able and active bodies. — These slaves he trained up in military discipline, most of them being Christians, once baptized; but afterwards, untaught Christ, they learned Mahomet; and so became the worse foes to religion for once being her friends. These proved excellent soldiers and special horsemen, and are called mammlukes.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 97.

'Tis sung, there is a valiant mamaluque.
In foreign land. Hudibras, i. 1.

MAMME'E tree. n. s.

MAN. † n. s. [man, mon, Saxon. Dr.

Johnson.—M. Goth. manna; Icel. man, madr; from the Goth. magan, to be able. "Ab antiquo manner, Sueth.

manna, cujus vestigia supersunt in uber-mannen, oefuermanna, vincere." Wachter, and Serenius.—"Man (inquit Becan.) fit à men, id est, ago, duco; præcipuum enim viri est officium ut et cætæra omnia animalia ducat et gubernet." Kilian. Thus a connexion between the Greek άνθρωπος, strength, and man; and between the Latin manus, the hand, and man, has been supposed: a power of guiding, directing, restraining, or confining, i. e. strength and skill, being in man. See Wachter, in V. MAN. And Whiter's Etym. Magn. p. 125. 386.]

i. Human being.

The king is but a man as I am; the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shews to him as it doth to me, all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.

By ten thousand of them a man shall not be able to advance one step in knowledge.

Tillotson, Serm.

Our thoughts will not be directed what objects to pursue, nor be taken off from those they have once fixed on; but run away with a man, in pursuit of those ideas they have in view.

Locke.

A man would expect to find some antiquities; but all they have to show of this nature is an old rostrum of a Roman ship.

Addison.

A man might make a pretty landscape of his own plantation.

Addison.

7. One of uncommon qualifications.

Manners maketh man. William of Wykeham.

I dare do all that may become a man;

Who dares do more is none.

— What beast was't then

That made you break this enterprise to me?

When you durst do it, then you were a man;

And, to be more than what you were, you would be so much more the man. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He tript me behind, being down, insulted, rail'd,

And put upon him such a deal of man,

That wroth upon him. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Will reckon he should not have been the man he is, had not he broke windows, and knocked down constables, when he was a young fellow.

Addison, Spect.

8. A human being qualified in any particular manner.

Thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth. 1 Sam. xvii. 33.

9. Individual.

In matters of equity between man and man, our Saviour has taught us to put my neighbour in the place of myself, and myself in the place of my neighbour. Watts, Logick.

10. Not a beast.

Thy face, bright Centaur, autumn's heats retain, The softer season suiting to the man.

Creech, Manilius.

11. Wealthy or independent person: to this sense some refer the following passage of Shakespeare, others to the sense next foregoing.

There would this monster make a man; any strange beast there makes a man. Shak. Tempest.

What poor man would not carry a great burthen of gold to be made a man for ever? Tillotson.

12. When a person is not in his senses, we say, he is not his own man. Ainsworth.

13. A movable piece at chess or draughts.

14. MAN of war. A ship of war.

A Flemish man of war lighted upon them, and overmastered them. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

MAN-MIDWIFE.  n. s.* A strange compound, denoting the man who discharges the office of a midwife. It is now frequently converted into the finical accoucheur. Bishop Hall may be considered as giving rise, in some degree, to the present expression. Addison makes a man an housewife. See the third sense of HOUSEWIFE.

This man was not their midwife.

Ep. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 160.

She took it in her head to change her sex.

This was soon done by the help of a sword and a pair of breeches. I have reason to believe that her first design was to turn man-midwife.

Tatler, No. 226.

To MAN. † v. a. [from the noun. Saxon mannian.]

1. To furnish with men.

Your ships are not well mann'd;

Your mariners are muleteers, or reapers. Shaks.

There stands the castle by yond tuft of trees,

Mann'd with three hundred men. Shak. Rich. II.

A navy, to secure the seas, is mann'd;

And forces sent. Daniel, Civ. War.

It hath been agreed, that either of them should send certain ships to sea well manned, and appared to fight. Hayward.

Their ships go as long voyages as any, and are for their burdens as well manned. Raleigh, Ess.

He had manned it with a great number of tall soldiers, more than for the proportion of the castle. Bacon.

They man their boats, and all their young men artil. Waller.

The Venetians could set out thirty men of war, a hundred gallees, and ten galeasses; though I cannot conceive how they could man a fleet of half the number. Addison on Italy.

Timoleon forced the Carthaginians out, though they had manned out a fleet of two hundred men of war. Arbutnot.

2. To guard with men.

See, how the surly Warwick mans the wall. Shakespeare.

The summons take of the same trumpet's call, To sally from one port, or man one publick wall. Tate.

3. To fortify; to strengthen. Dr. Johnson, under this sense, cites a passage from Milton, where the word is move, not man.

Theodosius having manned his soul with proper reflexions, exerted himself in the best manner he could to animate his penitent. Addison, Spect.

4. To tame a hawk.

Another way I have to man my haggard, To make her come, and know her keeper's call; That is, to watch her. Shakespeare.

5. To attend; to serve; to wait on as a man or servant.

Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels: I was never manned with agate till now. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

They distil their husband's land In decoctions, and are mann'd With ten empiricks in their chamber, Lying for the spirit of amber. B. Jonson, Forest.

6. To direct in hostility; to point; to aim. Obsolete.

Man but a rush against Othello's breast, And he retires. Shakespeare, Othello.

MA'NACLE.† n. s. [manicle, old French; manica, from manus, Latin. Our own word was thus formerly oftener manicle than manacle.] Chain for the hands; shackles.

For my sake wear this glove, It is a manacle of love. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Thou With manacles along our street. Shakespeare, Coriol.
Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet, and like manacles on the right hand. Ecclus. xxi. 19.
Nothing but gyves and manacles in the freest sins. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 22.
The law good men count their ornament and protection; others, their manacles and oppression. King Charles.

Those manacles put on him were exceedingly inconvenient for a grinder in a mill. Smith on Old Age, p. 115.

To MA'NACLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To chain the hands; to shackle.

We'll bait thy bears to death, And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shakespeare.

I'll manacle thy neck and feet together. Shakespeare.

Is it thus you use this monarch, to manacle and shackle him hand and foot? Arbutnot and Pope.

To MA'NAGE.† v. a. [manager, French; from manus, the hand, Latin.]

1. To conduct; to carry on.

The fathers had managed the charge of idolatry against the heathens. Stillingfleet.

Let her at least the vocal brass inspire, And tell the nations in no vulgar strain, What wars I manage, and what wreaths I gain. Prior.

2. To train a horse to graceful action.

He rode up and down gallantly mounted, managing his horse, and charging and discharging his lance. Annelles.

They vault from hunters to the manag'd steed. Young.

3. To govern; to make tractable.

Let us stick to our point, and we will manage Bull I'll warrant you. Arbutnot, John Bull.

4. To wield; to move or use easily.

Long tubes are cumbersome, and scarce to be easily managed. Newton.

5. To husband; to make the object of caution.

There is no more to manage! If I fall, It shall be like myself; a setting sun Should leave a tract of glory in the skies. Dryden.
The less he had to lose, the less he car'd, To manage loathsome life, when love was the reward. Dryden.

6. To treat with caution or decency: this is a phrase merely Gallick; not to be imitated. Dr. Johnson.—Bishop Hurd has disregarded Dr. Johnson's censure of this usage.

Notwithstanding it was so much his interest to manage his protestant subjects in the country, he made over his principality to France. Addison on Italy.

To the Hollanders she [Queen Elizabeth] could talk big; and it was not her humour to manage those over whom she had gained an ascendant. Hurd, Dial. iv. on the Gold. Age of Q. Eliz.

To MA'NAGE. v. n. To superintend affairs; to transact.

Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant What their unerring wisdom sees thee want. Dryden.

MA'NAGE. n. s. [mesnage, menage, French.]

1. Conduct; administration.

To him put The manage of my state. Shakespeare, Tempest.

For the rebels which stand out in Ireland, Expedient manage must be made, my liege, Ere further leisure yield them further means. Shakespeare.

Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quiet. Bacon, Ess.

The plea of a good intention will serve to sanctify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South.

2. Use; instrumentality.

To think to make gold of quicksilver is not to be hoped; for quicksilver will not endure the manage of the fire. Bacon.

3. Government of a horse.

In thy slumbers I heard thee murmur tales of iron wars, Speak terms of manage to the bounding steed. Shakespeare.

The horse you must draw in his career with his manage and turn, doing the curveto. Peacham.

4. Discipline; governance.

Whenever we take a strong bias, it is not out of a moral incapacity to do better, but for want of a careful manage and discipline to set us right at first. L'Estrange.

MA'NAGEABLE.† adj. [from manage.]

1. Easy in the use; not difficult to be wielded or moved.

The conditions of weapons and their improvement are, that they may serve in all weathers; and that the carriage may be light and manageable. Bacon, Ess.

Very long tubes are, by reason of their length, apt to bend, and shake by bending so as to cause a continual trembling in the objects, whereas by contrivance the glasses are readily manageable. Newton, Opticks.

2. Governable; tractable.

Not to forbid the ingenuous operations of human art and invention,—so far as they are manageable within the limits of moral intentions and religious ends. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 76.

The courage of a Christian is truly rational and manly, founded in religion and true principles of reason; and so is a thousand times more manageable and useful, than that which ariseth only out of temper, and complexion. Scott's Works, (ed. 1718.) ii. 5.

Many of us seem to borrow our passions from bears, tigers, and lions, rather than from more manageable animals. Skelton, Deism Revealed, Dial. viii.

MA'NAGEABLENESS. n. s. [from manageable.]

1. Accommodation to easy use.

This disagreement may be imputed to the greater or less exactness or manageableness of the instruments employed. Boyle.

2. Tractableness; easiness to be governed.

MA'NAGEMENT. n. s. [management, Fr.]

1. Conduct; administration.

An ill argument introduced with difference, will procure more credit than the profoundest science with a rough, insolent, and noisy management. Locke on Education.

The wrong management of the earl of Godolphin was the only cause of the union. Swift.

2. Prudence; cunning practice.

Mark with what management their tribes divide; Some stick to you, and some to t'other side. Dryden.

3. Practice; transaction; dealing.

He had great managements with ecclesiastics in the view of being advanced to the pontificate. Addison on Italy.

MA'NAGER. n. s. [from manage.]

1. One who has the conduct or direction of any thing.

A skilful manager of the rabble, so long as they have but ears to hear, needs never enquire whether they have any understanding. South.

The manager opens his sluice every night, and distributes the water into the town. Addison.

An artful manager, that crept between His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen. Pope.

2. A man of frugality; a good husband.

A prince of great aspiring thoughts: in the main, a manager of his treasure, and yet bountiful, from his own motion, wherever he discerns merit. Temple.

The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of Ovid's wit; though he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

MA'NAGERY. n. s. [managerie, French.]

1. Conduct; direction; administration.

They who most exactly describe that battle, give so ill an account of any conduct or discretion in the managery of that affair, that posterity would receive little benefit in the most particular relation of it. Clarendon.

2. Husbandry; frugality.

The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns are conferred gratis. Decay of Chr. Piety.

3. Manner of using.

No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field, but will, by little bloody skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight, and teach them the ready managery of their weapons. Decay of Chr. Piety.

MA'NAKIN.* See MANIKIN.

MANA'TION. n. s. [manatio, Latin.] The act of issuing from something else.

To MANCH, or MUNCH.* See To MOUNCH. In some places mounch is pronounced munch or manch. See Jennings's W. C. Words.

MANCHE. n. s. [French.] A sleeve.

MA'NCHET.† n. s. [micet, Fr. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson.—More probably a corruption of main cheat, i. e. principal kind of cheat. Archæol. vol. xv. p. 10. See CHEAT-BREAD.] A small loaf of fine bread.

Take a small toast of manchet dipped in oil of sweet almonds. Bacon.

I love to entertain my friends with a frugal collation; a cup of wine, a dish of fruit, and a manchet. More, Divine Dial.

A paste made only of crumbs of bread, which should be of pure fine manchet. Walton, Angler.

MANCHINE'EL tree. n. s. [mancanilla, Latin.]

The manchineel tree is a native of the West Indies, and grows to the size of an oak: its wood is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed: in cutting down those trees, the juice of the bark must be burnt out before the work is begun: for it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should fly into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippen; many Europeans have suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it: the leaves abound with juice of the same nature; cattle never shelter themselves, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade; yet goats eat this fruit without injury. Miller.

To MA'NCIPATE.† v. a. [mancipo, Lat.; manciper, old French.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.

They voluntarily mancipate and sell themselves. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 160.

Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the meteors, which are in themselves more unstable, and less mancipated to stated motions, are often times employed to various ends. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

MANCIPA'TION.† n. s. [from mancipate.] Slavery; involuntary obligation.

Cockeram.

They [the Romans] fortified themselves against all incursions,—and prevailed against all mankind to their mancipation under them.

Waterhouse, Comm. on Fortescu, p. 187.

MA'NCIPLE.† n. s. [manceps, Latin; which signified particularly the superintendent of a public bakehouse, and from thence a baker in general. Tyrwhitt. And see Du Cange in V. MANCEPS.] The steward of a community; the purveyor; it is particularly used of the purveyor of a college.

A gentile manciple was ther of a temple, Of which achatars mighten take ensemble For to ben wise in buying of vitaille.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

They come furnished with no more experience than they learnt between the cook and the manciple. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

Their manciple fell dangerously ill, Bread must be had, their grist went to the mill:

This Simkin moderately stole before, Their steward sick, he robb'd them ten times more.

Betterton, Miller of Trompington.

MANDA'MUS.† n. s. [Latin.] A writ granted by the court of king's bench in the name of the king; so called from the initial word.

I thought it my duty to returne our most humble thanks to your grace, for your late seasonable and effectual assistance in reverting the mandamus sent to Oriel-college.

Letter in Warton's Life of Bathurst, p. 100.

MANDARI'N.† n. s. [mandarin, or mandador, a commander, Portuguese: by persons of which country this name was given to Chinese people of distinction; mandar, to command, from the Latin mandare.] A Chinese nobleman or magistrate.

Out of these are chosen all their chief officers, and mandarines both civil and military. Temple.

MA'NDATARY. n. s. [mandataire, Fr. from mandato, Latin.] He to whom the pope has, by his prerogative, and proper right, given a mandate for his benefice.

Ayliffe.

MA'NDATE.† n. s. [mandat, French; mandatum, Latin.]

1. Command.

Her force is not any where so apparent as in express mandates or prohibitions, especially upon advice and consultation going before. Hooker.

The necessity of the times cast the power of the three estates upon himself, that his mandates should pass for laws, whereby he laid what taxes he pleased. Howell, Voc. For.

2. Precept, charge; commission, sent or transmitted.

Who knows,

If the scarce bearded Caesar have not sent

His powerful mandate to you.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

This Moor,

Your special mandate, for the state affairs,

Hath hither brought. Shakespeare, Othello.

He thought the mandate forg'd, your death conceal'd. Dryden.

This dream all powerful Juno sends, I bear

Her mighty mandates, and her words you hear. Dryden.

MANDA'TOR. n. s. [Latin.] Director.

A person is said to be a client to his advocate, but a master and mandator to his proctor.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

MA'NDATORY.† adj. [mandare, Lat.] Preceptive; directory.

MANDRA'GORA.† } n. s. [mandragoras, MA'NDRAKE. } Latin; mandragore, French. manpazopa, Saxon.] A plant.

The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top into several parts; the root is said to bear a resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.

Among other virtues, mandrake has been falsely celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a narcotick of the most powerful kind. Hill, Mat. Med.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan, I would invent as bitter searching terms, As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear.

Shakespeare.

Not poppy, nor mandragora, Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world, Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep.

Shakespeare.

Come, violent death, Serve for mandragora to make me sleep.

Webster, Dutchess of Malfin (1623.)

And shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth,

That living mortals, hearing them, run mad.

Shakespeare.

Go, and catch a falling star, Get with child a mandrake root.

Donne.

MA'NDREL. n. s. [mandrin, French.] An instrument to hold in the lathe the substance to be turned.

Mandrels are made with a long wooden shank, to fit stiff into a round hole that is made in the work, that is to be turned; this mandrel is a shank, or pin mandrel. Mozon.

MA'NDUCABLE.* adj. [from manduco, Lat.] That may be eaten; fit to be eaten.

Not forbearing to eat any manducable creature.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 53.

To MA'NDUCATE.† v. a. [manduco, Lat.] To chew; to eat.

They have joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel, only to shorten a syllable; so that most of the books we see now-a-days, are full of those manglings and abbreviations. Swift.

Inextricable difficulties occur by mangling the sense, and curtailing authors. Baker on Learning.

TO MA'NGLE.* v. a. [mangeln, Germ. manghelen, Teut. "Manghelen het lijn-waet, levigare, complanare, polire lintea." Kilian.] To smooth linen; to calender.

MA'NGLE.* n. s. A rolling-press for smoothing linen; a calender. The instrument in Germany is mandler, mange, and mangel; in Italy mangano, which Florio renders "a kind of press to press buckram, fustian, or dried linen-cloth, to make it have a lustre or gloss." World of Words, 1598.

MA'NGLER.† n. s. [from mangle.] A hacker; one that destroys bunglingly.

Your freethinkers at that rate are the greatest manglers of authors. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 38.

Since after these may rise an impious line,
Coarse manglers of the human face divine;
Paint on, till fate dissolve thy mortal part,
And live and die the monarch of thy art. Tickell.

MA'NGO.† n. s. [mangostan, French. Dr. Johnson. — Kempfer derives the name from the mangoust, or Indian ichneumon, which is said to eat of this root when bitten by the viper named naja; the root being called a remedy against the poison of serpents; and that the plant thus obtained the name of mango from that being the Portuguese name for the mangoust.] A fruit of the East Indies brought to Europe pickled.

The fruit with the husk, when very young, makes a good preserve, and is used to pickle mangoes. Mortimer.

What lord of old wou'd bid his cook prepare Mangoes, potargo, champignons, cavare. King.

MA'NGONEL.* n. s. [mangoneau, old Fr. mangonel, modern; from μαγανον, Gr. a machine.] An engine which threw large stones, and was employed to batter walls. Obsolete.

MA'NGROVE* n. s. A plant which grows in saltwater rivers, both in the East and West Indies.

MA'NGY.† adj. [from mange.] Infected with the mange; scabby.

In wretched beggary,
And maning misery,
In lousy lothsumnesse. Skelton, Poems, p. 81.
Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!
I swoon to see thee. Shakespeare, Timon.

MANHA'TER. n. s. [man and hater.] Misanthrope; one that hates mankind.

MA'NHOOD. n. s. [from man.]

1. Human nature.

In Seth was the church of God established;
from whom Christ descended, as touching his manhood. Raleigh.

Not therefore joins the son
Manhood to Godhead, with more strength to foil Thy enemy. Milton, P. L.

2. Virility; not womanhood.

'Tis in my pow'r to be a sovereign now,
And, knowing more, to make his manhood bow.
Dryden.

3. Virility; not childhood.

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy;
Thy school-days frightful, desp'rate, wild and furious;
Thy prime of manhood daring, bold and venturous. Shakespeare.
By fraud or force the suitor train destroy,
And starting into manhood, scorn the boy.
Pope, Odyssey.

4. Courage; bravery; resolution; fortitude.

Nothing so hard but his valour overcame; which he so guided with virtue, that although no man was spoken of but he for manhood, he was called the courteous Amphialus. Sidney.

MA'NIA.* } n. s. [μᾶνία, Greek; manie, MA'NIE.* } French.] Madness. Our old word is manie. Cockeram.

Mania, the most violent and acute species of delirium, arising from a per-turbation of the imagination and judgement. Chambers.

Scornful she spoke; and, heedless of reply,
The lovely maniac bounded o'er the plain.

Shenstone, Eleg. 16.

MANICHE'AN.* } n. s. [from Manes, a Per-MANICHE'E. } sian, educated among the maji; of whom he was one, before he embraced Christianity.] One of the followers of Manes, who taught that there were two principles of all things, coeternal and coequal, the one good,

the other evil; that two equippollent deities ruled the world; and other gross and impious errors.

The Manichees held man in all things dragged by a necessity of destiny. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 87.

Could the wild Manichean own that guide,
The good would triumph, and the ill subside!
Boyle.

MANICHE'AN.* adj. Relating to the Manicheans.

What has been said is methinks sufficient to ruin the Manichean cause, and exclude the independent principle of evil.

Wollaston, Religion of Nature.

MA'NICHEISM.* n. s. [from Manichee.] The impious doctrine of the Manichees.

Which doctrine of J. S. is condemned by his adversaries, even of Rome, as the pith of Manicheism. Puller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 143.

Bayle — has artfully employed all that force and acuteness of argument, which he certainly possessed, in promoting the gloomy and uncomfortable scheme of scepticism or Manicheism.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

MA'NICHORD.* n. s. [manicordion, Fr. "an old-fashioned clarichord." Cotgrave.]

A musical instrument, like a spinet. It has been confounded with the monochord, as if it were an instrument of one string only. See MONOCHORD. It has taken the name, most probably, from the Lat. manus, the hand, and chord.
Its strings, like those of the clarichord,
were covered with little pieces of cloth, to deaden or soften the sound; whence it is called the dumb spinet; and was much used in nunneries, by reason that the nuns, who were learning to play upon it, might not disturb the silence of other cells. See Grassineau's Mus.
Dict.

MA'NICON.* n. s. [manicon, Lat.] A kind of night-shade; an herb so called from its making people mad.

Bewitch Hermetick men to run
Stark staring mad with manicon. Hudibras, iii. 1.

MA'NIFEST.† adj. [manifestus, Latin.]

1. Plain; open; not concealed; not doubtful; apparent.

They all concur as principles, they all have their forcible operations therein, although not all in like apparent and manifest manner. Hooker.

That which may be known of God is manifest
in them; for God hath shewed it unto them.

Rom. i. 19.

He was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for
you. 1 Pet. i. 20.

He full
Resplendent all his father manifest
Express'd. Milton, P. L.

Thus manifest to sight the God appear'd.
Dryden, Æn.

I saw, I saw him manifest in view,
His voice, his figure, and his gesture knew.
Dryden.

2. Detected; with of.

Calistho there stood manifest of shame,
And, turn'd a bear, the northern star became.
Dryden.

MA'NIFEST.† n. s. [manifeste, Fr. manifesto, Italian.] Declaration; publick protest-
ation.

You authentick witnesses I bring,
Of this my manifest: that never more
This hand shall combat on the crooked shore.

Dryden.

A manifest, shewing the reasons for declaring war against the king of Sweden.

Book, so entitled, fol. publ. in 1675.

To MA'NIFEST. v. a. [manifeste, French; manifesto, Lat.] To make appear; to make publick; to shew plainly; to discover.

Thy life did manifest, thou lov'd'st me not;
And thou wilt have me die assured of it.

Shakespeare.

He that loveth me I will love him, and mani- fest myself to him. St. John, xiv. 21.

He was pleased himself to assume, and manifest his will in our flesh, and so not only as God from heaven, but God visible on earth, to preach reformation among us. Hammond.

This perverse commotion
Must manifest thee worthiest to be heir
Of all things. Milton, P. L.

Were he not by law withstood,
He'd manifest his own inhuman blood.

Dryden, Jew.

It may be part of our employment in eternity, to contemplate the works of God, and give him
the glory of his wisdom manifested in the creation.

Ray on Creation.

MANIFESTABLE.* See MANIFESTIBLE.

MANIFESTA'TION. n. s. [manifestation, Fr.;
from manifest.] Discovery; publication; clear evidence.

Though there be a kind of natural right in the noble, wise and virtuous, to govern them which are of servile disposition; nevertheless, for mani- festation of this their right, the assent of them who are to be governed seemeth necessary. Hooker.

As the nature of God is excellent, so likewise is it to know him in those glorious manifestations of himself in the works of creation and providence.

Tillotson.

The secret manner in which acts of mercy ought to be performed, requires this public manifestation of them at the great day.

Atterbury.

MANIE'FESTIBLE.† adj. [properly manifeste- able, Dr. Johnson observes. And so the learned Henry More writes it. Dr.
Johnson cites only Sir T. Brown.] Easy to be made evident.

This is manifestible in long and thin plates of steel perforated in the middle, and equilibrated.

Brown.

There is no other way than this that is mani- festable either by Scripture, reason, or experience.
More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 241.

MA'NIFESTLY. adv. [from manifest.] Clearly; evidently; plainly.

We see manifestly, that sounds are carried with wind. Bacon.

Sects, in a state, seem to be tolerated because they are already spread, while they do not mani- festly endanger the constitution. Swift.

MA'NIFESTNESS. n. s. [from manifest.]
Perspicuity; clear evidence.

MANIFE'STO. n. s. [Italian.] Publick protestation; declaration.

manigfealb.]

1. Of different kinds; many in number;
multiplied; complicated.

When his eyes did her behold,
Her heart did seem to melt in pleasures manifold.
Spenser.

Terror of the torments manifold,
In which the damned souls he did behold. Spenser.
If that the king
Have any way your good deserts forgot,
Which he confesseth to be manifold,
He bids you name your griefs.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
If any man of quality will maintain upon Edward earl of Gloucester, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear.
They receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting.

St. Luke, xviii. 30.
To represent to the life the manifold use of friendship, see how many things a man cannot do himself.

Bacon, Ess.
My scope in this experiment is manifold. Boyle.
We are not got further than the borders of the mineral kingdom, so very ample is it, so various and manifold its productions. Woodward, Nat. Hist.
2. Milton has an uncommon use of it.

They not obeying
Incurr'd, what cou'd they less? the penalty;
And manifold in sin deserv'd to fall. Milton, P. L.

MAN'IFOLDED. adj. [many and fold.] Having many complications or doubles.
His puissant arms about his noble breast,
And manifold shield, he bound about his wrist.
Spenser, F. Q.

MAN'IFOLDLY. adv. [manifealbhce, Sax.] In a manifold manner.

They were manifoldly acknowledged the saviors of that country. Sidney.
The scarfs and the bannerets about thee did manifoldly dissuade me from believing thee a ship of too great a burthen. Shakespeare, All's Well.

MAN'IFOLDNESS. n. s. [from manifold.] State of being manifold; multiplicity.

Sherwood.
MAN'IGLIONS. n. s. pl. [in gunnery.] Two handles on the back of a piece of ordnance, cast after the German form.

Bailey.
MAN'IHOT. n. s. A plant in the West Indies. Miller, and Mason.

The manioc grows to the size of a large shrub, or small tree, and produces roots somewhat resembling parsnips. After carefully squeezing out the juice, these roots are grated down to a fine powder, and formed into cakes, called cassada bread. — One species of manioc is altogether free of any poisonous quality, and may be eaten without any preparation, but that of roasting it in the embers. Robertson.

MAN'ILIO. n. s. A kind of ring or bracelet worn by persons in Africa and Asia.

Their arms and legs are chained with manillos and armolets of silver, brass, ivory, and the like. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 114.

Dering on the Ep. to the Heb. (1576); Cc. iii.
Their stoles, maniples, vestments.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 27.

MAN'IPULAR. adj. [from manipulus, Lat.] Relating to a maniple.

MANIPULATION. n. s. [manipulatio, Lat. by bands or companies, or in heaps.] In mines, the manner of digging silver out of the earth.

MAN'IKILLING. n. s. [man and kill.] Used to kill men.

Cursed be the poet, who first honoured, with the name of a hero, a mere Ajax, a mankilling idiot. Dryden, Ded. to the D. of Ormond.

MANK'LLER. n. s. [man and killer.] Murderer.

To kill mankillers man has lawful power,
But not the extended licence to devour.

Dryden, Fab.

MANKIND. n. s. [man and kind. Sax. mancynn. The poets have sometimes placed the accent on the first syllable of mankind. Shakspeare affords an example in the adjective, and Milton in the substantive.]

1. The race or species of human beings.

From them I will not hide
My judgements, how with mankind I proceed;
As how with peccant angels late they saw.

Milton, P. L.

Erewhile perplex'd with thoughts what would become

Of me and all mankind; but now I see
His day, in whom all nations shall be blest.

Milton, P. L.

Plato witnesseth, that soon after mankind began to increase, they built many cities.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

All mankind alike require their grace,
All born to want; a miserable race. Pope, Odys.

2. Humanity. Not in use.

You, whose minds are good,
And have not forc'd all mankind from your breasts
That yet have so much stock of virtue left,
To pity guilty states, when they are wretched;
Lend your soft ears to hear, and eyes to weep,
Deeds done by men beyond the acts of furies.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

MAN'KIND. adj. [man, Sax. denotes wickedness, as well as man.] Resembling man not woman in form or nature; masculine; often applied by our old poets to the female sex in a bad sense, and in some parts of England still denoting violent, ferocious, women. Sometimes it is an epithet for a ferocious man. In the sense of mischievous, it was also formerly applied to beasts.

He saw mighty deere, that seemed to be mankind, which ranne at him.

Frobisher, First Voyage, (1578), p. 48.

A mankind witch! Hence with her, out o' door:
A most intelligencing bawd. Shakspeare, Wind. Tale.
Pallas, nor thee, I call on, mankind maid!

B. Jonson, For. Song, 10.

Are women grown so mankind?

Beaumont and Fl. Woman-Hater.

See, see this mankind strumpet. Fairfax, Tass.

Good signior Cornelio, be not too mankind against your wife. Chapman, All Fools.

MA'NLIKE. adj. [man and like.]
1. Having the complexion and proper qualities of man.

Such a right manlike man, as nature, often erring, yet shews she would fain make. Sidney.
He fishes, drinks, and wastes

The lamp of night in revels: is not more manlike Than Cleopatra. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Under his forming hand a creature grew,

2. Becoming a man.
Civil manlike exercise, which might stir up, and discipline, and ripen the strength they have.

Hammond, Works, iv. 561.

MA'NLESS. adj. [man and less.]
1. Without men; not manned.

Sir Walter Raleigh was wont to say, the Spaniards were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more but a stratagem of fire-boats manless, and sent upon the armads at Calais by the favour of the wind in the night, that put them in such terror, as they cut their cables. Bacon.

2. Unbecoming a man.

That pusillanimity and manless subjugation. Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653), p. 82.

MA'NLINESS. n. s. [from manly.] Dignity; bravery; stoutness.

Feed your wrath, sir, rather than your lust;
It is a vice comes nearer manliness.

B. Jonson, Fox.

If men want manliness to expostulate the right of their due ransom. Milton, Tetrachordon.

Young master, willing to shew himself a man, lets himself loose to all irregularities; and thus courts credit and manliness in the casting off the modesty he has till then been kept in. Locke.

MA'NLING. n. s. [from man.] A little man.

Augustus often called him his witty manling, for the littleness of his stature.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

MA'NLV. adj. [from man.]

1. Manlike; becoming a man; firm; brave; stout; undaunted; undismayed.

As did Eneas old Anchises bear,
So I bear thee upon my manly shoulders. Shakspeare.
Lets briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet i'th' hall together. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Serene and manly, harden'd to sustain
The load of life, and exercis'd in pain.

Dryden, Jus.

See great Marcellus! how inur'd in toils,
He moves with manly grace. Dryden, Æn.

2. Not womanish; not childish.

I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

MA'NLV. adv. [from man.] With courage like a man.

MA'NNA. n. s. [Hebrew.]

Manna is properly a gum, and is honey-like juice concreted into a solid form, seldom so dry but it adheres to the fingers: its colour is whitish, or brownish, and it has sweetness, and with it a sharpness that renders it agreeable: manna is the product of two different trees, both varieties of the ash: when the heats are free from rain, these trees exsude a white honey juice, which concretes into what we call manna. It is but lately that the world were convinced of the mistake of manna being an aerial produce, by an experiment being made by covering a tree with sheets in the manna season, and the finding as much manna on it afterwards as on those which were open to the air and dew.

Hill.

It would be well inquired, whether manna doth fall but upon certain herbs or leaves only.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The manna in heaven will suit every man's palate.

Locke.

MA'NNER.† n. s. [maniere, French.]

1. Form; method.

In my divine Emilia make me blest,

Find thou the manner, and the means prepare,

Possession, more than conquest, is my care.

Dryden.

2. Custom; habit; fashion.

As the manner of some is.

Heb. x. 25.

3. Certain degree.

This universe we have posset, and rul'd
In manner at our will, the affairs of earth.

Milton, P. R.

Augustinus does in a manner confess the charge.

Baker.

4. Sort; kind.

All manner of men assembled here in arms against God's peace and the king's: we charge you to repair to your dwelling places.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable,

Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

Shakespeare.

What manner of men were they whom ye slew?

Judges.

The city may flourish in trade, and all manner of outward advantages.

Atterbury.

5. Formerly, in the precedingsense, without of. In modern editions of the Bible, of has been foisted in, where this old form occurs in Leviticus. Notwithstanding Dr. Johnson's omission of this usage of manner, I should not have expected, in some recent editions of our authorized version of the Scriptures, the alteration of a particular expression which our venerable translators thought proper to repeat; at least not till a new version had been allowed.

A maner Latin corrupt was her speche.

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.

Three maner wayes Almighty God delecth with synners.

Ye shall eat no manner fat of ox, of sheep, or of goat.

Levit. vii. 23.

This is the law for all manner plague of leprosy.

Levit. xiv. 54.

6. Mien; cast of the look.

Air and manner are more expressive than words.

Richardson, Clarissa.

Some men have a native dignity in their manner, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands.

Richardson, Clarissa.

7. Peculiar way; distinct mode of persons.

It can hardly be imagined how great a difference was in the humour, disposition, and manner, of the army under Essex, and the other under Waller.

Clarendon.

Some few touches of your lordship, which I have endeavoured to express after your manner, have made whole poems of mine to pass with approbation.

Dryden, Jun.

As man is known by his company, so a man's company may be known by his manner of expressing himself.

Swift.

8. Way; mode: of things.

The temptations of prosperity insinuate themselves after a gentle, but very powerful, manner.

Atterbury.

9. In the plural: character of the mind.

His principles are as much distinguished by their manners as by their dominions; and even those among them, whose characters seem wholly made up of courage, differ from one another as to the particular kinds.

Addison.

10. In the plural: general way of life; morals; habits.

The kinds of musick have most operation upon manners: as, to make them warlike, to make them soft and effeminate.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Every fool carries more or less in his face the signature of his manners, more legible in some than others.

L'Estrange.

We bring our manners to the blest abodes,
And think what pleases us must please the gods.

Dryden.

11. In the plural: ceremonious behaviour; studied civility.

The time will not allow the compliment,

Which very manners urge.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,

That so neglected you.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Our griefs and not our manners reason now.

Shakespeare.

Ungracious wretch,

Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves,

Where manners ne'er were preach'd.

Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Good manners bound her to invite

The stranger dame to be her guest that night.

Dryden.

None but the careless and the confident would rush rudely into the presence of a great man: and shall we, in our applications to the great God, take that to be religion, which the common reason of mankind will not allow to be manners?

South.

Your passion bends

Its force against your nearest friends;

Which manners, decency, and pride,

Have taught you from the world to hide.

Swift.

12. To take in or with the MANNER. To catch in the actual commission of a crime; to be caught in the fact. [written mainour, in our old law-books; from the French manier, to seize with the hand; though a learned friend observes that mainour, as Hawkins writes the word, is proper; that a thief taken in the manner is said, in our old statutes, to be "pris ove maynoure," 1 Hen. 4. c. 20.; and that it is probably from the old Norman word manouvrer, to hold or occupy. Kelham gives the ancient French expression thus; "ove manour, with the mainour, as the goods in their hands."] The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquetta: the manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

And there be no witness against her, neither she be taken with the manner.

Nam. v. 13.

If I melt into melancholy while I write, I shall be taken in the manner; and I sit by one too tender to these impressions.

Donne, Lett.

To MA'NNER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To instruct in morals; to form; "to be man-nered, imbui bonis moribus."

Hulot.

Beseeching you

To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born.

The truest manner'd, such a holy with,
That he enchants societies to him.

Shaksp. Cymb.

MA'NNERIST.* n. s. [from manner.] An artist who performs all his works in one unvaried manner.

Not such a likeness, as, through Hayman's works,

(Dull mannerist,) in Christians, Jews, and Turks, Cloys with a sameness.

Churchill, Gotham.

MA'NNERLINESS. n. s. [from mannerly.] Civility; ceremonious complaisance.

Others out of mannerliness and respect to God, though they deny this universal soul of the universe, yet have devised several systems of the universe.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

MA'NNERLY. adj. [from manner.] Civil; ceremonious; complaisant.

Tut; tut; here's a mannerly forbearance.

Shakespeare.

Let me have

What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly.

Shakespeare.

Fools make a mock at sin, affront the God whom we serve, and vilify religion; not to oppose them, by whatever mannerly names we may palliate the offence, is not modesty but cowardice, and a traitorous desertion of our allegiance to Christ.

Rogers.

MA'NNERLY.† adv. Civilly; without rudeness; ceremoniously.

When we've supp'd,

We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story.

He mannerly desired him to depart in kindness, as he came.

Better it is to lap one's pottage like a dog, than to eat it mannerly, with a spoon of the devil's giving.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 352.

MA'NNIKIN.† n. s. [manneken, Teut. mannequin, French. See MANIKIN.] A little man; a dwarf.

MA'NNISH.† adj. [from man.]

1. Human; belonging to the human species.

It was a figure

Most liche to mannish creature;

But as of beaute heavenlyche,

It was most to an angell liche.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

The proverbe sayth; for to don sinne is mannish, but certes to persevere long in sinne is werke of the devil.

Chaucer, Tale of Melibee.

2. Having the appearance of a man; bold; masculine; impudent.

Nature hath proportioned her without any fault; yet altogether seemed not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in; the reason whereof might seem a mannish countenance, which overthrow that lovely sweetness, the noblest power of woman-kind, far fitter to prevail by parley than by battle.

Suitney.

A woman, impudent and mannish grown,
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man.

Shakespeare.

When mannish Mevia, that two-handed whore,
Astride on horseback hunts the Tuscan boar.

Dryden.

MANEU'VRE.* n. s. [Fr.; manouvrier, a handicraft-man; manovra, Ital. manopera, low Latin, i. e. manis opera.] Originally in the French language, the service of a vassal to his lord; then, an operation of military tactics, a stratagem, in which sense we use it, and apply it also to naval skill in managing a ship; and thence any kind of management.

Thus to make them the principal, not the secondary theatre of their manœuvres for securing a determined majority in parliament.

Burke, Speech on the Duration of Parliaments.

TO MANŒUVRE.* v. n. [from the noun; manouvreur, Norm. Fr. 'to hold.'] To manœuvre military or naval tactics skillfully; to carry on any operation adroitly.

MA'NOR. n. s. [manoir, old French; manerium, low Latin; maner, Armorick.]

Manor signifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of these manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass of ground granted by the king to some man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required: and that afterwards this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, injoining them again such services and rents as he thought good: and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the inferiors became tenants to him: but those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these mansions and lands so given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeited them to the king; and thereby they still remain in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others. But whosoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In these days, a manor rather signifies a jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site: for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Cowell.

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Ev'n now forsake me; and of all my lands
Is nothing left me? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Kinsmen of mine,
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly. O many Have broke their backs with laying manors on them

For this great journey. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

MA'NOR-HOUSE.* n. s. The house of *MA'NOR-SEAT. the lord or owner of the manor.

Hail the poor muses' richest manor-seat!

Cowley.
I am of opinion that this family of De Williams-scot took its name from Williamscoot, commonly called Williscoot, a hamlet in the parish of Cro-prey, near Banbury, where is still an ancient manor-house. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 36.

MA'NORIAL.* adj. [from manor.] Belonging to a manor; denoting a manor.

MA'NQUELLER.† n. s. [Sax. mançpellepe, from man and çpellan.] A murderer;
a mankiller; a manslayer.

He sent a manqueller, and commaundeth that
Jones head were brought in a dish.

Wicliffe, St. Mark, vi. 27.

This was not Kayne the manqueller, but one of a gentler spirit and milder sex, to wit, a woman.
Carew.

MANSE.† n. s. [manse, old French; man-sio, Lat.]

1. Farm and land.

This lady died at her capital manse at Fencot near Bicester, in the year 1111.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 30.

2. A parsonage house.

Finding a manse or parsonage-house wanting,
he offered 200l. toward providing one.

Life of Bp. Kennet, p. 50.

Donations of glebes and *manse*s were made.
Ornaments of Churches considered, (1761,) p. 89.

MA'NSION. n. s. [mansio, Latin.]

1. The lord's house in a manor.

2. Place of residence; abode; house.

All these are but ornaments of that divine spark within you, which being descended from heaven, could not elsewhere pick out so sweet a mansion. Sidney.

A fault no less grievous, if so be it were true, than if some king should build his mansion-house
by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles in a place,
From whence himself does fly? he loves us not.
Shakespeare.

Thy mansion wants thee, Adam, rise
First man, of men innumerable ordain'd;
First father! call'd by thee, I come thy guide
To the garden of bliss, thy seat prepar'd.

Milton, P. L.

A mansion is provided thee; more fair
Than this, and worthy Heaven's peculiar care,
Not fram'd of common earth. Dryden.

3. Residence; abode.

These poets near our princes sleep,
And in one grave their mansions keep. Denham.

TO MA'NSION.* v. n. [from the noun.]
To dwell as in a mansion.

Visible as the clouds of heaven, and other meteors; as also the rest of the creatures mansioning therein.

Mede, Paraphr. of St. Peter, (1642,) p. 16.

MA'NSIONRY.* n. s. [from mansion.] Place of residence. Not in use.

The temple-haunting martlet does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that the heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

MA'NSLAUGHTER. n. s. [man and slaughter.]
1. Murder; destruction of the human species.

The whole pleasure of that book standeth in open manslaughter and bold bawdry.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils, with infinite
Manslaughter, shall be held the highest pitch
Of human glory. Milton, P. L.

2. [In law.] The act of killing a man not wholly without fault, though without malice: punished by forfeiture.

When a man, throwing at a cock, killed a bystander, I ruled it manslaughter. Foster.

MA'NSLAYER.† n. s. [*man*plaz, Saxon.]
One that has killed another.

Cities for refuge for the manslayer.

Numb. xxxv. 6.

The foul blood of a wicked manslayer.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 2. C. 1.

MA'NSTEALER.* [man and steal.] One that steals and sells men.

For manstealers, for liars, for perjured persons,
1 Tim. i. 10.

MA'NSTEALING.* part. adj. Stealing men,
in order to sell them.

Manstealing Tartars, who plentifully furnish the Turkish dominion [with slaves].

Brown, Trav. (1685,) p. 49.

MA'NSUETE.† adj. [mansuetus, Latin.
The word is very old in our language, and not applied merely to animals in the sense of tame, and the like, as the solitary instance given from Ray by Dr. Johnson might induce the reader to suppose.] Mild; gentle; goodnatured;
tame; not ferocious; not wild.

She said eke, she was fain with him to mete,
And stode forth still, mild, muet, and mansuete.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. v. 194.

This holds not only in domestic and mansuete birds; for then it might be thought the effect of curation or institution, but also in the wild.

Ray on the Creation.

MA'NSUETUDE.† n. s. [mansuetudo, Fr.;
mansuetudo, Lat.] Mildness; gentleness; tameness. Dr. Johnson has unjustly confined this word also to animals.

Arm in arm with magnificence goeth magnanimity, waited upon by mansuetude.

Bryskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606,) p. 228.

Mansuetude, or mildness, tempereth the fury of anger. Ibid. p. 228.

I use all mildness or mansuetude in admonishing. Hammond of Fraternit. Admonit. § 15.

The angry lion did present his paw,
Which by consent was given to mansuetude;
The fearful hare her ears, which by their law
Humility did reach to fortitude. Herbert.

TO MA'NSWEAR. See TO MAINSWEAR.

MA'NTEL.† n. s. [mantel, old French; or rather the German word mantel. "Ger-manis mantel non pallium modò significat, sed etiam id omne quod aliud circumdat: hinc murus arcis atque structura quæ focum investit mantel ipsis dicitur." V. Ducange in V. MAN-TUM.] Work raised before a chimney to conceal it, whence the name, which originally signifies a cloak. See MAN-TLE.

From the Italians we may learn how to raise fair mantels within the rooms, and how to disguise
the shafts of chimnies. Wotton, Architecture.

If you break any china on the mantletree or cabinet, gather up the fragments. Swift.

MA'NTELET.† n. s. [manetelet, French.]

1. A small cloak worn by women. Dr.
Johnson says. It was also a short mantle worn by men.

A manetelet upon his shoulders hanging.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. [In fortification.] A kind of movable penthouse, made of pieces of timber sawed into planks, which being about three inches thick, are nailed one over another to the height of almost six feet:
they are generally cased with tin, and set upon little wheels; so that in a siege they may be driven before the pioneers, and serve as blinds to shelter them from the enemy's small shot; there are other manetelets covered on the top, whereof the miners make use to approach the walls of a town or castle.

Harris.

MANTI'GER.† n. s. [not from man and tiger, as Dr. Johnson pronounces it;
but a misapprehension of the Lat. man-

tichora, Fr. manticore, which means a furious beast of a very different kind. "That word (man-tiger), replied Martin, is a corruption of the manticora of the ancients, the most noxious animal that ever infested the earth," &c. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl. Mantiger is sometimes written mantegar.] A large monkey or baboon.

Near there was placed—the black prince of Monomotapas; by whose side were seen the glaring cat-a-mountain, and the man-mimicking mantiger. Arbuthnot and Pope.

MAN'TLE.† n. s. [mæntel, Saxon; mantel, old French; mantellum, Latin, supposed to be from the Greek μανθός, a word adopted from the Persian, and denoting a kind of military vestment. See also MANDIL.] A kind of cloak or garment thrown over the rest of the dress.

We, well-cover'd with the night's black mantle, At unawares may beat down Edward's guard, And seize himself. Shakespeare, Hen. VI. Poor Tom drinks the green mantle of the standing pool. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The day begins to break, and night is fled, Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.

Their actions were disguised with mantles, very usual in times of disorder, of religion and justice.

The herald and children are clothed with mantles of satin; but the herald's mantle is strewn with gold. Bacon. By which the beauty of the earth appears, The divers colour'd mantle which she wears.

Before the sun, Before the heavens thou wert, and at the voice Of God, as with a mantle didst invest The rising world of waters dark and deep, Won from the void and formless infinite.

Upon loosening of his mantle the eggs fell from him at unawares, and the eagle was a third time defeated.

Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd, With kind concern and skill has weav'd A silken web; and ne'er shall fade Its colours; gently has he laid The mantle o'er thy sad distress, And Venus shall the texture bless. A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew, That set the unhappy Phaeton to view; The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd, And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd.

To MAN'TLE† v. a. [from the noun; manteler, old French.] To cloke; to cover; to disguise.

The mantled meadows mourne; Their sundry colours tourne,

As the morning steals upon the night, Melting the darkness; so their rising senses, Begin to chase the ign'rant fumes that mantle Their clearer reason.

I left them, I'th' filthy mantled pool beyond your cell, There dancing up to th' chins.

To MAN'TLE† v. n. [the original of the signification of this word is not plain. Skinner considers it as relative to the expansion of a mantle: as, the hawk mantleth; she spreads her wings like a mantle.]

1. To spread the wings as a hawk in pleasure.

The swan with arched neck, Between her white wings mantling, rows Her state with oary feet. Milton, P. L.

2. To joy; to revel. My frail fancy fed with full delight Doth bathe in bliss, and mantleth most at ease; Ne thinks of other heaven, but how it might Her heart's desire with most contentment please.

3. To be expanded; to spread luxuriantly. The pair that clad Each shoulder broad, came mantling o'er his breast

With regal ornament. Milton, P. L. The mantling vine Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps Luxuriant.

I saw them under a green mantling vine, That crawls along the side of yon small hill, Plucking ripe clusters. Milton, Comus. You'll sometimes meet a fop of nicest tread, Whose mantling peruke veils his empty head.

And where his mazy waters flow, He gave the mantling vine to grow A trophy to his love. Fenton, Ode to Lord Gower.

4. To gather any thing on the surface; to froth. There are a sort of men whose visages Do cream and mantle like a standing pond; And do a wilful silliness entertain, With purpose to be drest in an opinion Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit.

It drinketh fresh, flowereth, and mantleth exceedingly. Bacon. From plate to plate your eye-balls roll, And the brain dances to the mantling bowl.

5. To ferment; to be in sprightly agitation. When mantling blood Flow'd in his lovely cheeks; when his bright eyes Sparkled with youthful fires; when every grace Shone in the father, which now crowns the son.

MAN'TLING.* n. s. In heraldry, the representation of a mantle, or any drapery, that is drawn about a coat of arms.

MAN'TO.* n. s. [Italian.] A robe; a cloak.

He presents him with a white horse, a manto or black coole, [cow], a pastoral staff, &c. Ricaut, State of the Gr. Ch. p. 96.

MAN'TUA.† n. s. [this is perhaps corrupted from manteau, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—It may be from the Greek μανθός, or μανθός, as mantle is. See MANTLE. But Richelet's explanation of manteau must not be overpassed: "Manteau de femme; sorte de longue robe plissée que portent les femmes." Dict. Fr. 1685.] A lady's gown.

Not Cynthia, when her mantua's pinn'd awry, E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair, As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravish'd hair. Pope. How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappets, ruffles, and mantuas. Swift.

MAN'TUAMAKER. n. s. [mantua and maker.] One who makes gowns for women.

By profession a mantua-maker: I am employed by the most fashionable ladies.

Poor captives manumis'd, and matchless horse.

Waller.

MANUMISSION. n. s. [manumission, Fr.; manumissio, Latin.] The act of giving liberty to slaves.

Slaves wore iron rings until their manumission or preferment.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The pileus was somewhat like a night-cap, as the symbol of liberty, given to slaves at their manumission.

Arbuthnot.

TO MANUMIT. † v. a. [manumitto, Latin.] To release from slavery. This is a word of older and better authority than manumise; and is what has obtained in modern times.

If a man doth manumit his handmaid under a condition that she shall never marry, yet she may marry. Dr. Taylor in Fox's Acts and Monuments.

Come, manumit thy plummy pinion.

Marston, Sat. (1598.) S. 4.

Lungs, I will manumit thee from the surface.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

The whole creature — doth groan, and as it were travail in pain, until it be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and manumitted or set free to partake of the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

Spencer on Prodigies, p. 67.

Manumit and release him from those drudgeries to vice, under which those remain who live without God.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Thou wilt beneath the burthen bow,
And glad receive the manumitting blow
On thy shav'd slavish head.

Dryden, Jew.

But I shall observe in general, that inclosures may be traced backward to causes operating in very distant periods: to the rebellious barons in the twelfth century, who manumitted their vassals and gave them free land, in order to conciliate their interest against the king.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 26.

A pack of manumitted slaves.

Burke, Speech for the Relief of Protestant Dissenters.

MANURAGE. * n. s. [from manure.] Cultivation.

This isle had Britaine unto name;
And, with his Trojans, Brute began manurage of the same.

Warner, Albion's England.

MANURANCE. † n. s. [from manure.] Agriculture; cultivation. An obsolete word, worthy of revival, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Spenser; which might lead one to suppose, that no other authority could be found for it. But it is a word well authorized.

Corn and cattle for the only manurance, tillage, and pasturage of such farms.

Acts of Parl. 21 Hen. VIII. c. xiii. § 8.

Although there none of them fall by the sword, yet they being kept from manurance, and their cattle from running abroad, by this hard restraint they would quickly devour one another.

Spenser on Ireland.

The more sweetness he will find in putting forward manurance and husbanding of the grounds.

Bacon on the Plantation in Ireland, (1606.)

TO MANURE. v. a. [manouvreur, Fr.]

2. Retinue of servants; household; family.
[old French, magnie, mainsie, mesnie, meinie, a family: in this sense the Saxon is not found.] It is more properly written meiny. See MEINY.

His mainie, which that herden this affray,
Came leping in. Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.
The kings before their many rode. Dryden.

3. Many, when it is used before a singular noun, seems to be a substantive. In conversation, for many a man they say a many men. In the north of England a many, and a many people, is common. Thou art a collop of my flesh,
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear.

He is beset with enemies, the meanest of which is not without many and many a way to the wreaking of a malice. L'Estrange, Fab.

Broad were their collars too, and every one Was set about with many a costly stone. Dryden.
Many a child can have the distinct clear ideas of two and three long before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

4. Many is used much in composition. MA'NYCOLOURED. adj. [many and colour.]
Having various colours.

Hail manycoloured messenger, that ne'er Do'st disobey the voice of Jupiter, Shakespeare, Tempest.
He hears not me, but on the other side
A manycoloured d peacock having spied,
Leaves him and me. Donne.

The hoary majesty of spades appears;
Puts forth one manly leg, to sight reveal'd,
The rest his manycoloured d robe conceal'd. Pope.

- MA'NYCORNERED. adj. [many and corner.]*
Polygonal; having corners more than twelve: the geometricians have particular names for angular figures up to those of twelve corners.

Search those manycorner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds. Dryden.

- MA'NYHEADED. adj. [many and head.]*
Having many heads.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the manyheaded tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Musidorus their chief. Sidney.
The proud Duccesa came High mounted on her manyheaded beast. Spenser, F. Q.

The manyheaded beast hath broke,
Or shaken from his head, the royal yoke. Denham.

Those were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood to subdue
The hydra of the manyheaded hissing crew. Dryden.

- MA'NYLANGUED. adj. [many and language.]* Having many languages.
Seek Atrides on the Spartan shore;
He, wandering long, a wider circle made,
And manyanguag'd nations has survey'd. Pope, Odyssey.

- MA'NYPEOPLED. adj. [many and people.]*
Numerously populous.

He from the manypeopled city flies;
Contemns their labours, and the drivers' cries. Sandys.

- MA'NYTIMES*, an adverbial phrase. Often; frequently.

They are Roman catholic in the device and legend, which are both manytimes taken out of the Scriptures. Addison.

- MAP. n. s. [mappa, low Latin.]* A geographical picture on which lands and seas are delineated according to the longitude and latitude.

Zelmane earnestly entreated Dorus, that he would bestow a map of his little world upon her, that she might see whether it were troubled with such uninhabitable climes of cold despairs, and hot rages, as hers was. Sidney.

I will take the map of Ireland, and lay it before me, and make mine eyes my schoolmasters, to give my understanding to judge of your plot. Spenser on Ireland.

Old coins are like so many maps for explaining the ancient geography. Addison on Anc. Coins.
O'er the map my finger taught to stray,
Cross many a region marks the winding way;
From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a mere geographer by love. Tickell.

- TO MAP.† v. a. [from the noun.]* To delineate; to set down.

I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisano give mapp'd it right. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

He thinks it not needful to map out before the traveller every town and village of all the shires, through which he should pass; but only sets down those that lie in his road. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 387.

- MA'PLE tree. n. s. [acer.]*

The maple tree hath jagged or angular leaves; the seeds grow two together in hard-winged vessels: there are several species; the greater maple is falsely called the sycamore tree: the common maple is frequent in hedge-rows. Miller.

The platane round,
The carver holme, the maple seldom inward sound. Spenser, F. Q.

Of the rottenest maple wood burnt to ashes they make a strong lyc. Mortimer, Husbandry.

- MA'PPERY. n. s. [from map.]* The art of planning and designing. Hanmer.

The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike
When fitness calls them on;
They call this bedwork, mappery, closet war. Shakespeare.

- TO MAP. v. a. [amýpnan, Saxon, from mar, damage, loss.]* To injure; to spoil; to hurt; to mischief; to damage.

Loss is no shame, nor to be less than foe,
But to be less than himself, doth mar
Both loser's lot, and victor's praise also. Spenser, F. Q.

The master may here only stumble, and perchance fall in teaching, to the marring and maiming of the scholar in learning. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

When priests are more in words than matter,
When brewers mar their malt with water. Shaksp.

I pray you mar no more trees with writing songs in their barks.
—I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favourably. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Beware thine honour, be not then disgrac'd,
Take care thou mar not when thou think'st to mend. Fairfax.

Aumarle became the man that all did mar,
Whether through indiscretion, chance, or worse. Daniel.

The ambition to prevail in great things is less harmful than that other, to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and mars business, when great in dependencies. Bacon, Essays.

O! could we see how cause from cause doth spring!

How mutually they link'd and folded are:
And hear how oft one disagreeing string
The harmony doth rather make than mar! Davies.

Ire, envy, and despair,
Marr'd all his borrow'd visage, and betray'd
Him counterfeit. Milton, P. L.

Had she been there, untimely joy through all Men's hearts diffus'd, had marr'd the funeral. Waller.

Mother!
'Tis much unsafe my sire to disobey:
Not only you provoke him to your cost,
But mirth is marr'd, and the good cheer is lost. Dryden.

Pope—has not only misrepresented the story but marred the character of the poem.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 390.

- MAR.* n. s.*

1. A blot; an injury. [from the verb.]
My will to write shall match the mar I make in this, [the letter.] Ascham, Lett. (1551.)

2. [Mir, Goth. mare; myra, Su. palus. Serenius.] A mere or small lake. North. Grose.

MARAN'ATHA. n. s. [Syriack.] It signifies, the Lord comes, or, the Lord is come: it was a form of the denouncing or anathematizing among the Jews. St. Paul pronounces, If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha, which is as much as to say, May'st thou be devoted to the greatest of evils, and to the utmost severity of God's judgements; may the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of thy crimes. Calmet.

MARA'SMUS. n. s. [μαρασμὸς, from μαρῶν.] A consumption, in which persons waste much of their substance. Quincy.

Pining atrophy,

A marasmus imports a consumption following a fever; a consumption or withering of the body by reason of a natural extinction of the native heat, and an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat. Harvey.

MARA'UDER. n. s. [maradeur, French, from the old word maraud, a scoundrel, a rogue, a vagabond a beggar. Cotgrave.* It has been pretended that the word has its name from a Count de Merodé, a brutal and licentious officer, in the time of Gustavus Adolphus, and that it should be written merodeurs. Harte's Life of Gustavus Adolphus, vol. ii. p. 70. But the word was common long before that time, as the dictionary of Cotgrave shews. Roquefort cites the still more ancient French word marander, i. e. "marauder, chercher à voler, à escroquer, chercher des aventures, chercher de quoi vivre; les soldats dise encore, aller en marade, ou marader, pour piller, escroquer." Marauder is therefore the orthography. Coles has marrow for a knave or beggarly rascal. Dict. 1685. A plunderer; a pillager.

We ought to write merodeurs, [from the pretended etymology of Merodé], and not maraders. Harte, Hist. of Gust. Adolphus.

MARA'UDING. adj. [marauder, French.]* Roving about in quest of plunder; robbing; destroying.

MARAVE'DI. n. s. [Arab.]* A small Spanish copper coin, of less value than our farthing.

MAR'BLE. n. s. [marbre, French; marmor, Latin.]

1. Stone used in statues and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in a strong heat calcining into lime.

He plies her hard, and much rain wears the marble. Shakespeare.

Thou marble hew'd st, ere long to part with breath,
And houses rear'd st, unmindful of thy death. Sandys.

Some dry their corn infected with the brine,
Then grind with marbles, and prepare to dine.

Dryden.

The two flat sides of two pieces of marble will more easily approach each other, between which there is nothing but water or air, than if there be a diamond between them; not that the parts of the diamond are more solid, but because the parts of water being more easily separable, give way to the approach of the two pieces of marble. Locke.

2. Little balls supposed to be of marble, with which children play.

Marbles taught them percussion, and the laws of motion; nut-crackers the use of the lever.

Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. A stone remarkable for the sculpture or inscription; as, the Oxford marbles.

MA'RBLE. adj.

1. Made of marble.

Pygmalion's fate revers'd is mine,
His marble love took flesh and blood,
All that I worship'd as divine,
That beauty, now 'tis understood,
Appears to have no more of life,
Than that whereof he fram'd his wife. Waller.

2. Variegated, or stained like marble.

Shall I see far-fetched inventions? shall I labour to lay marble colours over my ruinous thoughts?
or rather, though the pureness of my virgin-mind be stained, let me keep the true simplicity of my word.

Sidney.

The appendix shall be printed by itself, stitched, and with a marble cover. Swift.

To MA'RBLE. v. a. [marbrer, Fr. from the noun.] To variegate, or vein like marble.

Very well sleeked marbled paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall with an equal diffusion. Boyle.

Marian

Marbled with sage the hardening cheese she press'd,
And yellow butter Marian's skill profess'd.

Gay, Pastorals.

MA'RBLEHEARTED. adj. [marble and heart.]
Cruel; insensible; hard-hearted.

Ingratitude! thou marblehearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

MA'RCASITE. n. s.

The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for bismuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always express a substance different from either of these by it, sulphureous and metallic. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, naturally found among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless. There are however only three distinct species of it; one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Cornwall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it. Hill.

The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the same sort of body: I restrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in strata that are separate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the stratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures. Woodward, Met. Fossils.

The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per campanum, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum: with the metal alone, and metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur; whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals. Newton, Opticks.

Here marcasites in various figures wait,
To ripen to a true metallic state. Garth, Dispens.

MARCH. n. s. [from Mars.] The third month of the year.

March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce aspect,
a helmet upon his head, to shew this month was dedicated to Mars. Peacham on Drawing.

To MARCH. v. n. [marcher, French, for varicare, Menage; from Mars, Junius.]

1. To move in military form.

Well march we on,

To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd. Shakspeare.
He marched in battle array with his power against Arphaxad. Jud. i. 13.

Maccabeus marched forth, and slew five-and-twenty thousand persons. 2 Mac. xii. 26.

My father, when some days before his death
He ordered me to march for Utica, Addison, Cato.
Wept o'er me.

2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or stately manner.

Plexirtus finding that if nothing else, famine would at last bring him to destruction, thought better by humbleness to creep where by pride he could not march. Sidney.

Doth York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm? Shakspeare.

Our bodies, every footstep that they make,
March towards death, until at last they die. Davies.

Like thee, great son of Jove, like thee,
When clad in rising majesty,

Thou marchest down o'er Delos' hills. Prior.
The power of wisdom march'd before. Pope, Odyssey.

To MARCH. v. a.

1. To put in military movement.

Cyrus marching his army for divers days over mountains of snow, the dazzling splendour of its whiteness prejudiced the sight of very many of his soldiers. Boyle on Colours.

2. To bring in regular procession.

March them again in fair array,
And bid them form the happy day;
The happy day design'd to wait
On William's fame, and Europe's fate. Prior.

To MARCH. v. n. To border; to join.
See the fifth sense of MARCH.

That was in a stranger land,
Which marcheth upon Chimeric. Gower, Conf. An. B. 4.

MARCH. † n. s. [marcher, French.]

1. Military movement; journey of soldiers.

These troops came to the army harassed with a long and wearisome march, and cast away their arms and garments, and fought in their shirts.

Bacon, War with Spain.

Who should command, by his Almighty nod,
These chosen troops, unconscious of the road,
And unacquainted with the appointed end,
Their marches to begin, and thither tend. Blackmore.

2. Grave and solemn walk.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine. Pope.

3. Deliberate or laborious walk.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it.

Addison on Italy.

4. Signal to move.

The drums presently striking up a march, they make no longer stay, but forward they go directly.

Knolles.

5. Marches, without singular. [marka, Gothic; meapc, Saxon; marche, Fr. Barbazan and Roquefort assert that this word undoubtedly comes from the Latin marginē, the ablative case of margo, a margin; but it is from the Gothic word in the sense of a mark defining a boundary; and thus we use landmark.] Borders; limits; confines.

They of those marches —

Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shakspeare.

The English colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them. Davies.

It is not fit that a king of an island should have any marches or borders but the four seas.

Davies on Ireland.

MA'RCHER. n. s. [from marcheur, French.]

President of the marches or borders.

Many of our English lords made war upon the Welshmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they held to their own use; they were called lords marchers, and had royal liberties.

Davies on Ireland.

MA'RCHING.  n. s.* [from march.] Military movement; passage of soldiers.

All that heard the noise of their multitude, and the marching of the company, and the rattling of the harness, were moved; for the army was very great and mighty. 1 Macc. vi. 41.

MA'RCHIONESS. † n. s. [feminine, formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchio. Dr. Johnson.—The old Fr. marcioness is used for marquisat. Our marcioness was formerly marquiss, as in the genuine edition of Bacon's Apophthegms; in which Dr. Johnson has given the word, from a modernized one, marcioness. And in Chaucer, markiess. See MARQUIS.] The wife of a marquis; a lady raised to the rank of marquis.

The king's majesty

Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing
Than marcioness of Pembroke.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

No marcioness, but now a queen.

Milton, Epit. M. of Winchester.

The lady marcioness, his wife, solicited very diligently the timely preservation of her husband.

Clarendon.

MA'RCHPANE. † n. s. [massepene, French; in which language the word is old; supposed to be from the Latin massa pura.] A kind of sweet bread or biscuit, such as we now call a macaroon; a sort of confection.

Along whose ridge such bones are met,
Like comfits round in marcypane set. Sidney.

Good thou, save me a piece of marcypane.
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

This marcypane is very good to procure sleep, and it refresheth and nourisheth the body withal.

Ferrand on Love Melancholy, (1640.) p. 362.

MA'RCID. adj. [marcidus, Latin.] Lean; pining; withered.

A burning colliquative fever, the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adus-tion upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever.

He on his own fish pours the noblest oil;
That to your marcid dying herbs assign'd.
By the rank smell and taste betrays its kind.

Dryden.

MA'RCOUR. n. s. [marcor, Latin.] Leanness; the state of withering; waste of flesh.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing the action of venery in some, the extenuation and marcor in others, it much abridgeth our days.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
A marcour is either imperfect, tending to a lesser withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all means of cure.

MARD.* See MERD.

MARE. n. s. [mape, Saxon.]

1. The female of a horse.

A pair of coursers born of heavenly breed,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial sire,
By substituting mares, produc'd on earth,
Whose wombs conceiv'd a more than mortal birth.

Dryden.

2. [From mara, the name of a spirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment sleepers.] A kind of torpor or stagnation, which seems to press the stomach with a weight; the night hag.

Mab, his merry queen by night,
Bestrides young folks that lie upright,
In elder times the mare that hight,
Which plagues them out of measure.

Drayton, Nymphid.

Mushrooms cause the incubus, or the mare in the stomach.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MARE.* Used for more in the north of England. [mape, Sax.]

MA'RESCHAL.† n. s. [mareschal, French, derived by most etymologists from mere, Teut. equus, equa, a horse or mare, and scal, a servant, and so came to denominate the distinguished officer called master of the horse, and thence a commander in chief. See MARSHALL.] A chief commander of an army.

O William, may thy arms advance,
That he may lose Dinant next year,
And so be mareschal of France.

Prior.

MA'RGARITE.† n. s. [margarita, Latin; marguerite, French.] A pearl.

Like to a marchant that seeketh gode margaritis.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. xiii.

The one, the margarite or pearl; the other, the cabinet or ark to keep this jewel.

Bp. King, Vine Palatine, (1614), p. 6.
Silver is the second metal, and signifies purity; among the planets it holdeth with luna, among precious stones with the margarite or pearl.

Peacham on Blazoning.

MA'RGARITES. n. s. [bellis.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

MARGE. } n. s. [margo, Latin; marge,
MARGENT. } French.
MARGIN. }

1. The border; the brink; the edge; the verge.

He drew his flaming sword, and struck
At him so fiercely, that the upper marge
Of his sevenfold shield away it took.

Spenser, F. Q.

Never since

Met we on hill, in dale, forest or mead,
Or on the beachy margent of the sea.

An airy crowd came rushing where he stood,
Which fill'd the margin of the fatal flood.

Dryden, Æn.

2. The edge of a page left blank, or filled with a short note.

As much love in rhyme,
As would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper
Writ on both sides the leaf, margent and all.

Shakespeare.

Reconcile those two places, which both you and the margins of our Bibles acknowledge to be parallel.

Hammond.

3. The edge of a wound or sore.

All the advantage to be gathered from it is only from the evenness of its margin, the purpose will be as fully answered by keeping that under only.

Sharp, Surgery.

To MA'RGENT.* } v. a. [from the noun.]
To MARGIN. }

1. To mark or note in the margin of a book.

I present it in one whole entire hymn, distinguishing it only by succession of yeares, which I have margented through the whole storie.

Mir. for Mag. p. 774.

2. To border.

Its water was clear and limpid, and beautifully margin'd with the tender grass.

Bourne, Antiq. of the Com. People, p. 65.

MA'RGINAL. adj. [marginal, French; from margin.] Placed or written on the margin.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of these words than Pope Leo himself expoundeth them, whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension may serve instead of a marginal gloss.

Hooker.

What remarks you find worthy of your ripper observation, note with a marginal star, as being worthy of your second year's review.

Watts, Logick.

MA'RGINALLY.* adv. [from marginal.] In the margin of the book.

Such quotations of places to be marginally set down, as shall serve for the fit reference of one scripture to another.

MA'RINER.† n. s. [from mare, Lat. marinier, French; mapunap, Saxon.] A seaman; a sailor.

The merry mariner unto his word

Soon hearken'd, and her painted boat straightway
Turn'd to the shore.

Spenser, F. Q.

We oft deceive ourselves, as did that mariner, who, mistaking them for precious stones, brought home his ship fraught with common pebbles from the Indies.

Glanville.

His busy mariners he hates,
His shatter'd sails with rigging to restore.

Dryden.

What mariner is not afraid,
To venture in a ship decay'd?

Swift.

MA'RJORAM. n. s. [marjorana, Lat. marjolaine, Fr.] A fragrant plant of many kinds; the bastard kind only grows here.

The nymphs of the mountains would be drawn, upon their heads garlands of honeysuckles, woodbine, and sweet marjoram.

Peacham on Drawing.

MARISH.† n. s. [marisawis, Gothick; meype, Saxon; maersche, Dutch.] A bog; a fen; a swamp; watery ground; a marsh; a morass; a moor.

1 Mac. ix. 42.

Lodronius, carried away with the breaking in of the horsemen, was driven into a marish; where, being sore wounded, and fast in the mud, he had done the uttermost.

Knolles.

His limbs he coucheth in the cooler shades; Oft, when heaven's burning eye the fields invades, To marshes resorts.

Sandy's Paraphrase.

From the other hill

To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended; on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as evening mist,
Ris'n from the river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heel.

Milton, P. L.

MA'RISH. adj. Moorish; fenny; boggy; swampy.

It hath been a great endangering to the health of some plantations, that they have built along the sea and rivers, in marsh and unwholesome grounds.

Bacon, Essays.

The fen and quagmire so marsh by kind, Are to be drained.

Tusser, Husbandry.

MA'RITAL. adj. [maritus, Latin; marital, French.] Pertaining to a husband; incident to a husband.

If any one retains a wife that has been taken in the act of adultery, he incurs the guilt of the crime of bawdry. But because repentance does consist in the mind, and since Christian charity, as well as marital affection, easily induces a belief thereof, this law is not observed.

Ayliffe.

It has been determined by some unpolite professors of the law, that a husband may exercise his marital authority so far, as to give his wife moderate correction.

Art of Tormenting.

MA'RITATED. adj. [from maritus, Latin.] Having a husband.

commodities are equal, when they will exchange
one for another. Locke.

MA'RKMAN. n. s. [mark and man.]

MA'RKS MAN. n. s. [mark and man.]

1. A man skilful to hit a mark.

In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.

— I aim'd so near when I suppos'd you lov'd.

— A right good marksman.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Whom nothing can procure,
When the wide world runs bias from his will,
To writhe his limbs, and share, not mend the ill;
This is the marksman, safe and sure,
Who still is right, and prays to be so still.
Herbert.

An ordinary marksman may know certainly when he shoots less wide at what he aims.
Dryden.

2. One who cannot write his name, but makes his mark or sign for it.

In the original Solemn League and Covenant, which hath been lately discovered, and is now in the British Museum, there are abundance of marks-men, all of whom, from their abhorrence of popery at that time, leave the cross unfinished, and sign in the shape of the letter T.

Nicolson and Burn, Hist. of Cumb. (1777.) p. 324.

MARL. n. s. [marl. Welsh; mergel,
Dutch; marga, Latin; marle, marne,
Fr. in Saxon, mepg is marrow, with an allusive signification, marl being the fatness of the earth.]

Marl is a kind of clay, which is become fatter, and of a more enriching quality, by a better fermentation, and by its having lain so deep in the earth as not to have spent or weakened its fertilizing quality by any product.
Marl is supposed to be much of the nature of chalk, and is believed to be fertile from its salt and oily quality.

We understand by the term marle simple native earths, less heavy than the boles, or clays, not soft and unctuous to the touch, nor ductile while moist, dry and crumbly between the fingers, and readily diffusible in water. Hill.

Marl is the best compost, as having most fatness, and not heating the ground too much.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Uneasy steps

Over the burning marl, not like those steps
On heaven's azure. Milton, P. L.

and markisesse, for marchioness: then marquess, which method of writing it is now also used by some.]

1. In England one of the second order of nobility, next in rank to a duke.
None may wear ermine but princes, and there is a certain number of ranks allowed to dukes, marquisses, and earls, which they must not exceed.
Peacham on Drawing.

Marc or merc signifying a bound or limit, hence is supposed the original of that honorary title of marquess, which is as much as a lord of the frontiers. Selden on Drayton's Polyb. S. 7.

2. Formerly a marchioness also. [marquise,
French.]

You shall have
Two noble partners with you: the old dutchess
Of Norfolk, and the lady marquess Dorset.

Shakespeare.
From a private gentlewoman he made me a marquise, and from a marquise a queen; and now he intends to crown my innocence with the glory of martyrdom.

The first and last woman that was created a marquess, was the lady Ann Boleyn. Spelman.

MA'RQUISATE. n. s. [marquisat, French.]

MARRIAGE.† n. s. [marriage, French; maritugum, low Latin, from maritus.] The act of uniting a man and woman for life; state of perpetual union.

The marriage with his brother's wife
Has crept too near his conscience.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow.

Shakespeare.

The French king would have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception, that he should not marry her himself.

Bacon.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do better please God than some virgins in their state of virginity: they, by giving great example of conjugal affection, by preserving their faith unbroken, and by educating children in the fear of God, please God in a higher degree than those virgins whose piety is not answerable to their opportunities.

Taylor.

I propose that Palamon shall be,
In marriage join'd with beauteous Emily.

Dryden.

MARRIAGE is often used in composition.

In a late draught of marriage-articles, a lady stipulated with her husband, that she shall be at liberty to patch on which side she pleases.

Addison, Spect.

I by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur claim this land for mine.

Shakespeare.

To these whom death again did wed,
This grave's the second marriage-bed:
For though the hand of fate could force
'Twixt soul and body a divorce,
It could not sever man and wife,
Because they both liv'd but one life.

Crashaw.

There on his arms and once lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey.

Denham.

Thou shalt come into the marriage-chamber.

Tob. vi. 16.

Neither her worthiness, which in truth was great, nor his own suffering for her, which is wont to endear affection, could fether his fickleness; but, before the marriage-day appointed, he had taken to wife Baccha, of whom she complained.

Sidney.

Virgin, awake! the marriage-hour is nigh.

Pope.

Give me, to live and die,
A spotless maid, without the marriage-tie.

I am the father of a young heiress, whom I begin to look upon as marriageable.

Spectator.

When the girls are twelve years old, which is the marriageable age, their parents take them home.

Swift.

2. Capable of union.

They led the vine
To wed her elm; she, spous'd, about him twines
Her marriageable arms, and with her bringings
Her dower, the adopted clusters to adorn
His barren leaves.

Milton, P. L.

MA'RRIED. adj. [from marry.] Conjugal; connubial.

Thus have you shunn'd the married state.

Dryden.

MA'RRROW. n. s. [mepꝝ, Saxon; smerr, Erse; smergh, Scottish.]

All the bones of the body which have any considerable thickness have either a large cavity, or they are spongy, and full of little cells; in both the one and the other there is an oleagenous substance, called marrow, contained in proper vesicles or membranes, like the fat: in the larger bones this fine oil, by the gentle heat of the body, is exhaled through the pores of its small bladders, and enters some narrow passages, which lead to some fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supply the fibres of the bones, and render them less apt to break.

Quincy.
Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,
That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring.

Shakespeare.

The skull hath brains as a kind of marrow within it: the back-bone hath one kind of marrow, and other bones of the body hath another: the jaw-bones have no marrow severed, but a little pulp of marrow diffused.

Bacon.

Pamper'd and edified their zeal
With marrow puddings many a meal.

Hudibras.

He bit the dart, and wrench'd the wood away,
The point still buried in the marrow lay.

Addison, Ov.

MA'RRROW.†. In the Scottish dialect, to this day, a fellow, companion, or associate, as also an equal match; he met with his marrow; from mar, husband, French. Dr. Johnson.—It is also a word of the north of England. “These gloves or shoes are not marrows, i. e. are not fellows.” Coles, Ray, and Grose.]

Though buying and selling doth wonderful wel,
Yet chopping and changing I cannot commend
With thief or his marrow for fear of ill end.

Tusser.

To MA'RRROW. v. a. To fill as it were with marrow and fatness; to glut.

What mean these strict reformers thus to spend their hour-glasses, and bawl against our harmless cups? to call our meetings riots, and brand our civil mirth with styles of loose intemperance? whilst they can sit at a sister's feast, devour and gormandize beyond excess, and wipe the guilt from off their marrowed mouths, and clothe their surfeits in the long fustian robes of a tedious grace!

Quarles, Judg. and Mercy, The Drunkard.

MA'RRROWBONE.† n. s. [bone and marrow.]

1. Bone boiled for the marrow.

A cook they hadden with them for the nones,
To boile the chickens and the marrowbones.

Chaucer, T. C. Pro.

2. In burlesque language, the knees. Dr. Johnson.—I'll bring him down upon his marrow-bones, that is, I'll make him bend his knees as he does to the Virgin Mary. See also MARRY. Brandt, Popular Antiquities.

What men could have held laughing to have seen an Egyptian on his marrowbones adoring a dog, or praying to an ox?

Lightfoot, Miscell. (1629.) p. 182.

Upon this he fell down upon his marrowbones, and begged of Jupiter to give him a pair of horns.

L' Estrange.

Down on your marrowbones, upon your allegiance; and make an acknowledgement of your offences; for I will have ample satisfaction.

Dryden, Span. Fair.

MA'RRROWFAT. n. s. A kind of pea.

MA'RRROWISH.* adj. [from marrow.] Of the nature of marrow.

The brain is a soft, marrowish, and white substance.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 19.

MA'RRROWLESS. adj. [from marrow.] Void of marrow.

Avant!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with.

Shakespeare, Macb.

MA'RRROWY.* adj. [from marrow.]

1. Pithy; full of strength or sap.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

2. Medullary; of the nature of marrow.

So in the earth to this day is not known.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

2. Among chymists, the term for iron.

MARSH, } are derived from the Saxon

MARS, } mearc, a fen, or fenny place.

MAS, } Gibson's Camden.

MARSH. n. s. [mearc, Sax. See MARISH.]

A fen; a bog; a swamp; a watery tract of land.

In their courses make that round,
In meadows and in marshes found,

Of them so call'd the fayry ground,
Of which they have the keeping.

Drayton, Nymphid.
Worms for colour and shape, alter even as the ground out of which they are got; as the marsh worm and the stag worm. Walton, Angler.

We may see in more continous climates great variety in the people thereof; the up-lands in England yield strong, sinewy, hardy men; the marsh-lands, men of large and high stature.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.
Your low meadows and marsh-lands you need not lay up till April, except the spring be very wet, and your marshes very poachy.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

MARSH-MALLOW. n. s. [althæa, Latin.] It is in all respects like the mallow, but its leaves are more soft and woolly. Miller.

MARSH-MARIGOLD. n. s. [populago, Lat.]
This flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose, in the middle of which rises the pointal, which becomes a membranaceous fruit, in which there are several cells, for the most part bent downwards, collected into little heads and full of seeds. Miller.

And set soft hyacinths with iron-blue,
To shade marsh-marigolds of shining hue. Dryden.

MARSHAL.† n. s. [mareschal, Fr. See MARESCHAL. Serenius calls it "Antiq.
Franc. vox, à Goth. mar, equus, and skall vel skale, servus, administrator." So Selden: "The name of marshal or mareschal is agreed to descend from two Teutonic words, (which was the same with the old French,) mare, which signified as much as our general name of horse, and scalck, that in the old German and Gothick tongues signified a servant." Duello, ch. 9. "Marshal was at first the name of a smith, farrier, or one that dressed horses; but it climbed by degrees to that height, that the chiefest commanders of the gendarmery and militia of France are come to be called marshals; which about a hundred years since were but two in all, whereas now they are twelve." Howell,
Lett. iv. 19.]

1. The chief officer of arms.

The duke of Suffolk claims
To be high steward; next the duke of Norfolk
To be earl marshal. Shakespeare.

2. An officer who regulates combats in the lists.

Dares their pride presume against my laws,
As in a listed field to fight their cause?
Unask'd the royal grant; no marshal by,
As kingly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

3. Any one who regulates rank or order at a feast, or any other assembly.

Through the hall there walked to and fro
A jolly yeoman, marshal of the same,
Whose name was Appetite; he did bestow
Both guests and meats, whenever in they came,
And knew them how to order without blame.
Spenser, F. Q.

4. An harbinger; a pursuivant, one who goes before a prince to declare his coming, and provide entertainment.

Her face, when it was fairest, had been but as a marshal to lodge, the love of her in his mind, which now was so well placed as it needed no help of outward harbinger. Sidney.

5. A commander in chief of military forces.
Marshal Harcourt and the duke of Berwick were preparing to go into Alsace and Dauphiné, but their troops were in want of all manner of necessaries. Taiter, No. 5.

To MA'RSHAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To arrange; to rank in order.

Multitude of jealousies, and lack of some predominant desire, that should marshal and put in order all the rest, maketh any man's heart hard to find or sound. Bacon.

It is as inconceivable how it should be the directrix of such intricate motions, as that a blind man should marshal an army. Glanville, Scepis.
Anchises look'd not with so pleas'd a face,
In num'ring o'er his future Roman race,
And marshalling the heroes of his name,
As in their order, next to light they came. Dryden.

2. To lead as an harbinger.

Thou *marshal*st me the way that I was going.
Shakespeare.
MA'RSHALLER. n. s. [from marshal.] One that arranges; one that ranks in order.
Dryden was the great refiner of English poetry,
and the best marshaller of words.

cresses.

MA'RSHY. adj. [from marsh.]

1. Boggy; wet; fenny; swampy.

Though here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stony harvest yields.
Dryden, Virg.

It is a distemper of such as inhabit marshy, fat,
low, moist, soils, near stagnating water.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. Produced in marshes.

Feed
With delicates of leaves and marshy weed. Dryd.
MART.† n. s. [contracted from market.]

1. A place of publick traffick.

Christ could not suffer that the temple should serve for a place of mart, nor the apostle of Christ that the church should be made an inn. Hooker.

If any born at Ephesus
Be seen at Syracusan *mart*s and fairs,
He dies. Shakespeare.

Ezechiel, in the description of Tyre, and the exceeding trade that it had with all the East, as the only mart town, reciteth that the people with whom they commerce, and also what commodities every country yielded. Raleigh.

Many come to a great mart of the best horses.

The French, since the accession of the Spanish monarchy, supply with cloth the best mart we had in Europe. Addison.

2. Bargain; purchase and sale.

I play a merchant's part,
And venture madly on a desperate mart. Shakspeare.

3. Letters of mart. Licence of reprisals.
A corruption of mark. See the eighth sense of MARK. And Cotgrave, "Droit de marque, power to seize the body and goods of another."

To pick out letters of mart, and to have commission to kill and slay, &c.

Bp. Gauden, Hierasp. (1653,) p. 80.

To MART.† v. a. [from the noun.] To traffick; to buy or sell.

Sooth when I was young I wou'd have ransack'd

The pedlar's silken treasury, you've let him go,
And nothing marted with him. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
Cassius, you yourself,

Do sell and mart your offices for gold

To undeservers. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Poor brats were slaves, of bondmen that were born,
And marted, sold.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599,) i. 2.

Your christening of bells, marting of pardons, tossing of beads. Bp. Hall, Epist. D. i. Ep. 1.

To MART.* v. n. To trade dishonourably.

If he shall think it fit,
A saucy stranger, in his court, to mart
As in a stew. Shakespeare, Cymb.

much valued.

2. [Martelet, Fr.] A kind of swallow that builds in houses; a martlet.

A churchwarden, to express St. Martin's in the Fields, caused to be engraven, on the communion cup, a martin, a bird like a swallow, sitting upon a mole-hill between two trees.

Peacham on Blazoning.

MARTIAL. adj. [martial, French; mar- tialis, Lat.]

1. Warlike; fighting; given to war; brave.
Into my feeble breast

Come gently, but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,
And hearts of great heroes dost enrage.

Spenser, F. Q.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them.

Chapman, Iliad.

It hath seldom been seen, that the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise; whereby it is manifest, that the northern tract of the world is the more martial region.

Bacon, Ess.

His subjects call'd aloud for war;
But peaceful kings o'er martial people set,
Each other's poize and counterbalance are. Dryden.

2. Having a warlike show; suiting war.

See
His thousands, in what martial equipage
They issue forth! Steel bows and shafts their arms,
Of equal dread in flight or in pursuit.

Milton, P. R.

When our country's cause provokes to arms,
How martial music every bosom warms. Pope.

3. Belonging to war; not civil; not according to the rules or practice of peaceable government.

Let his neck answer for it, if there is any mar- tial law in the world. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

They proceeded in a kind of martial justice with enemies offering them their law before they drew their sword. Bacon, Holy War.

4. Borrowing qualities from the planet
Mars.

The natures of the fixed stars are astrologically diffused by the planets, and esteemed martial or jovial according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown

5. Having parts or properties of iron, which is called Mars by the chymists.

MA'RTIALISM.* n. s. [from martial.] Bravery; chivalry; warlike exercises.

Such a young Alexander for affecting martialism and chivalrie; such a young Josiah for religion and piety.

Prince, Creation of the P. of Wales, (1610.) D. 2.

MA'RTIALIST.† n. s. [from martial.] A warrior; a fighter.

While those bold martialists, that for their fame, In skill of warre affairs were so renown'd, Did by their swords immortalize her name.

Mrs. for Mag. p. 853.

He was a swain, whom all the Graces kist, A brave, heroic, worthy martialist.

Browne, Brit. Past. i. 5.

He was indeed one of the queen's martialists, and did very good service in Ireland.

Naunton, Frongm. Regalia, of Ld. Sussex.

Many brave adventurous spirits fell for love of her; amongst others the high-hearted martialist, who first lost his hands, then one of his chiefest limbs, and lastly his life. Hovell.

MA'RTINET.† n. s. [from martinet, French.] MA'RTLEF.

1. A kind of swallow. Barret notices martinet in this sense, Alv. 1580.

This guest of summer,

The temple-haunting martinet does approve
By his lov'd mansion, that heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here. No jutting frieze,
Buttress, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain;
Then first the martinet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joins all the feather'd train. Dryden.

2. In military language, a martinet is a precise or strict disciplinarian; so called from an officer of that name, whom Voltaire describes as the regulator of the French infantry under Louis the Fourteenth. It is modern in English, and has the accent on the last syllable.

MA'RTINGAL. n. s. [from martingale, French.] It is a broad strap made fast to the girths under the belly of a horse, and runs between the two legs to fasten the other end, under the noseband of the bridle. Harris.

Martilmas beefe doth bear good tacke,
When country folke do dainties lacke.

Tusser, Husb.

The Turks their butchers, and themselves the martinmass beeves. Fuller, Holy War, p. 135.

MA'RTNETS. n. s. They are small lines fastened to the leetch of the sail, to bring that part of the leetch which is next to the yard-arm close up to the yard, when the sail is to be furled.

Bailey.

MA'RTYR.† n. s. [from martýr, Saxon, μάρτυρ, Greek.] One who by his death bears witness to the truth.

Prayers and tears may serve a good man's turn; if not to conquer as a soldier, yet to suffer as a martyr. King Charles.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced. Brown.

Nearer heav'n his virtues shone more bright,
Like rising flames expanding in their height,
The martyrs' glory crown'd the soldiers' fight. Dryden.

To be a martyr signifies only to witness the truth of Christ; but the witnessing of the truth was then so generally attended with persecution, that martyrdom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death. South, Serm.

The first martyr for Christianity was encouraged, in his last moments, by a vision of that divine person for whom he suffered.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

Socrates,

Truth's early champion, martyr for his God. Thomson.

To MA'RTYR.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put to death for virtue or true profession.

The primitive Christians—before the face of their enemies would acknowledge no other title but that, though hated, reviled, tormented, martyred for it. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

2. To torment; to murder; to destroy.

Me, and wretched Palamon,
That Theseus martyr'd in prison. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Amoret, whose gentle heart
Thou martyr'st with sorrow and with smart. Spenser, F. Q.

You could not beg for grace.
Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you:
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats. Shakespeare.

If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.

Martyr'd with the gout. Pope.

MA'RTYRDOM. n. s. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr; the honour of a martyr; testimony born to truth by voluntary submission to death.

If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for Christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom? Hooker.

Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their inno- cency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.

Herod, whose unbless'd
Hand, O! what dares not jealous greatness? tore
A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast,
The blooms of martyrdom. Crashaw.

Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroick deem'd; chief mastery to dissect
With long and tedious havoc fall'd knights
In battles feign'd; the better fortitude
Of patience and heroic martyrdom
Unsung. Milton, P. L.

What mists of providence are these,
So saints, by supernatural power set free,
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.

To MA'RTYRIZE.* v. a. [from martyriser, Fr.] To offer as a sacrifice.

To her my heart I nightly martyrize. Spenser, Colin Clout.

MA'RTYROLOGE.* n. s. [from martyrologe, Fr. μάρτυρ, a martyr, and λόγος, discourse, narration.] A catalogue or register of martyrs.

Add that old record from an ancient martyro- loge of the church of Canterbury.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 335.

MARTYROLOGICAL.* adj. [from martyr- ology.] Registering as in a martyrology; containing a list.

If once you render yourself a pupil to whining love, he will read you such contrary politics, as shall persuade you to make a league with misery, and embrace beggary for a friend: and after this you are capable of no higher honour, than to be registered in one of his martyrological ballads, and sung by daïrmaids to a pitiful tune.

Osborne, Advice to a Son, (1658.) p. 70.

MARTYROLOGIST.† n. s. [from martyrologiste, French.] A writer of martyrology.

It is recorded by Fox, the martyrologist, as a memorable occurrence. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 436.

MARTYROLOGY. n. s. [from martyrologie, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.] A register of martyrs.

In the Roman martyrology we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out. Stillingfleet.

MA'RTYRLY.* adj. [from martyr.] Like a martyr.

They would blemish the piety of the first martyrly composers of the Liturgy.

Bp. Gauden, on the Lit. of the Ch. of Eng. (1661.) p. 3.

MA'RVEL.† n. s. [from merveille, French.] A wonder; any thing astonishing. Little in use.

A marvel it were, if a man could espy, in the whole Scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way ineluctable. Hooker.

I am scarce in breath, my lord.
—No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour;
you cowardly rascal! Shakespeare, K. Lear.

No marvel
My lord protector's hawks do towre so well. Shakespeare.

The praises of knightly heroism, the marvels of romantic fiction, and the complaints of love. Warton.

MA'RVEL of Peru.† A flower. Ainsworth.

The marvel of the world comes next in view,
At home, but still'd the Marvel of Peru. Tate's Conley.

To MA'RVEL. v. n. [from merveiller, French.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disused.

You make me marvel. Shakespeare.

Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. Shakespeare.

—The army marvelled at it. Shaks. Coriol.

The countries marvelled at thee for thy songs, proverbs, and parables. Eccles. xiv. 17.

MA'RVELLOUS.† adj. [from merveilleux, French.]

1. Wonderful; strange; astonishing.
She has a marvellous white hand, I must confess. Shakespeare.

This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes. Psalms.

2. Surpassing credit.
The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

3. The marvellous is used, in works of criticism, to express any thing exceeding natural power, opposed to the probable.

4. Formerly used adverbially for exceedingly, wonderfully.

He hath shewed me marvellous great kindness in a strong city. Ps. xxxi. 23.

She finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

MARVELLOUSLY. adv. [from marvellous.]

Wonderfully; strangely.

You look not well, signior Antonio;

You have too much respect upon the world;

They lose it that do buy it with much care.

Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd. Shaksp.

The encouragement of his too late successes,
with which he was marvellously elated. Clarendon.

MARVELOUSNESS. n. s. [from marvellous.]

Wonderfulness; strangeness; astonishingness.

MARY-BUD.* n. s. The marigold.

And winking mary-buds begin

To ope their golden eyes. Shakspere, Cymb.

MASCLE.* n. s. An heraldick figure; a lozenge as it were perforated.

TO MASCLATE.* v. a. [from masculus,
Latin. This is an old and proper word, in opposition to our emasculate, to effeminate.] To make strong. Cockeram.

MASCLINE† adj. [masculin, French;
masculus, Latin.]

1. Male; not female.

Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long!

Shakspere.

His long beard noteth the air and fire, the two masculine elements, exercising their operation upon nature being the feminine. Peacham on Drawing.

O! why did God,

Creator wise! that peopled highest heaven

With spirits masculine, create at last

This novelty on earth, this fair defect

Of nature? Milton, P. L.

2. Resembling man; virile; powerful; not soft; not effeminate.

Queen Anne, your mother, a lady of a great and masculine mind.

Wotton, Paneg. on K. Ch. I. Rem. p. 144.

This has altogether as masculine an influence upon the manners and practices of men.

South, Serm. ix. 76.

You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of Virtue. Addison.

Notwithstanding his eloquent and masculine defence, he [the earl of Surrey] was condemned.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 9.

3. [In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.

The English language, with singular propriety, following nature alone, applies the distinction of masculine and feminine only to the names of animals; all the rest are neuter. Louth.

MASCLINELY. adv. [from masculine.]

Like a man.

Aurelia tells me, you have done most mascu-

linely,

And play the orator. B. Jonson, Catiline.

MASCLINENESS. n. s. [from masculine.]

Mannishness; male figure or behaviour.

MASH.† n. s. [masche, Dutch.]

1. The space between the threads of a net, commonly written mesh.

To defend against the stings of bees, have a net knit with so small mashes, that a bee cannot get through. Mortimer.

2. Any thing mingled or beaten together into an undistinguished, or confused body. [from mischen, Dutch, to mix, or mascher, French.]

I have made a fair mask on't!

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

Carcasses were scattered on her surface; some,
blown from the tops of high mountains; others,
bruised to mask; all ruined and destroyed.

Lord's Hist. of the Banians, (1630,) p. 88.

3. A mixture for a horse.

Put half a peck of ground malt into a pail, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well; stir it about for half an hour till the water is very sweet, and give it the horse lukewarm:
this mask is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour.

Farrier's Dict.

When mares foal, they feed them with mashes,
and other moist food. Mortimer, Husbandry.

TO MASH. v. a. [mascher, French.]

1. To beat into a confused mass.

The pressure would be intolerable, and they would even mask themselves and all things else apieces. More.

To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the sides of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without masking the meat.

Swift, Dir. to the Footman.

2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.

What was put in the first masking-tub draw off, as also that liquor in the second masking-tub.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

MASHY.* adj. [from mask.] Produced by crushing, or pressure.

Then comes the crushing swain; the country
floats,

And foams unbounded with the masky flood,

That by degrees fermented, and refin'd,

Round the rais'd nations pours the cup of joy.

Thomson, Autumn.

MASK. n. s. [masque, French.]

1. A cover to disguise the face; a visor.

Now Love pulled off his mask, and shewed his face unto her, and told her plainly that she was his prosider. Sidney.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And throw her sun-expelling mask away;
The air hath starr'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shaksp.

Could we suppose that a mask represented never so naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play. Addison on Italy.

2. Any pretence or subterfuge.

Too plain thy nakedness of soul espy'd,
Why dost thou strive the conscious shame to hide,
By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride? Prior.

3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night?

Shakspere.

4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild bustle.

They in the end agreed,
That at a masque and common revelling,
Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed.

Daniel.

This thought might lead me through the world's vain mask,

Content, though blind, had I no other guide.

Milton, Sonnet.

5. A dramattick performance, written in a tragick style without attention to rules or probability.

Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks. Peacham.

TO MASK. v. a. [masquer, French.]

1. To disguise with a mask or visor.

What will grow of such errors as go masked under the cloke of divine authority, impossible it is that the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.

'Tis not my blood

Wherein thou see'st me masked. Shakspere, Coriol.

Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;

But being mask'd he was not sure. Shakspere.

The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises; and I saw an antique statue masked, which was perhaps designed for Gnatho in the Eunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript. Addison.

2. To cover; to hide.

I to your assistance do make love,

Masking the business from the common eye,

For sundry weighty reasons. Shakspere, Macbeth.

As when a piece of wanton lawn,

A thin aerial veil is drawn

O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,

More sweetly shows the blushing bride:

A soul whose intellectual beams

No mists do mask, no lazy steams. Crashaw.

TO MASK.† v. n.

1. To revel; to play the mummer.

Thy gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't;

What masking stuff's here! Shakspere.

These ladies maskers toke each of them one of the Frenchmen to daunce, and to maske.

Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

Masking habits, and a borrow'd name,

Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame. Prior.

2. To be disguised any way.

The shady woods, in which the birds to build their nests were seene,

Whose waving heads in air shot up were crown'd

with youthfull greene,

Now clad in coate of motlie hue did maske in poore array;

Rough Boreas with his blustering blasts had blown their leaves away.

Mir. for Mag. p. 555.

MASKER. n. s. [from mask.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.

Tell false Edward,

That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,

To revel it with him and his new bride. Shaksp.

Let the scenes abound with light, and let the maskers that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down. Bacon.

The maskers come late, and I think will stay,

Like fairies, till the cock crow them away. Downe.

MASKERED.* adj. Decayed. See MOSK- ERED.

MASKERY.* n. s. [from masker.] The dress or disguise of a masker.

Methinks I hear swart Martius cry,

Souping along in war's feign'd maskerie,

By Lais' starrie front he'll forthwith die!

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599,) iii. 8.

MASKHOUSE.* n. s. [mask and house.]

Place where masks are performed.

Masks were so much the fashion in the times of the first James and Charles, that maskhouse was then probably as common as playhouse.

If it were but some maskhouse, wherein a glorious (though momentary) show were to be presented, neither white staves nor halberts could keep you out. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

MASKIN.† adj. [corrupted from miscel- lane. Dr. Johnson.—It is more probably from the Sax. myrclic, various;

mistus, Latin, mixed; Teut. *masteluy*n, farrago. See MASTLIN.] Composed of various kinds; as, maslin bread, made of wheat and rye.

MASON.† n. s. [maçon, French; machio, low Latin. Latin etymologists refer the word to machina, a scaffold for building. Sheringham, our countryman, in his Origines Britannice, as Serenius has also observed, would carry it to the Scyth. mossyn, ædes, a house; and M. Huet has also offered mas, an old word for a house; but Du Cange considers maceria, an enclosure of stone, as the origin of the word.]

1. A builder with stone.

Many find a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth. Wotton.

A mason that makes a wall meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work. More.

2. One of a society bearing the epithet of free and accepted; of which the origin is pretended to be as early as the building of Solomon's temple, and the insignia are principally a builder's tools.

The lawyers, like the freemasons, may be supposed to take an oath not to tell the secret. Ld. Halifax.

I reckon, next week we shall hear you are a free-mason. Gray to Walpole.

MASO'NICK.* adj. [from mason.] Relating to the society of free-masons.

MA'SONRY.† n. s. [maçonerie, French.] The craft or performance of a mason.

Wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry. Shakspeare, Sonnet 55.

MA'SORAH.* n. s. [masorah, Lat. from the Hebrew; which is "from masar, he delivered; spoken of things which men commit to the charge of another, yet reserving a power to have it recovered again." Mather, Vindic. of the Holy Bible, 1723, p. 256.] In the Jewish theology, a work on the Bible by several learned rabbins.

These sections of the law are quoted, by the masorah, instead of chapters. Mather, Vind. of the H. Bible, p. 60.

The masorah is a critical learning of the wise men among the ancient Jews, relating to the Hebrew text of the Old Testament; by which the verses, words, and letters of the text are numbered; and every variety is taken notice of in the proper place, in order to preserve its genuine reading. Ibid. p. 256.

MASORE'TICAL.* adj. [from masorah.] Belonging to the masorah; denoting the labour of those who composed that work.

They observed, that these scribes had noticed five words, where vau is redundant. This masoretic note is mentioned in the Talmud. Mather, Vind. of the H. Bible, p. 258.

MA'SORITE.* n. s. [masseretha, Lat. from masorah.] One of those who composed the masorah.

The Masorites extended their care to the vowels, that none might irregularly point the divine books; they did the same as to the accents. Mather, Vind. of the H. Bible, p. 257.

The Masorites seem to have been a succession of critics, professing a traditional science of reading the Scripture, as the Cabalists did of interpreting it. Gray on the Old Test. Introduction.

MASQUERA'DE.† n. s. [not from masque, French, as Dr. Johnson states it, but from mascarade; or rather from the Italian mascherata, mascarata, as that is from the Arab. mascar, buffoonery. Hence our old word was masquerada, and meant a ridiculous exhibition. Dr. Johnson cites, under the first sense, only the example from Pope.]

1. A diversion in which the company is masked; a piece of mummery.

The name only being left to serve for a part of the masquerada of an high mass. Harmar, Transl. of Beza, (1587,) p. 134.

All this staltie masquerada. Ibid. p. 155.

What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treacherous friend, and daring spark,
The glance by day, the whisper in the dark. Pope.

2. A kind of Spanish diversion on 'horse-back.

The masquerade is an exercise they learned from the Moors; performed by squadrons of horse, seeming to charge each other with great fierceness, with bucklers in their left hands, and a kind of cane in their right. Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 223.

3. Disguise.

I was upon the frolick this evening, and came to visit thee in masquerade. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Truth, of all things the plainest and sincerest, is forced to gain admittance in disguise, and court us in masquerade. Felton on the Classics.

TO MASQUERA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go in disguise.

A freak took an ass in the head, and he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin. L'Estrange.

2. To assemble in masks.

I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us. Swift.

TO MA'SQUERADE.* v. a. To put into disguise.

His next shift therefore is to change its [sin's] complexion, to masquerade vice, and to make it wear the habit and shape of that virtue it most resembles. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 229.

MASQUERA'DER.† n. s. [from masquerade.]

A person in a mask; a buffoon.

The most dangerous sort of cheats are but masqueraders under the vizard of friends. L'Estrange.

The late masquerader in the Haymarket did not, could not, more effectually expose them both. Bp. Nicolson, to Bp. Hoadly, Collect. of Papers, p. 4.

The dreadful masquerader, thus equipped,
Out sallied on adventures. Young, Night Th. 5.

MASS.† n. s. [masse, French; massa, Lat.]

1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.

If it were not for these principles, the bodies of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses. Newton, Opticks.

Some passing into their pores, others adhering in lumps or masses to their outsides, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass they together constituted. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. A large quantity.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of public treasury. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Raleigh, Ess.

3. Bulk; vast body.

The Creator of the world would not have framed so huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.

The whole knowledge of groupes, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Reubens, exposed clearly to the sight. Dryden.

At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear;

They lose their forms, and make a mass
Confus'd and black, if brought too near. Prior.

Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addison, Freeholder.

5. Gross body; the general; the bulk.

Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Bacon, Ess.

Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal Mind
Acts through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move. Dryden.

The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Clodius and Curio. Swift.

If there is not sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids. Arbutnot.

6. [Missa, Lat. mætte, Saxon: as mætte-boc, mætte-bneohc, the mass-book, mass-book. "Missa idem ac missio, sicut remissam pro remissione dicebant antiqui. — Ex allatis satis constat missam à missione dici, et populi dimissionem significare. Frustra nititur Genebrardus hanc missæ etymologiam convellere quasi nimis frigidam, et modicæ reverentiæ erga tantum mysterium." V. Cardinal. Bona de Rebus Liturg. p. 6.] The service of the Romish church at the celebration of the eucharist: at first used for the dismissal or sending away the people, either before or after the communion.

Burnished gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests; who were very expert herein. Peacham on Drawing.

He infers, that then Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years. Atterbury.

This is to prevent the solitary masses, which had been introduced by the church of Rome, where the priest says mass, and receives the sacrament himself, though there be none to communicate with him. Wheatley on the Comm. Prayer, ch. 6. § 50.

7. A festival. [mætte, Saxon.] See LAM-MAS. Retained also in Candlemas, Michaelmas, and Martinmas.

TO MASS.† v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.

He was accused of his cardinals, that he massed without consecration. Bale, Acts of Eng. Vol. P. i. (1560,) fol. 59. b.

Abolishing or putting downe the massing sacrifices for the dead. Hunting of Purgatory, (1561,) fol. 5.

He cannot love the Lord Jesus with his heart, which lengthen one ear to his apostles, and another to false apostles; which can brook to see a mingle-mangle of religion and superstition, ministers and massing priests, light and darkness, truth and error, traditions and Scriptures. Hooker, Serm. 1. On St. Jude.

Their massing furniture they took from the law, lest having an altar and a priest, they should want vestments. Hooker.

To MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] It seems once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.

They feared the French might, with filling or massing the house, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might annoy the haven. Hayward.

MA'SSACRE. n. s. [massacre, French; from mazzare, Italian.]

1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.

Of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren, men of men.

Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

2. Murder.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

To MA'SSACRE. v. a. [massacer, French, from the noun.] To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.

I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raise their faction and their family.

Shakespeare.

Christian religion, now crumbled into fractions, may, like dust, be irreversibly dissipated, if God do not conterminous us, or we recover so much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love.

After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated.

MA'SSACRER. n. s. [massacreur, Fr.] One who commits butchery, or indiscriminate destruction.

Jurors and presidents of revolutionary tribunals, regicides, assassins, massacres.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

MA'SSER. n. s. [from mass.] A priest who celebrates mass. Obsolete.

A good masser, and so forth; but no true gospel preacher.

Bale, Yet a Course, (1543), fol. 38.

MA'SSETER. n. s. [masseter, Fr. Cotgrave; from the Gr. μασσητης, to eat.] A muscle of the lower jaw.

One wonderful pair of muscles, called the masseters,—inserted into this lower mandible, and so are able to move it upward; to the right, to the left; forward, backward, and consequently round about; and so performing that action which we call mastication or chewing. Smith on Old Age, p. 77.

The strength of the crural and masseter-muscles in lions and tigers.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

MA'SSICOT. n. s. [French.]

Massicot is ceruss calcined by a moderate degree of fire; of this there are three sorts, arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold-coloured massicot still more.

Trevoux.

MA'SSINESS. } n. s. [from massy, MA'SSIVENESS. } sive; French, massivité, which Cotgrave renders massiveness; but the English word is also in the older dictionary of Huloet.] Weight; bulk; ponderousness.

It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Hakewill.

The block of stone in which the basin of immersion is excavated, is of unusual massiness.

Warton, Hist of Kildington, p. 15.

MA'SSIVE. } adj. [massif, Fr.] Heavy;
MA'SSY. } weighty; ponderous;
bulky; continuous.

If you would hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Perhaps these few stones and sling, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may counter-veil the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine. Gov. of the Tongue.

No sideboards then with gilded plate were press'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes dress'd.

Congreve, Juv.

The more gross and massive parts of the terrestrial globe, the strata of stone, owe their order to the deluge. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

If these liquors or glasses were so thick and massy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye. Newton, Opt.

The intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war.

Pope, Statius.

MAST.† n. s. [mast, mât, French; mærc, Saxon; mast, Su. Goth.]

1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That thou hast perpendicularly fallen.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He dropp'd his anchors and his oars be ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd. Dryden, Hom.

2. The fruit of the oak and beech. It has in this sense no plural termination. [Saxon, mærc, nuts, berries, acorns, by metathesis from mats, Gothick, food. Lye, edit. Manning.]

The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips:
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you. Shakespeare, Timon.
Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some mast.

The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefit. Temple, Miscell.

Wond'ring dolphins o'er the palace glide;
On leaves and mast of mighty oaks they brouze,
And their broad fins entangle in the boughs.

Dryden.

MA'STED. adj. [from mast.] Furnished with masts.

MA'STER.† n. s. [meester, Dutch; maître, French; magister, Latin. Dr. Johnson.—Saxon, mærcap, used as early as in the reign of Alfred, Dr. Jamieson says; and may be from mærc, most, greatest, as the Latin magister is evidently from magis, more; thus separating our word from etymological dependence on the Latin.]

1. One who has servants: opposed to man or servant.

But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours, my lord. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
Take up thy master. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it;
The boy, his clerk, begg'd it mine;
And neither man nor master would take aught
But the two rings. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

2. A director; a governor.

If thou be made the master of a feast, be among them as one of the rest. Eccclus. xxxii. 1.
O thou my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet, and the song. Pope.

3. Owner; proprietor; with the idea of governing.

An orator, who had undertaken to make a panegyric on Alexander the Great, and who had employed the strongest figures of his rhetoric in the praise of Bucephalus, would do quite the contrary to that which was expected from him; because it would be believed, that he rather took the horse for his subject than the master.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. A lord; a ruler.

Wisdom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the master of a house. Guardian.

There Cæsar, grac'd with both Minervas, shone,
Cæsar, the world's great master, and his own.

Pope.

Excuse
The pride of royal blood, that checks my soul:
You know, alas! I was not born to kneel,
To sue for pity and to own a master. Philips.

5. Chief; head.

Chief master-gunner am I of this town,
Something I must do to procure me grace.

Shakespeare.

As a wise master-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. 1 Cor. iii. 10.

The best sets are the heads got from the very tops of the root; the next are the runners, which spread from the master-roots. Mortimer, Husb.

6. Possessor.

When I have thus made myself master of a hundred thousand drachms, I shall naturally set myself on the foot of a prince, and will demand the grand vizier's daughter in marriage.

Addison, Spect.

The duke of Savoy may make himself master of the French dominions on the other side of the Rhone. Addison.

7. Commander of a trading ship.

An unhappy master is he that is made cunning by many shipwrecks; a miserable merchant, that is neither rich nor wise, but after some bankrupts.

Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o'th' Tiger.

Shakespeare.

8. One uncontrolled.

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Great and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

9. A compellation of respect, formerly; but now generally applied to an inferior.

Master doctor, you have brought those drugs. Shakespeare.

Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king. Shakespeare.

Masters play here, I will content your pains,
Something that's brief; and bid, good morrow.

Shakespeare.

10. A young gentleman.

If gaming does an aged sire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice.

Dryden.

Master lay with his bedchamber towards the south sun; miss lodged in a garret, exposed to the north wind. Arbutnot.

Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are impediments to the diversions of the servants; the remedy is to bribe them that they may not tell tales. Swift.

11. One who teaches; a teacher: correlative to scholar or learner.

Very few men are wise by their own counsel, or learned by their own teaching; for he that was only taught by himself had a fool for his master. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

To the Jews join the Egyptians, the first masters of learning. South.

Masters and teachers should not raise difficulties to their scholars; but smooth their way, and help them forwards. Locke.

12. A man eminently skilful in practice or science.

The great mocking master mock'd not then, When he said, Truth was buried here below. Davies.

Spenser and Fairfax, great masters of our language, saw much farther into the beauties of our numbers than those who followed. Dryden.

A man must not only be able to judge of words and style, but he must be a master of them too; he must perfectly understand his author's tongue, and absolutely command his own. Dryden.

He that does not pretend to painting, is not touched at the commendation of a master in that profession. Collier.

No care is taken to improve young men in their own language, that they may thoroughly understand, and be masters of it. Locke on Education.

13. A title of dignity in the universities; as, master of arts.

Then comes some third party, that masters both plaintiff and defendant, and carries away the booty. L'Estrange.

Honour burns in me, not so fiercely bright, But pale as fires when master'd by the light. Dryden.

Obstinacy and wilful neglects must be mastered, even though it cost bloods. Locke on Education.

A man can no more justly make use of another's necessity, than he that has more strength can seize upon a weaker, master him to his obedience, and, with a dagger at his throat, offer him death or slavery. Locke.

The reformation of an habitual sinner is a work of time and patience; evil customs must be mastered and subdued by degrees. Calamy, Sermon.

3. To execute with skill.

I do not take myself to be so perfect in the transactions and privileges of Bohemia, as to be fit to handle that part: and I will not offer at that I cannot master. Bacon.

To MA'STER. v. n. To excel in any thing; to be skilful in practice or science.

They talk of fencing, and the use of arms, The art of urging and avoiding harms,

The noble science, and the mastering skill

Of making just approaches how to kill.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the mastful chesnut shakes the skies.
Dryden.

MASTICA'TION. n. s. [masticatio, Lat.]

The act of chewing.

In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, and thence transferred into the gizzard. Ray on the Creation.

Mastication is a necessary preparation of solid aliment, without which there can be no good digestion. Arbuthnot.

MA'STICATORY. n. s. [masticatoire, Fr.]
A medicine to be chewed only, not swallowed.

Remember masticatories for the mouth. Bacon.
Salivation and masticatories evacuate considerably; salivation many pints of phlegm in a day,
and very much by chewing tobacco.
Floyer on Humours.

MA'STICH.† n. s. [mastic, French.]

1. The lentisk tree; an evergreen of the Greek isles, Italy, and some parts of France. Unnoticed by Dr. Johnson; who confines also the second meaning to the gum of the trees in Scio.

Under what tree sawest thou them companying together? who answered, under a mastick tree.

Hist. of Susanna, ver. 54.

The sight of a few date and mastick trees exceedingly refreshing us.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 126.

Knotty pines, fragrant masticks, kindly oaks.
Ibid. p. 130.

2. A kind of gum gathered from trees of the same name.

Coriat's report, that mastick is found no where but in Scio, was here refuted.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 126.

This island [Scio] produces the most excellent mastick in the world; it proceeds from the lentisciscus, which in other parts of the world produces the like gum.

Ricaut, State of the Greek Church, p. 358.

We may apply intercepts, upon the temples,
of mastick; frontals may also be applied.

Wiseman, Surgery.

3. A kind of mortar or cement.

As for the small particles of brick and stone, the least moistness would join them together, and turn them into a kind of mastich, which those insects could not divide. Addison.

MA'STICOT. n. s. [marum, Latin.] See MASSICOTT.

Grind your masticot with saffron in gum water.

Peacham.

Masticot is very light, because it is a very clear yellow, and very near to white.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

MA'STUFF.† n. s. mastives, plural. [masin,
French; mastino, Italian. Dr. Johnson.

— Dr. Jamieson pleasantly notices the etymology, in Manwood's Forest Laws, of this word, viz. mase or maze, and thief, i. e. to scare away robbers. He might have added the same quaint deduction from Lily's Euphuës. But still the real etymon is wanting. Minshew, (adverting to the French masin), considers it as abbreviated from maison tenant, i. e. keeping the house; at the same time noticing another derivation from the Latin miscendo, mistus, mixed, the mastiff being descended from a wolf and a dog. Florio, translating the Italian mastino, calls it a "mastie dog." A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dog kept to watch the house.

As savage bull, whom two fierce mastives bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore,
Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afire.

Spenser.

When rank Thersites opes his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear musick, wit, and oracle. Shakspeare.

When we knock at a farmer's door, the first answer shall be his vigilant mastiff.

More, Antiq. against Atheism.

Soon as Ulysses near th' enclosure drew,
With open mouths the furious mastives flew.

Pope, Odyssey.

Let the mastiffs amuse themselves about a sheep's skin stuffed with hay, provided it will keep them from worrying the flock. Swift.

MA'STLESS.† adj. [from mast.]

1. Having no mast.

Shall I, like a mastless ship at sea,
Go every way, and not the way I would?

Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

2. Bearing no mast.

Her shining hair, uncomb'd, was loosely spread,
A crown of mastless oak adorn'd her head.

Dryden.

MA'STLIN.† n. s. [from mesler, French, to mingle; or rather corrupted from mis-cellane. Dr. Johnson. — More probably from the Saxon mytlic, various; mistus,
Latin, mixed; masteluy, Teut. farrago.
See also MASLIN, MESLIN, and MISLIN.]

1. Mixed corn; i. s. wheat and rye.

The other for one lofe hath twaine
Of maslin, of rie, and of wheat. Tusser, Husb.

2. Mixed metal.

What's best to contain the quicksilver? —
It must not be iron, — nor brass, nor copper, nor maslin, nor mineral.

Brewer, Com. of Lingua, (1657.) E. 8. b.

MA'STRESS.* n. s. [maistrresse, French.
So our old word was written; maistress, mastress, mistress.] A mistress; a go-vernness.

This maid, of which I tell my tale expresse,
She kept herself, her neded no maistresse.

Chaucer, Doct. Tale.

Histories are, as testyfyth Cicero, the mastresses of lyfe and expositours of tymes.

Bale, Pref. to Leland's Itin. (1549.)

MA'STRY.* adj. [from mast.] Full of mast;
well stored with acorns. Not in use.
Sherwood, and Cotgrave in V. GLAN-DEUX.

MAT. n. s. [meatte, Saxon; matte, German; matta, Latin.] A texture of sedge, flags, or rushes.

The women and children in the west of Cornwall make mats of a small and fine kind of bents there growing, which serve to cover floors and walls.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half hung,

The floors of plaister, and the walls of dung.
Pope.

To MAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with mats.

Keep the doors and windows of your conservatories well matted, and guarded from the piercing air. Evelyn, Kalendar.

2. To twist together; to join like a mat.

I on a fountain light,
Whose brim with pinks was platted;
The banks with daffadillies dight,
With grass like sleeve was matted.

Drayton, Qu. of Cynthia.

Sometimes beneath an ancient oak,
Or on the matted grass he lies;
No god of sleep he did invoke,
The stream that o'er the pebbles flies,
With gentle slumber crowns his eyes. Dryden.

He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eye-brows hung his matted hair.

Dryden.

The spleen consisteth of muscular fibres, all matted, as in the skin, but in more open work.

Grew, Cosmol.

MATACHIN.† n. s. [French.] An old dance; a kind of Pyrrhick or military dance, in the 16th century, according to Roquefort; both the dance, and the dancer, Cotgrave. "It was well known in France and Italy by the name of the dance of fools, or matachins; who were habited in short jackets with gilt-paper helmets, long streamers tied to their shoulders, and bells to their legs. They carried in their hands a sword and buckler, with which they made a clashing noise, and performed various quick and sprightly evolutions." Douce, Il-lustr. of Shakspeare, vol. ii. p. 435.

Whoever saw a matachin dance to imitate fighting: this was a fight that did imitate the matachin; for they being but three that fought, every one had two adversaries striking him who struck the third.

Sidney.

MA'TADORE. n. s. [matador, a murderer, Spanish.] One of the three principal cards in the games of ombre and quadrille, which are always the two black aces, and the deuce in spades and clubs, and the seventh in hearts and diamonds.

Now move to war her sable matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors. Pope.

MATCH. † n. s. [meche, French; miccia, Italian; probably from mico, to shine, Latin: surely not, as Skinner conjectures, from the Saxon maca, a companion, because a match is a companion to a gun. Dr. Johnson. — It may seem strange that, after this plain statement, Dr. Johnson should have been so misunderstood in some modern publications of note, as in one to have his authority cited for the absurd etymon in this instance of maca, and in another to be abused for confounding it with that word: but so it is. Dr. Johnson had merely placed it as the first meaning of the substantive match, but with a sufficient discrimination of etymology from the rest; and is free from the mistake imputed to him. He might have added the Iceland. mak, unctura, from the Greek μύξα, mucus; which seems to be the etymon rather than the Latin mico, to shine.] Any thing that catches fire; generally a card, rope, or small chip of wood dipped in melted sulphur.

Try them in several bottles matches, and see which of them last longest without stench. Bacon.

He made use of trees as matches to set Druiua a fire. Hovell.

Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a coal, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use. Boyle.

MATCH. n. s. [maca, Saxon. See MAKE.]
1. One equal to another; one able to contest with another.

Government mitigates the inequality of power, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects. Addison.

The old man has met with his match. Spectator.
The natural shame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: It is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue. Rogers.

2. One that suits or tallies with another.
3. A marriage.

The match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities, Beseeching such a wife as your fair daughter. Shakespeare.

Love doth seldom suffer itself to be confined by other matches than those of its own making. Boyle.

With him she strove to join Lavinia's hand,
But dire portents the purpos'd match withstand. Dryden.

4. One to be married.

She inherited a fair fortune of her own, and was very rich in a personal estate, and was looked upon as the richest match of the West. Clarendon.

5. [From μάχη, a fight; or from maca, Saxon, one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.

Shall we play the waltons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears? Shakespeare.

The goat was mine, by singing fairly won.
A solemn match was made; he lost the prize. Dryden.

TO MATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To be equal to.

No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? Life will be too short,
And every measure fall me. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. To shew an equal.

No history or antiquity can match his policies and his conduct. South.

3. To oppose as equal.

Eternal might
To match with their inventions they presume'd
So easy, and of his thunder made a scorn. Milton, P. L.

What though his heart be great, his actions gallant,
He wants a crown to poise against a crown,
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power. Dryden.

The Shepherd's Calendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language. Dryden.

4. To suit; to proportion.

Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support. Roscommon.

Mine have been still Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes. Rowe.

Employ their wit and humour in chusing and matching of patterns and colours. Swift.

5. To marry; to give in marriage.

Great king,
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Thou dost protest thy love, and would'st it show
By matching her, as she would match her foe. Donne.

Them willingly they would have still retain'd,
And match'd unto the prince. Daniel, Civ. War.
When a man thinks himself matched to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast. South, Serm.

A senator of Rome, while Rome surviv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king. Addison.

TO MATCH. v. n.

1. To be married.

A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blessing to match with some heroical-minded lady. Sidney.

I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shakspeare.
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden, Span. Friar.

All creatures else are much unworthy thee,
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryden.

2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.

MA'TCHABLE. † adj. [from match.]

1. Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.

Ye, whose high worths, surpassing paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Ne but in heaven matchable to none,
Why did ye stoop unto so lowly state? Spenser, Sonnet 66.

You shall not find one any way matchable with my beloved. Expos. of Solomon's Song, (1585,) p. 136.

Sir Walter Raleigh, so far as he hath gone in the History of the World, is matchable with the best of the ancients. Hakewill on Providence, p. 251.

2. Correspondent.

Those at land that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found no where but in the deepest parts of the sea.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

MA'TCHER.* n. s. [from match.] One who matches or joins.

A very unequal matcher of innocent souls with brutish bodies. Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682,) p. 7.

MA'TCHLESS.† adj. [from match.]

1. Having no equal.

This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious saint, a matchless queen. Waller.
Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spurs shall urge thy foaming horse. Dryden.

2. Unequal; not matched; not alike. Not in use.

Als as she double spake, so heard she double,
With matchless cares deformed and distort: —
And as her ears, so eke her feet were odde,
And much unlike. Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 28.

MA'TCHLESSLY. adv. In a manner not to be equalled.

MA'TCHLESSNESS. n. s. [from matchless.]
State of being without an equal.

MA'TCHLOCK.* n. s. [match and lock.]
The lock of the musket in former times, holding the match or piece of twisted rope, prepared to retain fire.

MA'TCHMAKER. n. s. [match and make.]

1. One who contrives marriages.

You came to him to know
If you should carry me, or no;
And would have bir'd him and his imps,
To be your matchmakers and pimps. Hudibras.

2. One who makes matches to burn.

MATE.† n. s. [maca, Saxon, a match, an equal; maet, Dutch; mate, Icel. a friend:
from the Su. Goth. make, an equal, Wachter: from mota, to meet, to come together; and thus the Icel. motamant, a guest. Lye, and Serenius.]

1. A husband or wife.

I that am frail flesh and earthly wight,
Unworthy match for such immortal mate,
Myself well wote, and mine unequal fate. Spenser, F. Q.

2. A companion, male or female.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakspeare.

My companion
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war. Shakspeare.

You knew me once no mate
For you; there sitting where you durst not soar. Milton, P. L.

Damon, behold you breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud?
There mounts Amyntas, the young cherubs play
About their godlike mate, and sing him on his way. Dryden.

Leave thy bride alone;
Go, leave her with her maiden mates to play
At sports more harmless, till the break of day. Dryden.

3. The male or female of animals.

Part single, or with mate;
Graze the sea-weed their pasture, and through groves

Of coral stray. Milton, P. L.
Pliny tells us, that elephants know no copulation with any other than their own proper mate. Ayliffe; Parergon.

4. One that sails in the same ship.

What vengeance on the passing fleet she pour'd,
The master frighted, and the mates devour'd.

Roscommon.

5. One that eats at the same table.

6. The second in subordination in a ship: as, the master's mate; the surgeon's mate.

7. [Mat, French. See CHECKMATE.] At the game of chess, the term used when the king is reduced to such a pass that there is no way for him to escape, and so the game is ended.

In bashfulness, the spirits do a little go and come; but with bold men, upon like occasion, they stand at stay; like a stale at chess where it is no mate, but yet the game cannot stir.

Bacon, Ess. Of Boldness.

TO MATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To match; to marry.

Ensemble make of him, your hapless joy,
And of myself now mated as you see,
Whose prouder vaunt, that proud avenging boy,
Did soon pluck down, and curb'd my liberty.

Spenser, F. Q.

The hind that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. Shakespeare, All's Well.

2. To be equal to.

Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the mastful chesnut makes the skies.

Dryden.

Parnassus is its name; whose forky rise
Mounts through the clouds, and mates the lofty skies:

High on the summit of this dubious cliff,
Deucalion wafting moor'd his little skiff.

Dryden.

3. To oppose; to equal.

I, it the way of loyalty and truth,
Dare make a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. [Mater, French; matar, Spanish.] To subdue; to confound; to crush. Not in use.

That is good deceit

Which mates him first, that first intends deceit.

Shakespeare.

My sense she has mated, and amaz'd my sight.

Shakespeare.

Why this is strange; go call the abbess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad. Shaksp.

The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance, who knoweth not? For audacity doth almost bind and mate the weaker sort of minds.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MA'TELESS.* adj. [mate and less.] Without a companion; wanting a mate.

Here Philomel doth her shrill treble sing;

The thrush a tenor; off a little space,

Some mateless dove doth murmur out the base.

Peacham, Minerv. Britan. (1612.)

MATERIAL. adj. [materiel, French, materialis, Latin.]

1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.

When we judge, our minds we mirrors make,
And as those glasses which material be,

Forms of material things do only take,

For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see.

Davies.

That these trees of life and knowledge were material trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted by the most religious and learned writers.

Raleigh.

2. Important; momentous; essential: with to before the thing to which relation is noted.

We must propose unto all men certain petitions, incident and very material in causes of this nature.

Hooker.

Hold them for catholicks or heretics, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this question, material.

Hooker.

What part of the world soever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the same, as one of the principal and most material duties of honour due to Christ.

Hooker.

It may discover some secret meaning and intent therein, very material to the state of that government.

Spenser.

The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that book, neither is it material.

Whigft.

He would not stay at your petitions made;
His business more material.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I pass the rest, whose every race and name,

And kinds, are less material to my theme.

Dryden, Virg.

As for the more material faults of writing, though I see many of them, I want leisure to amend them.

Dryden.

I shall, in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are most material to our present purpose.

Locke.

In this material point, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others.

Swift.

3. Not formal: as, though the material action was the same, it was formerly different.MATERIALS. n. s. [this word is scarcely used in the singular; matériaux, French.] The substance of which any thing is made.

The West Indians, and many nations of the Africans, finding means and materials, have been taught, by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree.

Raleigh.

Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

David, who made such rich provision of materials for the building of the temple, because he had dipt his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile.

South.

That lamp in one of the heathen temples the art of man might make of some such material as the stone asbestus, which being once enkindled, will burn without being consumed.

Wilkins.

The materials of that building very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them.

Tillotson.

Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection.

Locke.

Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,

Only to have the ruins made

Materials for an house decay'd.

Swift.

MATERIALISM.* n. s. [from material.]

The opinions of a materialist.

I am sorry as you seem to be, that our acquaintance harped so much on the subject of materialism.

Gray, Letter to Stonehewer.

MATERIALIST.† n. s. [from material.]

One who denies spiritual substances.

He was bent upon making Memmius a materialist.

Dryden.

The materialists, among modern philosophers,
have maintained that the soul is, like the body, mortal; that when the body ceases to live, the whole man ceases to exist; but the general belief of mankind has, in all ages and countries, been,

that the soul existed after death.

Bp. Watson, Charge, (1798,) p. 26.

MATERIA'LITY. n. s. [materialité, Fr. from material.] Corporeity; material existence; not spirituality.

Considering that corporeity could not agree with this universal subsistent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals;
and so each idea was embodied in every individual of its species.

Digby.

TO MATE'RIALIZE.* v. a. [from material.]

To form into matter or substance.

Having with wonderful art and beauty materialized, if I may so call it, a scheme of abstracted notions, and clothed the most nice refined conceptions of philosophy in sensible images.

Tatler, No. 154.

By this means we materialize our ideas.

Guardian, No. 172.

MATE'RIALLY. adv. [from material.]

1. In the state of matter.

I do not mean that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it.

Boyle.

2. Not formally.

Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil.

South, Sermon.

3. Importantly; essentially.

All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially; as well to reform those which are evil, as to confirm and continue those which are good.

Spenser on Ireland.

MATERIA'LNESST.† n. s. [from material.]

1. State of being material.

2. Importance.

This affidavit is not sufficient as to the inability or materialness of the witnesses.

*State Tr. Couns. Strange, in Proc. against T.
Bainbridge, (1729.)*

MATERIATE.† } adj. [materialatus, Latin.]

MATERIATED. } Consisting of matter.

After long inquiry of things immerse in matter, interpose some subject which is immaterial or less materialate, such as this of sounds, to the end that the intellect may be rectified, and become not partial.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Their materialated structure, and its rare composure.

Whilock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 337.

MATERIA'TION. n. s. [from materiala, Lat.]

The act of forming matter.

Creation is the production of all things out of nothing; a formation not only of matter but of form, and a materialation even of matter itself.

Brown.

MATERNAL. adj. [maternel, French; maternus, Latin.] Motherly; befitting or pertaining to a mother.

The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
And early knew his mother in her smiles:

At his first aptness the maternal love

Those rudiments of reason did improve. Dryden.

MATERNITY.† n. s. [maternité, French; from maternus, Latin.] The character or relation of a mother.

Bullockar.

Her charity was the cause of her maternity.

Parthenia Sacr. (1693,) p. 47.

MAT-FE'LO'N. n. s. [matter, to kill, and felon, a thief.] A species of knap-weed growing wild.MATH.* n. s. [mæð, Saxon, from mapan.]

A mowing. Used in composition; as, aftermath, lattermath.

MATHEMATICAL. } adj. [mathematicus, Latin.] Considered according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.

The east and west,

Upon the globe, a mathematick point
Only divides : thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous.

Denham, Sophy.

It is as impossible for an aggregate of finites to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of mathematick points to amount to or constitute a body.

Boyle.

I suppose all the particles of matter to be besetuated in an exact and mathematical evenness.

Bentley.

MATHEMATICALLY. adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.

We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sun-beams, and is reciprocally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun.

Bentley.

MATHEMATICIAN. n. s. [mathematicus, Latin; mathematicien, French.] A man versed in the mathematics.

One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Aeneas's voyage by the map.

Addison, Spect.

MATHEMATICKS. n. s. [μαθηματικά.] That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt: pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations.

Harris.

The mathematicks and the metaphysics
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you.

Shakspeare.

See mystery to mathematicks fly.

Pope.

MA'THER,* n. s.

Bran-liquors are used to mealy dying stuffs, such as mather is, being the powder or fecula of a root.

See W. Petty, in Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 193.

MA'THES. n. s. [chamamelum sylvestre.] An herb.

Stillingfleet.

That he should raise his mitted crest on high,
And clap his wings, and call his family
To sacred rites; and vex th' ethereal powers
With midnight matins, at unevill hours.

Dryd.

MA'TRASS. n. s. [matrass, French.]

Matrass is the name of a chemical glass vessel made for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually tapered into a conical figure.

Quincy.

Protect from violent storms, and the too parching darts of the sun, your pennached tulips and ranunculus's, covering them with matrasses.

Evelyn, Kalendar.

MA'TRICE,† n. s. [matrice, Fr. Cotgrave; matrix, Latin.]

1. The womb; the cavity where the foetus is formed.

If the time required in vivification be of any length, the spirit will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from exhaling; and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females.

Bacon.

2. A mould; that which gives form to something inclosed.

Erpenius's printed books are already sold; and his matrices of the oriental tongues are bought by Elsevir the printer.

Abp. Usher to Dr. Ward, (1626.) Lett. 99.

Stones that carry a resemblance of cockles, were formed in the cavities of shells; and these shells have served as matrices or moulds to them.

Woodward.

He, after some trial of his manners and learning, thought fit to enter himself of that college, and after to matriculate him in the university.

Walton, Life of Sanderson.

MATRICULATE. n. s. [from the verb.] A man matriculated.

Suffer me, in the name of the matriculates of that famous university, to ask them some plain questions.

Arbutnot.

MATRICULATE.* adj. Admitted into, or enrolled in, any society, by setting down the name.

Why should she take shame,

That her goodly name

Honourably reported,

Should be set and sorted

To be matriculate with ladies of estate?

Skelton, Poems, p. 50.

MATRICULA'TION. n. s. [from matriculate.] The act of matriculating.

A scholar absent from the university for five years, is struck out of the matriculation book; and, upon his coming de novo to the university, ought to be again matriculated.

Ayliffe.

MATRIMONIAL. adj. [matrimonial, French; from matrimonium, Lat.] Suitable to marriage; pertaining to marriage; conubial; nuptial; hymeneal.

If he relied upon that title, he could be but a king at curtesy, and have rather a matrimonial than a regal power, the right remaining in his queen.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

So spake domestick Adam in his care,
And matrimonial love.

Milton, P. L.

Since I am turn'd the husband, you the wife;
The matrimonial victory is mine,
Which, having fairly gain'd, I will resign.

MATRIMONIAL. adv. [from matrimonial.] According to the manner or laws of marriage.

MATROSS. n. s.

Matrosses, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, spunging, firing, and loading them: they carry firelocks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a wagon should break. Bailey.

MATTER.† n. s. [matiere, French; mat-eria, Lat.]

1. Body; substance extended.

If then the soul another soul do make,
 Because her pow'r is kept within a bound,

She must some former stuff or matter take,
 But in the soul there is no matter found.

It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matter in solid, massy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other properties, and in such proportion to space as most conduced to the end for which he formed them; and that those primitive particles being solids are incomparably harder than any porous bodies compounded of them, even so very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation. Newton.

Some have dimensions of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matter or body. Watts, Logick.

2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.

3. Subject; thing treated.

The subject or matter of laws in general is thus far forth constant, which matter is that for the ordering whereof laws were instituted. Hooker.

I have words to speak in thy ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the matter. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Son of God, Saviour of men! Thy name
 Shall be the copious matter of my song.

It is matter of the greatest astonishment to observe the common boldness of men.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

I shall turn
 Full fraught with joyful tiding of these works,
 New matter of his praise and of our songs.

This is so certain in true philosophy, that it is matter of astonishment to me how it came to be doubted. Cheyne.

4. The whole; the very thing supposed.

He grants the deluge to have come so very near the matter, that but very few escaped.

5. Affair; business: in a familiar sense.

To help the matter, the alchemists call in many vanities out of astrology. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Matters succeeded so well with him, that every body was in admiration to see how mighty rich he was grown. L'Estrange.

Never was any thing gotten by sensuality and sloth in matter of profit or reputation. L'Estrange.

A fawn was reasoning the matter with a stag, why he should run away from the dogs. L'Estrange.

Some young female seems to have carried mat-ters so far, that she is ripe for asking advice. Spectator.

If chance herself should vary,
 Observe how matters would miscarry. Prior.

6. Cause of disturbance.

Where art thou? What's the matter with thee? Shakespeare.

What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
 That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
 Make yourselves scabs. Shakespeare, Coriol.

7. Subject of suit or complaint.

Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?

— Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you. Shakespeare.

If the craftsman have a matter against any man, the law is open; let them implead one another. Acts, xix, 38.

In armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if tried by the gross, it would go on the other. Bacon.

8. Import; consequence; importance; moment.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor shew doth better. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

And please yourselves this day;
 No matter from what hands you have the play. Dryden.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
 No matter which, so neither of them lye,
 From steepy Oubrys' top to Pilus drove
 His herd. Dryden.

Pleas'd or displeas'd, no matter now 'tis past;
 The first who dares be angry breathes his last. Granville.

9. Thing; object; that which has some particular relation, or is subject to particular consideration.

The king of Armenia had in his company three of the most famous men for matters of arms. Sidney.

Plato reprehended a young man for entering into a dissolute house; the young man said, Why for so small a matter? Plato replied, But custom is no small matter. Bacon.

Many times the things deduced to judgement may be meum and tuum, when the reason and consequence thereof may trench to point of estate. I call matter of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent. Bacon, Essays.

It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new acquiescent, till they be settled, are rather matters of burden than of strength. Bacon, War with Spain.

10. Question considered.

Upon the whole matter, it is absurd to think that conscience can be kept in order without frequent examination. South.

11. Space or quantity nearly computed.

Away he goes to the market-town, a matter of seven miles off, to enquire if any had seen his ass. L'Estrange.

I have thoughts to tarry a small matter in town, to learn somewhat of your lingo. Congreve, Way of the World.

12. Purulent running; that which is formed by suppuration. [In the Craven dialect "madder, from the Welsh madredd, purulent matter. The Craven pronunciation is much more appropriate than that in common use. The etymon also is preferable to the French matiere, as given by Dr. Johnson." Craven Dial. 1824.]

In an inflamed tubercle in the great angle of the left eye, the matter being suppurated, I opened it. Wiseman, Surgery.

13. Upon the MATTER. A low phrase now out of use. Considering the whole; with respect to the main; nearly.

In their superiors it quencheth jealousy, and layeth their competitors asleep; so that upon the matter, in a great wit deformity is an advantage to rising. Bacon, Essays.

Upon the matter, in these prayers I do the same thing I did before, save only that what before I spake without book I now read. Bp. Sanderson.

The elder, having consumed his whole fortune, when forced to leave his title to his younger brother, left upon the matter nothing to support it. Clarendon.

Waller, with Sir William Balfour, exceeded in horse, but were, upon the matter, equal in foot. Clarendon.

If on one side there are fair proofs, and no pretence of proof on the other, and that the difficulties are most pressing on that side which is destitute of proof, I desire to know, whether this be not upon the matter as satisfactory to a wise man as a demonstration. Tillotson.

MATTER-OF-FACT Man. n. s.* A term of modern times for a grave and precise narrator, remarker, or enquirer; one who sticks to the matter of any fact.

There was besides a sort of flying squadron of plain, sensible, matter-of-fact men, confined to no club. Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 17.

One of our company, a doctor of divinity, and a plain matter-of-fact man. Doswell, Life of Johnson.

TO MATTER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be of importance; to import. It is used with only if, this, that, or what before it.

It matters not, so they deny it all;
 And can but carry the lye constantly.

It matters not how they were called, so we know who they are. Locke.

If Petrarch's muse did Laura's wit rehearse;
 And Cowley flatter'd dear Orinda's verse;
 She hopes from you — Pox take her hopes and fears,
 I plead her sex's claim: what matters hers? Prior.

2. To generate matter by suppuration.

Deadly wounds inward bleed, each slight sore mattereth. Sidney.
 The herpes beneath mattered, and were dried up with common epulotics. Wiseman, Surgery.

TO MATTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To regard; not to neglect: as, I matter not that calumny.

Laws my Pindarick parents mattered not. Bramston.

MATTERLESS.* adj. [matter and less.]
 Void of matter.

All fine noise
 Of verse, mere matterless and tinkling toys. * B. Jonson, Horace.

You must dig with matlock and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth.

The Turks laboured with matlocks and pickaxes to dig up the foundation of the wall.

To destroy mountains was more to be expected from earthquakes than corrosive waters, and condemneth the judgement of Xerxes, that wrought through mount Athos with matlocks.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

MA'TTRESS.† n. s. [matras, French; matras, Welsh. Dr. Johnson.—Sir J. Chardin, describing the manner of travelling in Persia, says that when they are about to remove from the inn where they have slept,—the valet de chambre puts up the matras, which is a kind of portmanteau where the bed and bed cloathes are put up with as much convenience as in a chest; of which one horse will carry two. See his Travels, vol. i. p. 385.] A kind of quilt made to lie upon.

Content with a trucklebed, or a mattress in the garret. Howell, Instr. For. Trav. (1642), p. 199. Their mattresses were made of feathers and straw, and sometimes of furs from Gaul.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate,
With golden canopies and beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be found
On the hard mattress, or the mother ground.

Dryden.

TO MA'TURATE.* v. a. [maturatus, Lat. from maturus.] To ripen; to bring to perfection.

Great things are not achieved and matured by force or agility of body, but by prudence and subtilty of brain.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653), p. 131. Such is the last product of a tree, perfectly matured by time and sun. Ep. Berkeley, Siris, § 38.

MATURATION.† n. s. [maturation, Fr. Cotgrave; from maturus, Lat.]

1. The state of growing ripe.

One of the causes why grains and fruits are more nourishing than leaves is, the length of time in which they grow to maturation.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There is the maturation of fruits, the maturation of drinks, and the maturation of imposthumes; as also other maturations of metals.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Maturation is especially observed in the fruits of trees, which are then said to be ripe, when the seeds are fit to be sown again.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 21.

2. The act of ripening.

Transplanting, meliorating the tastes, smells, &c. of plants; accelerating of germination and maturation in them.

Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Hartlib, p. 14.

The temperate zones have no heat to spare in summer; it is very well if it be sufficient for the maturation of fruits.

Bentley, Serm. 8.

3. [In physick.] Maturation, by some physical writers, is applied to the supuration of excrementitious or extravasated juices into matter, and differs from concoction or digestion, which is the raising to a greater perfection the alimentary and natural juices in their proper canals.

Quincy.

MA'TURATIVE.† adj. [maturatif, Fr. Cotgrave; from maturus, Lat.]

1. Ripening; conducive to ripeness.

Wiseman, Surgery.

MATU'RE. adj. [maturus, Lat.]

1. Ripe; perfected by time.

When once he was mature for man:

In Britain where he,

That could stand up his parallel,

Or rival object be?

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Their prince is a man of learning and virtue, mature in years and experience, who has seldom vanity to gratify.

Alderson.

Mature the virgin was of Egypt's race,
Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty deck'd her face.

Prior.

How shall I meet, or how accost the sage,
Unskill'd in speech, nor yet mature of age.

Pope, Odys.

2. Brought near to completion.

This lies glowing, and is mature for the violent breaking out.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Here 'tis the sands

Thee I'll rake up; and in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd duke.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. Well-disposed; fit for execution; well-digested.

TO MA'TU'RE. v. a. [maturus, Lat.]

1. To ripen; to advance to ripeness.

A prince ought maturely to consider, when he enters on a war, whether his coffers be full, and his revenues clear of debts.

Swift.

3. Early; soon. A Latinism.

We are so far from repining at God, that he hath not extended the period of our lives to the longevity of the antediluvians; that we give him thanks for contracting the days of our trial, and receiving us more maturely into those everlasting habitations above.

Bentley.

MATU'RITY.† n. s. [maturité, French; maturitas, Lat.] Ripeness; completion.

Maturity is a mean between two extremities, wherein nothing lacketh or exceedeth; and is in such estate, that it may neither increase nor diminish without losing the denomination of maturity. The Greeks in a proverb do express it properly in two words, which I can none otherwise interpret in English but Speede thee slowly.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 71. b.

It may not be unfit to call some of young years to train up for those weighty affairs, against the time of greater maturity.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Impatient nature had taught motion

To start from time, and cheerfully to fly

Before, and seize upon maturity.

Crashaw.

Various mortifications must be undergone, many difficulties and obstructions conquered, before we can arrive at a just maturity in religion.

Rogers, Serm.

MA'TUTINAL.* adj. [matutinel, French; MA'TUTINE. } matutinus, Latin.] Relating to the morning.

Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Shakespeare.

Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence;
Thy valour, and thy heart; thou art a traitor.

Shakespeare.

I through the ample air, in triumph high
Shall lead hell captive; maugre hell! and show
The pow'r of darkness bound.

Milton, P. L.

Maugre all which, 'twas to stand fast,
As long as monarchy should last.

Hudibras.

He prophesied of the success of his gospel; which, after his death, immediately took root, and spread itself every-where, maugre all opposition or persecution.

Burnet.

MA'VIS. n. s. [mauvais, French.] A thrush, or bird like a thrush. An old word.

The world that cannot deem of worthy things,
When I do praise her, say I do but flatter;
So doth the cuckoo, when the mavis sings,
Begins his witless note apace to clear.

Spenser, Sonn.

In birds, kites have a resemblance with hawks, and blackbirds with thrushes and mavises.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MA'UKIN.* n. s. [See MALKIN.] A dish-clout; a drag to sweep an oven. Cotgrave. Used still in some parts of England for a scarecrow; a figure made up of clouts or patches: hence a coarse or dirty wench; called also vulgarly a mauk.

A crooked carcass, a maukin, a witch, a rotten post, an hedge-stake, may be so set out and tricked up, that it shall make as fair a shew, as much enamour as the rest: many a silly fellow is so taken.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 478.

MAUL.† n. s. [malleus, Latin.] A heavy hammer; commonly written mall.

A man that bareth false witness is a moul, a sword, and sharp arrow.

To MAUND.* v. n. [maundier, French, to beg; mendians, Norm. Fr. beggars.] To mutter, as beggars do; to mumble; to use unintelligible terms. Maunding, in the Canting Dictionary, is begging. See also To MAUNDER.

A rogue,

A very canter, Sir, one that maunds Upon the pad. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

To MAUNDER.† v. n. [Dr. Johnson derives this word in its first meaning from maudire, Fr. to curse; Serenius, from the Su. Goth. mana, provocare, exorcizare.]

1. To grumble; to murmur.

He made me many visits, maundering as if I had done him a discourtesy in leaving such an opening. Wiseman, Surgey.

2. To wander about in a thoughtful manner; to talk confusedly; [perhaps from the Gael. mandagh, a stutterm.] A northern word. It is written both maunder and mander. See Lancashire and Craven Dial. Brockett's N. C. Words, and Westmoreland Gloss.

3. To beg. [maundier, French.]

Beg, beg, and keep constables waking; maunder for butter-milk!

Beaumont and Fl. Th. and Theodoret.

MA'UNDER.* n. s. [from To maund.] A beggar. Gloucestershire. Pegge.

Springlove, the great commander of the maunders. Broome, Jovial Crew.

Their maunders used to say, Think me worthy. Gregory's Learned Works, (1684,) p. 60.

MA'UNDERER. n. s. [from maunder.] A murmurer; a grumbler.

MA'UNDERING.* n. s. [from maunder.] Complaint.

The maunderings of discontent are like the voice and behaviour of a swine, who, when he feels it rain, runs grumbling about, and by that indeed discovers his nature, but does not avoid the storm. South, Serm. ii. 604.

MAUNDAY-THURSDAY.† n. s. [derived by Spelman from mande, a handbasket, in which the king was accustomed to give alms to the poor: by others from dies mandati, the day on which our Saviour gave his great mandate, That we should love one another.] The Thursday before Good-friday.

He treateth, in his seconde parte, the maundaye of Chryste with his apostles upon Shere Thursday. More, Answ. to Tyndal on the Supper of our Lord, Pref.

Here the monks their maundie make, with sundrie solemne rights

And signs of great humilitie: —

Each one of their fete doth wash, &c.

Tr. of Naogeorgus's Popish Kingdome, fol. 51.

This day is called [dies mandati] mandate or maunday Thursday, from the commandment which our Saviour gave his apostles to commemorate the sacrament of his supper, which he this day instituted after the celebration of the passover; — or from that new commandment which he gave them, to love one another, after he had washed their feet, in token of the love he bore to them.

Wheatly on the Comm. Fr. ch. 5. § 14.

MAUSOLE'AN.* adj. [from mausoleum.] Monumental.

Horses, heralds, black mourners, solemnities, obelisks, and mausolean tombs.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 390.

MAUSOLE'UM.† n. s. [Latin; mausolée, French. A name which was first given to a stately monument erected by his queen Artemisia, to her husband Mausolus, king of Caria.] A pompous funeral monument.

Erect no mausoleums; for his best

Monument is his spouse's marbled breast.

Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings.

MA'UTHER.* n. s. [moer, Danish, a girl; or rather from the Goth. maui, the same.] A foolish young girl. Dr. Johnson notices mother as thus used, under the eighth sense of that word. It is a Norfolk word.

Kas. Away, you talk like a foolish mauther.

Sur. Sir, all is truth she says.

B. Jonson, Alchymist.

MAW.† n. s. [maza, Sax.; mag, Su. Goth.]

1. The stomach of animals, and of human beings in contempt. Dr. Johnson. — Why Dr. Johnson should have said "in contempt," is difficult to guess. The word is very old in our language; and the citations which I add from Chaucer, Sackville, Bishop Hall, Purchas, Beaumont and Fletcher, and an admirable Discourse in 1644, as well as those before given, will shew that no particular contempt is implied in the usage of the word.

There is but litel Latin in my mawe.

Chaucer, Shipm. Prol.

Satisfied from hunger of her maw.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

So oft in feasts with costly changes clad, To crammed maws a sprat new stomach brings.

Sidney.

We have heats of dungs and of bellies and maws of living creatures, and of their bloods.

Bacon.

To be jovial when God calls to mourning, to glut our maw, when he calls to fasting, to glitter when he would have us sackcloth and squalid, he hates it to the death. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 69.

The remainder, by consuming one another, were (a strange remedy) preserved from consumption; every tenth man being by lot tythed to the shambles, and more returning to their fellows' maws, than on their own legs.

Purchas, Pilgrim. (1617,) s. 403.

I have no maw to marriage, yet this rascal, Tempts me extremely.

Beaumont and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

Driness of bones, blackness of skin, wringing of mawis.

Seasonable Serm. (1644,) p. 17.

Though plenteous, all too little seems,

To stuff this maw, this vast unhidebound corps.

Milton, P. L.

The serpent, who his maw obscene had fill'd,

The branches in his curl'd embraces held. Dryden.

2. The craw of birds.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill; their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it down by degrees into the stomach, where it is ground by two strong muscles; in which action they are assisted by small stones, which they swallow for the purpose.

Arbuthnot.

3. An old game at cards.

The king being at the game of maw.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 111.

They respect not him, except it be to play a game at chess, primero, saunt, maw, or such like.

Brewer, Comm. of Ling. iii. 2.

1. A maggot. North. See also MAD.

Grose.

2. A slattern. See MAUKIN. Called vulgarly, in several parts of England, a mawks.

MA'WKIN.* See MAUKIN.

MA'WKINGLY.* adj. [from mawk.] Slaternly; slovenly; like a mawks.

Some silly souls are prone to place much piety in their mawkingly plainness, and in their censoriousness of others who use more comely and costly curiosities.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 87.

MA'WKISH.† adj. [perhaps from maw.]

Apt to give satiety; apt to cause loathing.

The same maukish joys in the same track are found.
Dryden, Lucret.
Like a faint traveller, whose dusty mouth
Grows dry with heat, and spits a maukish froth.

Addison, Georg.
Flow, Welsted, flow, like thine inspirer, beer,
So sweetly maukish, and so smoothly dull. Pope.

MA'WKISHNESS. n. s. [from maukish.]
Aptness to cause loathing.

MA'WKY.* adj. [from mauk.] Maggoty; full of maggots. North.

Yorksh. Gloss. and Grose.
MA'WMET.* n. s. [for mammet; from mam or mother. Dr. Johnson. — It is a corruption of Mahomet; and mammet, in contempt of that person, was first an idol, (then a puppet,) as mammetry was the worship of idols. This word was also written mawment, and is still found in this form in the north of England.] A puppet, anciently an idol.
Unlufel worshipping of mammetis.

Wicliffe, 1 Pet. iv.
In all their temples the mawments shall fall down.
Payfre, Myst. of Candlemas-Day, (1512).

Suche a mawment,
Carried in a tont.
Skatton, Poems, p. 84.
There you shall find in every corner a mawment,
at every door a beggar, in every dish a priest.
Ep. Hall, Epist. D. 1, Ep. 5.

MA'WMETRY.* n. s. [from mawmet.] The religion of Mahomet; and thence employed for idolatry. Obsolete.

In destruction of Mammetrie,
And in increase of Christes law dere,
They ben according so as ye may here.

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.
In his coffre is his mawmet. And certes the sin of mawmetrie is the first that God defended in the ten commandments, as berech witness Exod. ch. 20. Thou shalt have no false goddess, &c.

Chaucer, Pars. Tale.
Throwing away the rage of mawmetry.

Sir T. Herbert, Trava. p. 39.
MA'WMISH.* adj. See MAUM.

MAW-WORM. n. s. [from maw and worm.]
Ordinary gut-worms loosen, and slide off from, the intern tunick of the guts, and frequently creep into the stomach for nutriment, being attracted thither by the sweet chyle; whence they are called stomach or maw-worms.

Harvey on Consumpt.

MA'XILLAR. } adj. [from maxillaris, Latin.]
MA'XILLARY. } Belonging to the jaw-bone.

The greatest quantity of hard substance continued is towards the head; there is the skull, the teeth, and the maxillary bones. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
MA'XIM. n. s. [from maxime, French; maximum, Lat.] An axiom; a general principle; a leading truth.

This maxim out of love I teach. Shakspeare.
It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new acquit, till settled, are rather matters of burden than strength. Bacon.

Yet, as in duty bound, they serve him on;
Nor ease, nor wealth, nor life itself regard,
For 'tis their maxim, love is love's reward.

Dryden.

That the temper, the sentiments, the morality of men, is influenced by the example and disposition of those they converse with, is a reflexion which has long since passed into proverbs, and been ranked among the standing maxims of human wisdom. Rogers.

MAXIMUM.* n. s. [Latin.] In mathematics, the greatest quantity attainable in any given case: opposed to minimum. Used also generally.

Good legislation is the art of conducting a nation to the maximum of happiness, and the minimum of misery.

Colquhoun on Indigence, p. 49.

MAY.† auxiliary verb, preterite might. [from magan, Gothick; magan, Sax.; mogen, Dutch; ma, Danish.]

1. To be at liberty; to be permitted; to be allowed: as, you may do for me [per me licet] all you can.

He that is sent out to travel with the thoughts of a man, designing to improve himself, may get into the conversation of persons of condition.

Locke on Education.

2. To be possible; in the words may be. It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me. Shakspeare.

3. To be by chance. Be the workmen what they may be, let us speak of the work. Bacon, Essays.

How old may Phillis be, you ask,
Whose beauty thus all hearts engages?
To answer is no easy task,
For she has really two ages. Prior.

4. To have power. This also tendeth to no more but what the king may do: for what he may do is of two kinds; what he may do as just, and what he may do as possible. Bacon, Bourne.

5. A word expressing desire. May you live happily and long for the service of your country. Dryden, Ded. to the En.

6. Formerly used for can. Their exceeding mirth may not be told. Spenser, F. Q.

Of outrage to thy hide and mazard.

Hudibras.

To MA'ZARD.* v. a. [from the noun.] To knock on the head. A low expression.

I heard some talk of the carpenters' way, and I attempted that; but there the wooden rogues let a huge trap-door fall o' my head; if I had not been a spirit, I had been mazarded.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

MAZE. n. s. [missen, Dutch, to mistake;
märe, a whirlpool. Skinner.]

1. A labyrinth; a place of perplexity and winding passages.

Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze. Milton, P. L.
The ways of Heaven are dark and intricate,
Puzzled with mazes and perplex'd with error;
Our understanding searches them in vain.

Addison.

He, like a copious river, pour'd his song,
O'er all the mazes of enchanted ground.

Thomson.

2. Confusion of thought; uncertainty;
perplexity.

He left in himself nothing but a maze of longing, and a dungeon of sorrow.

Stiney.

While they study how to bring to pass that religion may seem but a matter made, they lose themselves in the very maze of their own discourses, as if reason did even purposely forsake them, who of purpose forsake God, the author thereof.

Hooker.

I have thrust myself into this maze,
Haply to wive and thrive as best I may.

Shakspeare.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate,

Fix'd fate, free-will, foreknowledge absolute,
And found no end, in wandering mazes lost.

Milton, P. L.

To MAZE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To bewilder; to confuse.

I forget all that I can,
And stonde like a mazed man.

Gower, Conf. Am. B 6.

Much was I maz'd to see this monster kind,
In hundred forms to change his fearful hue.

Spenser.

I'm maz'd.
Indeed! so late! the sluggish maz'd replies,
Brushing the dews of slumber from his eyes.

Neville, Imit. of Juv. (1769.) p. 78.

How from that sapphire fount the crisped brooks,
Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
With mazy error under pendant shades,
Ran nectar.

Milton, P. L.

The Laphie to chariots add the state
Of bits and bridles, taught the steed to bound,
To run the ring, and trace the mazy round.

Dryden.

M.D. Medicinæ doctor, doctor of physick.
ME.†

1. The oblique case of I.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread an interdicted shore. Pope, Odes.
For me the fates severely kind, ordain
A cool suspense. Pope.

2. Me is sometimes a kind of ludicrous
expletive.

He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentlemanlike dogs, under the duke's table. Shakspeare.

He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Steps me a little higher than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor.

Shakspeare.

I, acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs. Shakspeare.

I followed me close, came in foot and hand, and,
with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. It is sometimes used ungrammatically for I; as methinks.

Me rather bad, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.

Shakspeare.

4. A colloquial expression without for;
as, do me such a thing; spell me such a word.

ME'ACOCK.† n. s. [mes cog, Fr. Skinner; others from meek.] An uxorious or effeminate man; a coward.

As stout as a stock-fish, as meek as a meacock.
Apius and Virginia, (1575).

A meacocks is he, who dread'th to see bloushead.
Mir. for Mag. p. 418.

They are like my husband; mere meacocks, verily. Glaphorne, Hollander.

ME'ACOCK. adj. Tame; timorous; cowardly.
'Tis a world to see,

How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curstest shrew.
Shakspeare.

Saxon; mede, meth, German; methe,
Dutch; meddeglyn, metheglin, Welsh;
hydromeli, Lat.] A kind of drink made of water and honey.

Though not so solutive a drink as mead, yet it will be more grateful to the stomach. Bacon.

He sheers his over-burden'd sheep;
Or mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

MEAD.† } n. s. [mæb, mæbepe, Sax; ME'ADOW. } madte, matte, Teut. from meida, Icel. to mow, Serenus; from mæpan, Sax. the same, Mr. H. Tooke.]
Ground somewhat watery, not plowed, but covered with grass and flowers;
pasture, or grass land, annually mown for hay. Mead is a word chiefly poetical.

Where all things in common do rest,
Corney field with the pasture and mead,
Yet what doth it stand you in stead?

Tusser, Husb.

A band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground. Milton, P. L.
Paints her, 'tis true, with the same hand which spreads,
Like glorious colours, through the flow'ry meads;
When lavish nature with her best attire
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire.

Waller.

Yet ere to-morrow's sun shall shew his head,
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy bed.

Dryden.

MEADOW-SAFFRON. n. s. [colchicum, Lat.]
A plant.

The meadow-saffron hath a flower consisting of one leaf, shaped like a lily, rising in form of a small tube, and is gradually widened into six segments; it has likewise a solid, bulbous root, covered with a membranous skin. Miller.

MEADOW-SWEET. n. s. [ulmaria, Latin.]
A plant.

MEADOW-WORT.* n. s. A plant; another name for the meadow-sweet.

Some other wild that grow;
As burnet all abroad, and meadow-wort.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

ME'AGER.† adj. [maigre, French; macer,
Latin. Dr. Johnson.—The Saxon language has both mæpex and mæpze; the writers, therefore, of meager or meagre are both justifiable. The Su. Goth. is mager, the Teut. maegher.]

1. Lean; wanting flesh; starven.
[Thou] art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gate.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Now will the canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit.

Shakespeare, K. John.
Meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones.

Shakespeare.
Whatsoever their neighbour gets, they lose, and the very bread that one eats makes t'other meagre.
L'Estrange.

Fierce famine with her meagre face,
And fevers of the fiery race.
In swarms th' offending wretch surround,
All brooding on the blasted ground ;
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.

2. Poor ; hungry.
Canaan's happy land, when worn with toil,
Requir'd a sabbath year to mend the meagre soil.
Dryden.

To ME'AGER.† v. a. [from the adjective.]
To make lean.

A man meagred with long watching and painful labour. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.
His ceaseless sorrow for the unhappy maid
Meagred his look, and on his spirits prey'd.
Dryden, Ovid.

ME'AGERLY* adv. [from meagre.]
Poorly ; barrenly.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
O physick's power, which (some say) hath restrain'd
Approach of death, alas ! thou helpest meagerty.
Sidney, Arcad. b. 4.

animal in a due state of vigour, ought to be divided into meals at proper intervals.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A repast ; the food eaten.

What strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee ? Shakspeare, Tempest.
Give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

They made me a miser's feast of happiness,
And cou'd not furnish out another meal. Dryden.

3. A part ; a fragment.
That yearly rent is still paid into the hanaper, even as the former casualty itself was wont to be,
in parcel meal, brought in and answered there.
Bacon.

4. [Mælepe, Saxon ; meel, Dutch ; mahlen, to grind, German.] The flower or edible part of corn.

In the bolting and sifting of near fourteen years of such power and favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure and fine meal, but must have a mixture of padar and bran in this lower age of human fragility. Wotton.

An old weasel conveys himself into a meal-tub for the mice to come to her, since she could not go to them. L'Estrange.

To MEAL. v. a. [meler, French.] To sprinkle ; to mingle.

Were he meal'd
With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous. Shakspeare.

ME'ALMAN. n. s. [meal and man.] One that deals in meal.

ME'ALY. adj. [from meal.]

1. Having the taste or soft insipidity of meal ; having the qualities of meal.

The mealy parts of plants dissolved in water make too viscid an aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Besprinkled ; as with meal.
With four wings, as all farinaceous and mealy-winged animals, as butterflies and moths.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
Like a gay insect in his summer shine,
The pop light fluttering spreads his mealy wings.
Thomson.

MEALY-MOUTHED.† adj. [imagined by Skinner to be corrupted from mild-mouthed or mellow-mouthed : but perhaps from the sore mouths of animals, that, when they are unable to comminute
their grain, must be fed with meal. Dr.
Johnson. — This is not very probable.

Our word at first was meal-mouthed : "Ye hypocrits, ye whitened walls and painted sepulchres, ye meal-mouthed counterfeits, ye devourers of widows," Harmar,
Transl. of Beza's Sermon, 1587, p. 315.
Again, in a very spirited description by Marston in his second satire, 1598.

"Who would imagine yonder sober man,
"That same devout meale-mouth'd prescian,

"That cries good brother, kind sister,
makes a duck,

"After the antique grace ; can always pluck

"A sacred booke out of his civil hose ; —
"Says with a turn'd-up eye a solemne grace

"Of half an houre ; then, with a silken face,

"Smiles on the holy crew ; and then doth cry,

"O manners !"

These extracts serve to shew that mealmouthed denoted one who employed soft, insinuating, artful, hypocritical language. And so Minshew defines mealmouthed, "fair spoken ; cujus verba blanda sunt, et mollia, instar farinæ,"

i. e. whose words are as soft and as fine as meal.] Using soft words, concealing the real intention ; speaking hypocritically.

He cannot away with tobacco ; for he is persuaded (and not much amiss) that 'tis a sparer of bread-corn ; which he could find in his heart to transport without licence ; but, weighing the penalty, he grows mealy-mouthed, and dares not.

Overbury, Charact. (1627.) sign. N.
The truth is, Clayton was false, mealy-mouthed, and poor spirited. Life of A. Wood, p. 165.

She was a fool to be mealy-mouthed, where nature speaks so plain. L'Estrange.

MEALY-MOUTHEDNESS.† n. s. [from the adjective.] Hypocrisy in speaking.

MEAN.† adj. [mæne, Sax. common ;
minne, Icel. inferior, less, Serenius ;
gemein, Germ. vile, from man, a multitude, a rabble, Wachter.]

1. Wanting dignity ; of low rank or birth.
She was stricken with most obstinate love to a young man but of mean parentage, in her father's court, named Antiphilus ; so mean, as that he was but the son of her nurse, and by that means without other desert, became known of her. Sidney.

This fairest maid of fairer mind ;
By fortune mean, in nature born a queen. Sidney.

Let pale fac'd fear keep with the mean-born
man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
True hope is swift, and flies with swallow wings :
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

Shakspeare.

2. Low-minded ; base ; ungenerous ; spirit-less.

The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,
More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue
From every meaner man. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Can you imagine I so mean could prove,
To save my life by changing of my love ? Dryden.

We fast not to please men, nor to promote any mean worldly interest. Smalbridge, Sermon.

3. Contemptible ; despicable.

The Roman legions, and great Caesar found,
Our fathers no mean foes. Philips.

4. Low in the degree of any good quality ;
low in worth ; low in power.

Some things are good, yet in so mean a degree of goodness, that many are only not disproved
nor disallowed of God for them. Hooker.

French wheat is bearded, and requireth the best soil, recompensing the same with a profitable plenty ; and not wheat, so termed because it is unbearded, is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain. Carew.

The lands be not holden of her majesty, but by a mean tenure in socage, or by knight's service at the most. Bacon.

By this extortion he suddenly grew from a mean to a mighty estate, insomuch that his ancient inheritance being not one thousand marks yearly,
he became able to dispense ten thousand pounds.

Davies on Ireland.

To peaceful Rome new laws ordain ;
Call'd from his mean abode his sceptre to sus-tain. Dryden.

I have sacrificed much of my own self-love, in preventing not only many mean things from seeing the light, but many which I thought tolerable.

Pope.

5. [Moyen, French.] Middle ; moderate ;
without excess.

He saw this gentleman, one of the propreest and best-graced men that ever I saw, being of middle age and a mean stature. Sidney.

Now read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly.

Milton on Education.

6. Intervening ; intermediate.

In the mean while the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain.

1 Kings, xviii. 45.

MEAN.† n. s. [moyen, French.]

1. Mediocrity ; middle rate ; medium.

He tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means ;
Did place them all in order, and compell
To keep themselves within their sundry reigus,
Together link'd with adamantine chains. Spenser.

Or 'tis seen
Our mean secures us ; and our mere defects Prove our commodities. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Temperance with golden square,
Betwixt them both can measure out a mean.

Shakspeare.

There is a mean in all things, and a certain measure wherein the good and the beautiful consist, and out of which they never can depart.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

But no authority of gods or men

Allow of any mean in poesie. Roscomon.

Against her then her forces prudence joins,
And to the golden mean herself confines.

Denham.

2. Measure; regulation. Not used, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the following passage from Spenser, in which the word signifies (as it was formerly much used, and is not yet entirely out of use,) the tenor part of a musical composition; and not measure, or regulation.

The rolling sea resounding soft,
In his big base then fitly answered,
And on the rock the waves, breaking aloft,
A solemn mean unto them measured.

Spenser, F. Q.

A new voluntary descendant, so farre out of tune,
that it agreeth neither with the tenour, nor meane.

Alp. Crammer, Answ. to Ep. Gardiner, p. 105.

The treble cutteth the air so sharp, as it returneth too swift to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest. Bacon.

Now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descendant;
There wanteth but a mean to fill your song.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. Ver.

The base and treble married to the mean.
Drayton, Baron's Wars, C. 3.

3. Interval; interim; meantime.

But sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish rather than of crime hath been,
Reserve her cause to her eternal doom,
And in the mean vouchsafe her honourable tomb.

Spenser.

In the mean, (turning to the officer who scourged him,) while he and I dispute this matter, mind you your business on his back.

Dryden, Life of Phutarch.

4. Instrument; measure; that which is used in order to any end.

Pamela's noble heart would needs gratefully make known the valiant mean of her safety.

Sidney.

As long as that which Christians did was good, and no way subject to just reproof, their virtuous conversation was a mean to work the heathens' conversion unto Christ.

Hooker.

It is no excuse unto him who, being drunk, committeth incest, and alledgeth that his wits were not his own; in as much as himself might have chosen whether his wits should by that mean have been taken from him.

Hooker.

I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free.

Shakespeare, Othello.

No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar and by you cut off. Shakespeare.

Nature is made better by that mean,
But nature makes that mean; so over that art
Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes.

Shakespeare, Wint Tale.

The mean might be the easier attained.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

5. It is often used in the plural, and by some not very grammatically with an adjective singular: the singular is in this sense now rarely used. Dr. Johnson.—The use of the word means, in English, is remarkable, and may be thought capricious. It seems to be of French extraction. The French have le moyen frequently, but seldom les moyens. We, on the contrary, prefer the plural termination, means; yet still for the most part, though not always, we use it as a noun of the singular number, or as the French le moyen. It is one of those anomalies, which use hath introduced and established, in spite of analogy. We should not be allowed to say—a mean of making men happy. Bp. Hurd, Notes on Addison, Freehold. No. 24.

The more base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.

Shakespeare.

By this means he had them the more at vantage, being tired and harassed with a long march.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Because he wanted means to perform any great action, he made means to return the sooner.

Davies on Ireland.

Strong was their plot,
Their parties great, means good, the season fit,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not.

Daniel.

By this means not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation will be bred up not perverted by any other hopes. Sprat, Serm.

Who is there that hath the leisure and means to collect all the proofs concerning most of the opinions he has, so as safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view.

Locke.

A good character, when established, should not be rested in as an end, but only employed as a means of doing still farther good.

Atterbury.

It renders us careless of approving ourselves to God by religious duties, and, by that means, securing the continuance of his goodness.

Atterbury.

6. By all MEANS. Without doubt; without hesitation; without fail.

7. By no MEANS. Not in any degree; not at all.

The wine on this side of the lake is by no means so good as that on the other.

Addison on Italy.

8. Means are likewise used for revenue; fortune; probably from desmenes.

Your means are slender, your waste is great.

Shakespeare.

For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil;
And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,
Give you advancement. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Essex did not build or adorn any house; the queen perchance spending his time, and himself his means.

Wotton.

9. MEAN-TIME. } In the intervening MEAN-WHILE. } time; sometimes an adverbial mode of speech.

Mean-while

The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
New heav'n and earth.

Milton, P. L.

Mean-time the rapid heavens roll'd down the light,

And on the shaded ocean rush'd the night.

Dryden.

Mean-time her warlike brother on the seas,
His waving streamers to the winds displays.

Dryden.

Mean-time, in shades of night Æneas lies;
Care seiz'd his soul, and sleep forsook his eyes.

Dryden.

Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops,
And, as I see occasion, favour thee.

Addison, Cato.

The Roman legions were all recalled to help their country against the Goths; mean-time the Britons, left to shift for themselves, and harassed by inroads from the Picts, were forced to call in the Saxons for their defence.

Swift.

To MEAN.† v. n. [menan, Saxon.]

1. To have in the mind; to purpose.

These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live. Milton, L'Al.

2. To think; to have the power of thought.

And he who now to sense, now nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning.

Pope.

To MEAN. v. a.

1. To purpose; to intend; to design.

Ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to save much people alive.

Gen. 1. 20.

And life more perfect have attain'd than fate
Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot.

Milton, P. L.

I practis'd it to make you taste your cheer
With double pleasure first, prepar'd by fear;
So loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.

Dryden.

2. To intend; to hint covertly; to understand.

When your children shall say, What mean you by this service? ye shall say, It is the passover.

Ezod. xii. 26.

I forsake an argument on which I could delight to dwell; I mean your judgement in your choice of friends.

Dryden.

Whatever was meant by them, it could not be that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over Abel.

Locke.

To MEAN.* v. n. [mænan, Sax. dolere.]

To moan; to lament. A northern word. Brockett. In the Craven Dialect meaned is bemoaned. And in the old copies of Shakespeare's Mids. Night's Dream, the modern reading of "thus she (Thisbe) moans," is "thus she means." Where see the notes of Ritson and Steevens. See also Dr. Jamieson on this usage of the word in Scotland, Dict. in V. To MENE.

MEAN'DER. n. s. [Meander is a river in Phrygia remarkable for its winding course.] Maze; labyrinth; flexuous passage; serpentine winding; winding course.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, and integrals of the body.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

'Tis well, that while mankind
Through fate's perverse meander errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares.

Prior.

While ling'ring rivers in meanders glide,
They scatter verdant life on either side;
The vallies smile, and with their flowery face,
And wealthy births confess the floods embrace.

Blackmore.

Law is a bottomless pit: John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his suit would not last above a year; yet ten long years did Hocus steer his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts.

Arbutnot.

To MEAN'DER.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To wind; to turn round; to make flexuous.

By their meander'd creeks,

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 1.

Meander'd ways,
And labyrinth-like turnings.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

A waving glow the bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day,
With silver-quivering rills meander'd o'er,
Pope, Mor. Ess. Ep. 4.

To MEA'NDER.* v. n. To run with a serpentine course; to be winding, or intricate.

Whether we fringe the sloping hill,
Or smoothe below the verdant mead;
Whether we break the falling rill,
Or through meandering mazes lead. Shenstone.
Conducting them, as the ground naturally meanders, amidst a few forest trees.

Graves, Recoll. of Shenstone, p. 59.
Thou only know'st
That dark meandering maze,
Where wayward Falsehood strays.

Mason, Caractacus.

MEAN'DRIAN.* } adj. [from meander.]
MEAN'DRY. } Winding; flexuous.

This serpent, surrept generation, with their meandrian turnings and windings, their mental reservations. Dean King, Sermon. Nov. 5. (1608), p. 27.
The river Styx, with crooked and meandry turnings, encircleth the palace of the infernal Dis.

Bacon.

MEANDROUS.† adj. [from meander.]
Winding; flexuous.

With virtuous rectitude meandrous falsehood is inconsistent. Loveday's Letters, (1662), p. 268.

MEANING. n. s. [from mean.]

1. Purpose; intention.

I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning toward you. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Habitual intention.

Some whose meaning hath at first been fair,
Grow knaves by use, and rebels by despair.

Roscommon.

3. The sense; the thing understood.

The meaning, not the name, I call: for thou,
Not of the muses nine. Milton, P. L.
These lost the sense their learning to display,
And those explain'd the meaning quite away.

Pope.

No word more frequently in the mouths of men than conscience; and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood: however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other meanings to it which God Almighty never intended.

Swift.

4. Sense; power of thinking.

He was not spiteful though he wrote a satire,
For still there goes some meaning to ill-nature.

Dryden.

— True no meaning puzzles more than wit.

Pope.

MEANLY.† adv. [from mean. Sax. mæne-lice.]

1. Moderately; not in a great degree.

Dr. Metcalf, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly af-fectioned to set forward learning in others.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

In the reign of Domitian, poetry was but meanly cultivated, but painting eminently flourished.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. Without dignity; poorly.

It was the winter wild,
While the heaven-born child,
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

The Persian state will not endure a king
So meanly born. Denham, Sophy.

3. Without greatness of mind; ungenerously.

Would you meanly thus rely
On power, you know, I must obey.

Prior.

4. Without respect.

Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something desirable in them: we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts, Logick.

ME'ANNES. n. s. [from mean.]

1. Want of excellence.

The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things, standeth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of Common Prayer hath nothing to do. Hooker.

This figure is of a later date by the meanness of
of the workmanship. Addison, on Italy.

2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.

No other nymphs have title to men's arts,
But as their meanness larger hopes imparts.

Waller.

Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wisest to scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good.

South.

3. Lowness of mind.

The name of servants has been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition. South.

4. Sordidness; niggardliness.

MEANT. pref. and part. pass. of To mean.

By Silvia if thy charming self be meant;
If friendship be thy virgin vows extent:
O let me in Aminta's praises join;
Her's my esteem shall be, my passion thine. Prior.

MEASE.† n. s. Probably a corruption of measure: as, a mease of herrings is five hundred. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth.
— Serenius, however, rightly cites the German mass, a measure, as the etymon of this word. See Mess.

ME'ASLE.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson takes no notice of the etymology of this word, merely mentioning the Latin expression of morbilli for the disorder called the measles, and has confined the word to the plural number, with no other signification than that of disease. And, in the first of them, the citation from Shaks-peare belongs to the leper, and not to the disease. It is one of our oldest words, applied to a leper, as by Wicliffe, and in P. Plowman; and thus the adjective in the Ort. Vocab. 1514, "Mesell, full of lepre, leprosus;" which is the modern measly. The old French has the same term mesel, a leper. Kelham.
But it is from the German, mas, masel,
a spot; whence masel, Su. pustules;
maselen, Teut.]

1. A leper. Obsolete.

Rase ye dede men, cleanse ye mesels.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. x.

Blind men seen, crokide gone, mesels be made clene. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xi.

So shall my lungs

Coin words till their decay, against those measels
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet sought
The very way to catch them. Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. In the plural, a critical eruption in a fever, well known in the common practice. Quincy.

Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal, as likewise the measles. Arbuthnot.

3. A disease of swine.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it: — nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed; — the swine died of the measles, the sheep of the rot.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

4. A disease of trees.

Fruit-bearers are often infected with the measles,
by being scorched with the sun. Mortimer, Husb.

ME'ASLED. adj. [from measle.] Infected
with the measles.

Thou vermin wretched,
As e'er in measled pork was hatched;
Thou tail of worship that dost grow
On rump of justice as of cow. Hudibras, i. ii.

ME'ASLEDNESS.* n. s. [from measled.]
Diseased state of swine.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

ME'ASLY. adj. [from measles.] Scabbed
with the measles.

Last trotted forth the gentle swine
To ease her against the stump,
And dismally was heard to whine,
All as she scrubb'd her measly rump. Swift.

ME'ASURABLE.† adj. [from measure.]

1. That may be measured; that may admit of computation.

God's eternal duration is permanent and invisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments.

Bentley, Sermon.

2. Moderate; in small quantity.

A measurable mildness or mean in all things.
North, Tr. of Philosopher at Court, (1575), p. 91.

ME'ASURABLENESS. n. s. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.

ME'ASURABLY. adv. [from measurable.]
Moderately.

Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness of the heart. Ecclesi. xxxi. 28.

ME'ASURE. n. s. [mesure, French; mensura, Latin.]

1. That by which any thing is measured.

A taylor's news,

Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of many a thousand. Shakespeare, K. John.

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.

All magnitudes are capable of being measured;
but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measure. Holder on Time.

When Moses speaks of measures, for example,
of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure
he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.

He lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other men's eyes and tongues. Bp. Taylor.

God's goodness is the measure of his providence.

More.

I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insistent.

Glanville, Scopsis.

3. Proportion; quantity settled.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto: and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.

I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment, yet there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity: as, a measure of wine.

Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. Sufficient quantity.

I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shakspeare.

6. Allotment; portion allotted.

Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And every measure fail me. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Cor. x. 13.

If else thou seek'st
Aught, not surpassing human measure, say.
Milton, P. L.
Our religion sets before us, not the example of a stupid stoick, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson.

7. Degree; quantity.
I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world.

Abbot, Descript. of the World.
There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when your own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over-scrupulously pursue it—when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings.

Bp. Taylor, Guide to a Penitent.
The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and consummation of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss.
Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

8. Proportionate time; musical time.
Amaryllis breathes thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains.
Prior.

9. Motion harmonically regulated.
My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport.
Shakspeare.

As when the stars in their æthereal race,
At length have roll'd around their liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance.
Dryden.

10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.

Wooring, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cique pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical, the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and archantry. Shakspeare.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Shakspeare.

11. Moderation; not excess.
O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstasy;
In measure reign thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isa. vi. 14.

12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is the Greek Μέτρον.

Τρεῖς ἑταῖροι δὲ καὶ τριάδας δύο, μέτρον ἔχοντες
ἡμεῖς ἐπὶ τῆς βιοτῆς ἡμετέρας ἀνέμετρον
Ἀρχαῖοι τὸ τοιοῦτον.

Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psal. xxxix. 4.

13. Any thing adjusted.
Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards.
Smalbridge, Serm.

14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.
I addressed them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measure, rather than the height of thought.
Dryden.

The numbers themselves, though of the heroic measure, should be the smoothest imaginable.
Pope.

15. Tune; proportionate notes.

The joyous nymphs, and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their musick sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet.
Spenser.

16. Mean of action; mean to an end. The original of this phrase refers to the necessity of measuring the ground upon which any structure is to be raised, or any distant effect to be produced, as in shooting at a mark. Hence he that proportioned his means to his end was said to take right measures. By degrees measures and means were confounded, and any thing done for an end, and sometimes any transaction absolutely, is called a measure, with no more propriety than if, because an archer might be said to have taken wrong measures when his mark was beyond his reach, we should say that it was a bad measure to use a heavy arrow.

His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.

17. To have hard measure; to be hardly treated.

To MEASURE. v. a. [mesurer, French;
mensuro, Latin.]

1. To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.

Archidamus having received from Philip, after the victory of Chæronæa, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow, he would find it no longer than it was before his victory.
Bacon, Apophthegms.

2. To pass through; to judge of extent by marching over.

A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shaks.
I'll tell thee all my whole device
At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. Shaks.

The vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way.
Dryden.

3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.

Great are thy works, Jehovah; infinite Thy pow'r! What thought can measure thee, or tongue
Relate thee? Milton, P. L.

4. To adjust; to proportion.

To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires. Bp. Taylor.

Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange that he measures the value of the commodity he sells. Locke.

5. To mark out in stated quantities.

What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Addison, Spect.

6. To allot or distribute by measure.

With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again. St. Mat. vii. 2.

MEASURELESS.† adj. [from measure.] Immense; immeasurable.

He shut up in measureless content. Shaks.
Compar'd with measureless eternity.
J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 71.

MEASUREMENT.† n. s. [from measure.]
Mensuration; act of measuring; result of measuring.

Accurate measurements of all sorts of beautiful animals.

Burke on the Subl. and Beautiful, P. iii. § 4.

MEASURE.† n. s. [from measure.] One that measures.

The world's bright eye, time's measurer, begun
Through watery Capricorn his course to run.

Howell, Poem to K. Ch. I. (1641.)

MEASURING. adj. [from measure.] It is applied to a cast not to be distinguished in its length from another but by measuring.

When lusty shepherds throw
The bar by turns, and none the rest out-go
So far, but that the best are measuring casts,
Their emulation and their pasture lasts. Waller.

MEAR.* n. s. A bound. See MERE.

To MEAR.* v. a. To divide See To MERE.

MEAT.† n. s. [mæte, mete, food, Saxon;
mats, Goth. the same; the past participle, Mr. H. Tooke observes, of matjan, metjan, to eat.]

1. Flesh to be eaten.

To his father he sent ten she asses laden with corn, and bread, and meat for his father by the way. Gen. xlv. 29.

Carnivære, and birds of prey, are no good meat;
but the reason is, rather the choleric nature of those birds than their feeding upon flesh; for pewets and ducks feed upon flesh, and yet are good meat. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There was a multitude of excises; as, the vegetigital macelli, a tax upon meat. Arbuthnot.

2. Food in general.

Never words were musick to thine ear,
And never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake or carv'd. Shaks. Com. of Err.
Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both. 1 Cor. vi. 13.

MEATED. adj. [from meat.] Fed; foddered.

Strong oxen and horses, wel shod and wel clad,
Wel meat and used. Tusser, Husb.

MEATH.† n. s. [See the etymology of MEAD.]

1. A drink, like mead; or probably the same.

Meath made of honey, or liquorice sodden in water.

Robinson, Tr. of More's Utopia, (1551,) ii. 1.
For drink the grape

She crushes, inoffensive must, and meaths
From many a berry. Milton, P. L.

2. Option; preference. [what one mayeth.
Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 421.]
Used in Lincolnshire. Skinner, and Grose. As, "I give thee the meath of buying."

MEATY.* adj. [from meat.] Fleishy, but not fat. Norfolk. Grose.

To MEAW.* v. n. [miaua, Icel. miauler,
To MEAWL. } French.] To cry as a cat.

See To MEW. It is vulgarly pronounced, as it was thus formerly written, instead of mewl. See Sherwood's Dict. And thus quack was written quaque, to represent the sound better.

MEAZLING. part. generally called miz-zling.

The air feels more moist when the water is in small than in great drops; in meazling and soaking rain, than in great showers. Arbuthnot on Air.

MECHANICAL. } adj. [mechanicus, Lat.; MECHANICAL. } [mechanique, French;
from μηχανή.]

1. Constructed by the laws of mechanics.

Many a fair precept in poetry, is like a seeming demonstration in mathematics, very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation.

The main business of natural philosophy, is to argue from phenomena without feigning hypotheses, and to deduce causes from effects till we come to the very first cause, which certainly is not mechanical; and not only to unfold the mechanism of the world, but chiefly to resolve these, and such like questions.

2. Skilled in mechanicks; bred to manual labour.

3. Mean; servile; of mean occupation.

Know you not, being mechanical, you ought not walk upon a labouring day, without the sign of your profession?

Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue; I will stare him out of his wits; I will hew him with my cudgel.

With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view.
To make a god, a hero, or a king,
Descend to a mechanick dialect.

MECHANICK. n. s. A manufacturer; a low workman.

Do not bid me Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate Again with Rome's mechanicks.

A third proves a very heavy philosopher, who possibly would have made a good mechanick, and have done well enough at the useful philosophy of the spade or the anvil.

MECHANICKS. n. s. pl. [mechanica, Latin.]

Dr. Wallis defines mechanicks to be the geometry of motion, a mathematical science, which shews the effects of powers, or moving forces, so far as they are applied to engines, and demonstrates the laws of motion.

The rudiments of geography, with something of mechanicks, may be easily conveyed into the minds of acute young persons.

Salmonus was a great proficient in mechanicks; and inventor of a vessel which imitated thunder.

To MECHANICALIZE. v. a. [from mechanical.] To render mean or low.

MECHANICALLY. adv. [from mechanick.] According to the laws of mechanism.

They suppose even the common animals that are in being, to have been formed mechanically, among the rest.

Later philosophers feign hypotheses for explaining all things mechanically, and refer other causes to metaphysics.

MECHANICALNESS. † n. s. [from mechanick.]

1. Agreableness to the laws of mechanism.

2. Meanness.

MECHANICIAN. † n. s. [mechanicien, Fr.]

A man professing or studying the construction of machines.

I appeal to painters, mechanicians, mathematicians.

Some were figured like male, others like female screws, as mechanicians speak.

MECHANISM. n. s. [mechanisme, French.]

1. Action according to mechanick laws.

After the chyle has passed through the lungs, nature continues her usual mechanism, to convert it into animal substances.

He acknowledges nothing besides matter and motion; so that all must be performed either by mechanism or accident, either of which is wholly unaccountable.

2. Construction of parts depending on each other in any complicated fabric.

MECHANIST.  n. s.* [from mechanism.] A mechanician.

The mechanist will be afraid to assert before hardy contradiction, the possibility of tearing down bulwarks with a silk-worm's thread; and the astronomer of relating the rapidity of light, the distance of the fixed stars, and the height of the lunar mountains.

MECHLIN.  adj.* The epithet given to lace made at Mechlin.

With eager beats his mechlin cravat moves.

MECHOACAN. n. s. [from the place.]

Mechoacan is a large root, twelve or fourteen inches long: the plant which affords it is a species of bindweed, and its stalks are angular: the root in powder is a gentle and mild purgative.

MECHLIN.  adj.* The epithet given to lace made at Mechlin.

MECO'NUM. n. s. [μηκόνιον.]

1. Expressed juice of poppy.

2. The first excrement of children.

Infants new-born have a meconium, or sort of dark-coloured excrement in the bowels.

ME'DAL. n. s. [medaille, Fr. probably from metallum, Lat.]

1. An ancient coin.

The Roman medals were their current money: when an action deserved to be recorded on a coin, it was stamped and issued out of the mint.

2. A piece stamped in honour of some remarkable performance.

MEDALLICK. adj. [from medal.] Pertaining to medals.

You will never, with all your medallick eloquence, persuade Eugenius, that it is better to have a pocketful of Otho's than of Jacobus's.

MEDALLION. n. s. [medaillon, Fr.] A large antique stamp or medal.

Medallions, in respect of the other coins, were the same as modern medals in respect of modern money.

MEDALLIST. n. s. [medailliste, Fr.] A man skilled or curious in medals.

As a medallist, you are not to look upon a cabinet of medals as a treasure of money, but of knowledge.

To ME'DDLE. † v. n. [middelen, Teut. medla, Su.]

1. To have to do: in this sense it is always followed by with.

It is reported that cassia, when gathered, is put into the skins of beasts newly flayed, which breeding worms, they devour the pith and marrow, and so make it hollow; but meddle not with the back, because it is bitter.

2. To interpose; to act in any thing.

For my part, I'll not meddle nor make any farther.

In every turn of state, without meddling on either side, he has always been favourable to merit.

The civil lawyers have pretended to determine concerning the succession of princes; but, by our author's principles, have meddled in a matter that belongs not to them.

What hast thou to do to meddle with the affairs of my family? to dispose of my estate, old boy?

3. To interpose or intervene importunately or officiously.

Why should'st thou meddle to thy hurt?

It is an honour for a man to cease from strife: But every fool will be meddling.

This meddling priest longs to be found a fool.

Let me shake off th' intrusive cares of day,

And lay the meddling senses all aside.

To ME'DDLE. v. a. [from mesler, Fr.] To mix; to mingle.

He that had well ycon'd his here,

Thus meddled his talk with many a tear.

A meddled state of the orders of the gospel, and ceremonies of popery, is not the best way to banish popery.

ME'DDLER. n. s. [from meddle.] One who busies himself with things in which he has no concern.

Do not drive away such as bring thee information, as meddlers, but accept of them in good part.

This may be applied to those that assume to themselves the merits of other men's services, meddlers, boasters, and impertinents.

ME'DDLESOME. † adj. Intermeddling; as, a meddlesome, busy body.

Christendom could not have been so long, if there had been so meddlesome a body in it as the pope now is.

ME'DDLESOMENESS.  n. s.* [from meddlesome.] Officiousness; forwardness to busy one's self, where one has no concern.

I shall propound some general rules, according to which such meddlesomeness is commonly blamable.

ME'DDLING.  n. s.* [from To meddle.] Officious and impertinent interposition.

Let them read over their catechism, and lay aside spite and virulence, gossiping and meddling, calumny and detraction.

MEDIA.  See MEDIUM.*

MEDIASTINE. n. s. [French; mediastinum, Latin.] The fimbriated body about which the guts are convolved.

None of the membranes which invest the inside of the breast but may be the seat of this disease, the mediastine as well as the pleura.

To ME'DIATE. † v. n. [from medius, Latin.]

1. To interpose as an equal friend to both parties; to act indifferently between contending parties; to intercede.

It would become his love to interpose For my access, at such a needful hour,

And mediate for my blessing.

The corruption of manners in the world, we shall find owing to some mediating schemes that offer to comprehend the different interests of sin and religion.

2. To be between two.

By being crowded, they exclude all other bodies that before mediated between the parts of their body.

To ME'DIATE. v. a.

1. To effect by mediation.

The earl made many professions of his desire to interpose and mediate a good peace between the nations. Clarendon.

I possess chemists and compurgatories of advantages by the confederacy I am mediating between them. Boyle.

2. To limit by something in the middle.

They styled a double step, the space from the elevation of one foot to the same foot set down again, mediated by a step of the other foot, a pace, equal to five feet. Holder.

MEDIATE. adj. [mediat, French; medius, Lat.]

1. Interposed; intervening.

Soon the mediate clouds shall be dispell'd;
The sun shall soon be face to face beheld. Prior.

2. Middle; between two extremes.

Anxious we hover in a mediate state,
Betwixt infinity and nothing. Prior.

3. Acting as a means. Unusual.

The most important care of a new king, was his marriage for mediate establishment of the royal line. Wotton.

MEDIATELY. adv. [from mediate.] By a secondary cause; in such a manner that something acts between the first cause and the last effect.

God worketh all things amongst us mediate by secondary means; the which means of our safety being shipping and sea-forces, are to be esteemed as his gifts, and then only available and beneficial when he vouchsafeth his grace to use them aright. Raleigh, Essays.

Pestilent contagion is propagated immediately by conversing with infected persons, and mediate by pestilent seminaries propagated through the air. Harvey on Consumptions.

MEDIATION. n. s. [mediation, French; from medius, Lat.]

1. Interposition; intervention; agency between two parties, practised by a common friend.

Now nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
Noble offices thou may'st effect
Of mediation after I am dead,
Between his greatness and thy other brethren. Shakspeare.

The king sought unto them to compose those troubles between him and his subjects; they accordingly interposed their mediation in a round and princely manner. Bacon.

2. Agency interposed; intervenient power.

The passions have their residence in the sensitive appetite: for inasmuch as man is a compound of flesh as well as spirit, the soul, during its abode in the body, does all things by the mediation of these passions. South, Serm.

It is utterly unconceivable, that inanimate brute matter, without the mediation of some immaterial being, should operate upon other matter without mutual contact. Bentley.

3. Intercession; entreaty for another.

MEDIA'TOR. n. s. [mediateur, Fr.]

1. One that intervenes between two parties.

You had found by experience the trouble of all men's consequence, and for all matters to yourself, as a mediator between them and their sovereign. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

2. An intercessor; an entreater for another; one who uses his influence in favour of another.

It is against the sense of the law, to make saints or angels to be mediators between God and them. Stillington, fleet.

3. One of the characters of our blessed Saviour.

A mediator is considered two ways, by nature or by office, as the fathers distinguish. He is a mediator by nature, as partaking of both natures divine and human; and mediator by office, as transacting matters between God and man. Waterland.

Man's friend, his mediator, is design'd,
Both ransom and redeemer voluntary. Milton, P. L.

MEDIATO'RIAL. † adj. [from mediator.]
MEDIATORY. † Belonging to a mediator.

This every true Christian longs and breathes after, that these days of sin and misery may be shortened, that Christ would come in his glory, that his mediatory kingdom being fulfilled, it might be delivered up unto the Father.

Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 47.
All other effects of Christ's mediatorial office are accounted for from the truth of his resurrection. Fiddes, Serm.

MEDIA'TORSHIP. † n. s. [from mediator.]
The office of a mediator.

The necessity of this part of the article is evident, in that the death of Christ is the most intimate and essential part of the mediatorship.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.
MEDIA'TRESS.* n. s. [mediatrice, Fr. Cotgrave.] A female mediator.

Neither dare we associate her as a secondary mediatrix with her son.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, (1616), p. 125.

MEDIA'TRIX.† n. s. [mediatrice, French.] A female mediator. Sherwood.

Knights—involving them [ladies] as so many advocates and mediatrices in their conflicts and encounters.

Orad, Tr. of the Life of Constantine, (1738), p. 9.
This stately coquet, [Q. Elizabeth], the guardian of the protestant faith, the terror of the sea, the mediatrix of the factions of Europe.

Watson, Hist. E. P. iii. 493.

MEDICIN.* See the second sense of MEDICINE.

MEDICABLE.* adj. [medicabilis, Latin.] That may be healed.

MEDICAL. adj. [medicus, Lat.] Physically; relating to the art of healing; medicinal.

In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacation would permit. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MEDICALLY. adv. [from medical.] Physically; medicinally.

That which promoted this consideration, and medically advanced the same, was the doctrine of Hippocrates. Brown.

MEDICAMENT. n. s. [medicamentum, French; medicamentum, Lat.] Any thing used in healing; generally topical applications.

Admonitions, fraternal or paternal, then public reprehensions; and upon the unsuccessfulness of these milder medicaments, the use of stronger physick, the censures. Hammond.

A cruel wound was cured by scalding medicaments, after it was putrified; and the violent swelling and bruise of another was taken away by scalding it with milk. Temple, Miscell.

MEDICAME'NTAL. adj. [medicamentum, Fr.; from medicament.] Relating to medicine, internal or topical.

MEDICAMENTALLY. adv. [from medicamentum.] After the manner of medicine; with the power of medicine.

The substance of gold is invincible by the powerfulllest action of natural heat; and that not only alimentially in a substantial mutation, but also medicamentally in any corporeal conversion.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

MEDICASTER.* n. s. [old Fr. medicastre, charlatan.] One who brags of medicines; a quack.

Many medicasters, pretenders to physick, buy the degree of doctor abroad.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. (1654), p. 107.

TO MEDICATE.† v. a. [medico, Lat.] To tincture or impregnate with any thing medicinal.

If some infrequent passenger crossed our streets, it was not without his medicated posie at his nose, and his zedony or angelica in his mouth.

Bp. Hall, Thanksgiv. Serm. (1625.)

The fumes, steams, and stanches of London, do so medicate and impregnate the air about it, that it becomes capable of little more.

Grant, Bills of Mortality.
To this may be ascribed the great effects of medicated waters. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

MEDICATION. n. s. [from medicate.]

1. The act of tincturing or impregnating with medicinal ingredients.

The watering of the plant with an infusion of the medicine may have more force than the rest, because the medication is oft renewed.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The use of physick.

He adviseth to observe the equinoxes and solstices, and to decline medication ten days before and after. Brown.

MEDICINABLE.† adj. [medecinalis, Fr. Cotgrave; medicinalis, Lat.] Having the power of physick; able to heal; salutary.

A medicinable moral, that is, the two bookes of Horace his satyres englished, according to the prescription of saint Hierome.

Drant, Tr. of Hor. (1566.)

God, from whom men's several degrees and pre-eminences do proceed, hath appointed them in his church, at whose hands his pleasure is, that we should receive both baptism, and all other publick medicinable helps of soul.

Hooker, Eccl. Pol. v. § 62.

Any impediment will be medicinable to me. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Old oil is more clear and hot in medicinable use. Bacon.

Accept a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which gives any wine infused therein for four-and-twenty hours the taste and operation of the Spaw water, and is very medicinable for the cure of the spleen. Wotton.

The hearts and galls of pikes are medicinable. Wotton.

MEDICINAL.† adj. [medicinalis, Latin:] this word is now commonly pronounced medicinal, with the accent on the second syllable; but more properly and more agreeably to the best authorities, medicinal on the third. Dr. Johnson.—This is not strictly the case. For Dr. Johnson has introduced an example from Milton, as if the great poet had countenanced medicinal, where the true reading is medicinal, namely in Samson Agonistes; which Milton also had before employed in Comus; though Dr. Johnson has not noticed it. See the edition of Milton's Poetical Works, 1809, vol. v. p. 396. In like manner, two examples from Donne, now added, will shew that medicinal was the pronunciation, even though written medicinal.]

1. Having the power of healing; having physical virtue.

Come with words as medicinal as true

Honest as either; to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Since herbs and roots by dying lose not all,
But they, yea ashes too, are medicinal.

Donne, Poems, p. 215.

Of medicinal and aromatick twigs.

Ibid. p. 263.

The medicinal bitterness hath its ingredients,
truth and charity.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 247.

And yet more medicinal is it than that Moly.

Milton, Comus.

Thoughts my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,

Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts;

Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise,

Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb

Nor medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton, S. A.

The second causes took the swift command,

The medicinal head, the ready hand;

All but eternal doom was conquer'd by their art.

Dryden.

2. Belonging to physick.

Learned he was in med'cinal lore,

For by his side a pouch he wore,

Replete with strange hermetic powder,

That wounds nine miles point-blank with soldier.

Butler.

Such are called medicinal days by some writers, wherein no crisis or change is expected, so as to forbid the use of medicines: but it is most properly used for those days wherein purging, or any other evacuation, is more conveniently complied with.

Quincy.

Medicinal hours are those wherein it is supposed that medicines may be taken, commonly reckoned in the morning fasting, about an hour before dinner, about four hours after dinner, and going to bed; but times are to be governed by the symptoms and aggravation of the distemper.

Quincy.

MEDI'GINALLY.† adv. [from medicinal.]

Physically.

Philosophically, medicinally, to shew the causes, symptoms, and several cures of it, [melancholy,] that it may be the better avoided.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

The witnesses that leach-like liv'd on blood,
Sucking for them were med'cinally good.

Dryden.

MED'ICINE.† n. s. [medicine, French; medicina, Lat.] It is generally pronounced as if only of two syllables, med'cine.]

1. Physick; any remedy administered by a physician.

O, my dear father! restoration, hang

Thy medicine on my lips: and let this kiss

Repair those violent harms. Shakspeare, A. Lear.

A merry heart doth good like a medicine; but a broken spirit drieth the bones. Prov. xvii. 22.

I wish to die, yet dare not death endure;

Detest the medicine, yet desire the cure. Dryden.

2. A physician. [medecin, Fr.] Not in use.

Meet we the medecin of the sickly weal;

And with him pour we in our country's purge,

Each drop of us. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

TO MED'ICINE.† v. a. [medeciner, old French; from the noun.] To restore or cure by medicine; to apply medicine to. Not now perhaps in use.

Not all the drowsy syrups of the world,

Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep

Which thou ow'st yesterday. Shaksp. Othello.

Thus medicining our eyes, we need not doubt to see more into the meaning.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

MED'ICK.† n. s.

1. A plant; a kind of trefoil. [medica, Latin; medique, Fr.]

2. In the plural, the science of medicine.

In medicks, we have some confident undertakers to rescue the science from all its reproaches and dishonours, to cure all diseases, &c.

Spencer on Prodigies, (1665,) p. 402.

MEDI'ETY. n. s. [mediété, French; medietas, Lat.] Middle state; participation of two extremes; half.

They contained no fishy composure, but were made up of man and bird; the human mediety variously placed not only above but below.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

MED'IOCRE.* adj. [mediocris, Lat.] Of moderate degree; of middle rate; middling. A word introduced perhaps into our language by Swift; as I gather from additions made to the former edition of this dictionary; in which, however, I observed that Swift had used the word mediocris; and that the French word is old.

The verses—were very mediocre in themselves.

Swift, Lett. to Pope.

MEDI'OCRIST.* n. s. [from mediocre, Fr.]

One of middling abilities.

He [Hughes] is too grave a poet for me; and I think among the mediocrists in prose as well as verse.

Swift, Lett. to Pope.

MED'IOCRITY. n. s. [mediocrité, French; mediocritas, Latin.]

1. Moderate degree; middle rate.

Men of age seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a mediocrity of success.

Bacon.

There appeared a sudden and marvellous conversion in the duke's case, from the most exalted to the most depressed, as if his expedition had been capable of no mediocrities.

Wotton.

He likens the mediocrity of wit to one of a mean fortune, who manages his store with great parsimony; but who, with fear of running into profuseness, never arrives to the magnificence of living.

Dryden, State of Innocence.

Getting and improving our knowledge in substances only by experience and history, is all that the weakness of our faculties in this state of mediocrity, while we are in this world, can attain to.

Locke.

2. Moderation; temperance.

Lest appetite, in the use of food, should lead us beyond that which is meet, we owe obedience to that law of reason which teacheth mediocrity in meats and drinks.

Hooker.

When they urge us to extreme opposition against the church of Rome, do they mean we should be drawn unto it only for a time, and afterwards return to a mediocrity.

Hooker.

TO MED'ITATE. v. a. [mediter, French; meditor, Latin.]

1. To plan; to scheme; to contrive.

Some affirmed that I meditated a war; God knows, I did not then think of war. K. Charles.

Like a lion that unheeded lay,
Dissembling sleep, and watchful to betray,

With inward rage he meditates his prey. Dryden.

Before the memory of the flood was lost, men meditated the setting up a false religion at Babel.

Forbes.

2. To think on; to revolve in the mind.

Them among

There set a man of ripe and perfect age,

Who did them meditate all his life long.

Spenser, F. Q.

Blessed is the man that doth meditate good things in wisdom, and that reasoneth of holy things.

Eccles. xiv. 20.

TO MED'ITATE. v. n. To think; to muse; to contemplate; to dwell on with intense thought. It is commonly used of pious contemplation.

His delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate night and day. Psal. i. 2.

I will meditate also of all thy work, and talk of all thy doings. Psal. lxxvii. 12.

Meditate till you make some act of piety upon the occasion of what you meditate; either get some new arguments against a sin, or some new encouragements to virtue.

Bp. Taylor.

To worship God, to study his will, to meditate upon him, and to love him; all these being pleasure and peace.

Tillotson.

MEDITATION. n. s. [meditation, French; meditatio, Latin.]

1. Deep thought; close attention; contrivance; contemplation.

I left the meditations wherein I was, and spake to her in anger. 2 Esd. x. 5.

'Tis most true,

That musing meditation most affects

The pensive secrecy of desert cell. Milton, Comus.

Some thought and meditation are necessary; and a man may possibly be so stupid as not to have God in all his thoughts, or to say in his heart, there is none.

Bentley.

2. Thought employed upon sacred objects.

His name was heavenly contemplation;

Of God and goodness was his meditation.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thy thoughts to nobler meditations give,
And study how to die, not how to live. Granville.

3. A series of thoughts occasioned by any object or occurrence. In this sense are books of meditations.

MED'ITATIVE.† adj. [from meditate.]

1. Addicted to meditation. Ainsworth.

Abeillard was pious, reserved, and meditative.

Berington, Hist. of Abeillard.

2. Expressing intention or design.

MEDITERRANE'. } adj. [medius and ter-
MEDITERRANEAN. } ra; mediterraneé,
MEDITERRANEUS. } Fr.]

1. Encircled with land.

In all that part that lieth on the north side of the mediterrane sea, it is thought not to be the vulgar tongue.

Brerewood.

2. Inland; remote from the sea.

It is found in mountains and mediterranean parts; and so it is a fat and unctuous sublimation of the earth.

Brown.

We have taken a less height of the mountains than is requisite, if we respect the mediterranean mountains, or those that are at a great distance from the sea.

Burnet.

MED'UIM.† n. s. [medium, Latin. Sometimes the Latin plural media is used, instead of the English mediums.]

1. Any thing intervening.

Whether any other liquors, being made mediums, cause a diversity of sound from water, it may be tried.

Bacon.

The most barbarous nations, and unpolite people who knew no arts or sciences, and consequently no artificial media, have known, acknowledged, and worshipped a God,

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 547.

I must bring together

All these extremes; and must remove all mediums,

That each may be the other's object. Denham.

Seeing requires light and a free medium, and a right lie to the objects; we can hear in the dark, immured, and by curve lines.

Holler.

He, who looks upon the soul through its outward actions, often sees it through a deceitful medium, which is apt to discolour the object.

Addison, Spect.

The parts of bodies on which their colours depend, are denser than the medium which pervades their interstices.

Newton, Opticks.

Against filling the heavens with fluid mediums, unless they be exceeding rare, a great objection arises from the regular and very lasting motions of the planets and comets in all manner of courses through the heavens.

Newton, Opticks.

2. Anything used in ratiocination, in order to a conclusion; the middle term in an argument, by which propositions are connected.

This cannot be answered by those mediums which have been used.

Dryden, Juv.

We, whose understandings are short, are forced to collect one thing from another, and in that process we seek out proper mediums.

Baker on Learning.

3. The middle place or degree; the just temperature between extremes.

The just medium of this case lies between the pride and the abjection, the two extremes.

L'Estrange.

MEDLAR. † n. s. [from mæb, Saxon; mes-pilus, Latin.]

1. A tree.

The leaves of the medlar are either whole, and shaped like those of the laurel, as in the manured sorts; or lacinated, as in the wild sorts: the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruits are umbilicated, and are not eatable till they decay; and have, for the most part, five hard seeds in each.

Miller.

Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit,
Which maids call medlars.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

2. The fruit of that tree.

You'll be rotten ere you be half ripe,

And that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Shaks.

October is drawn in a garment of yellow and carnation; with a basket of services, medlars, and chesnuts.

Peacham.

No rotten medlars, whilst there be
Whole orchards in virginity.

Cleveland.

Men have gather'd from the hawthorn's branch
Large medlars, imitating regal crowns.

Philips.

MEDLEY. n. s. [from meddle for mingle.] A mixture; a miscellany; a mingled mass. It is commonly used with some degree of contempt.

Some imagined that the powder in the army had taken fire; others, that troops of horsemen approached: in which medley of conceits they bare down one upon another, and jostled many into the tower ditch.

Hayward.

Love is a medley of endearments, jars,
Suspensions, quarrels, reconcilements, wars;
Then peace again.

Walsh.

They count their toilsome marches, long fatigues,
Unusual fastings, and will bear no more
This medley of philosophy and war.

Addison, Cato.

Mahomet began to knock down his fellow citizens, and to fill all Arabia with an unnatural medley of religion and bloodshed.

Addison.

There are that a compounded fluid drain
From different mixtures: and the blended streams,

Each mutually correcting each, create

A pleasurable medley.

Philips.

MEDLEY. † adj. Mingled; confused. Originally applied to mixed colours. "Medle coloure, mixtura." Prompt. Parv.

He rode but homely in a medlee cote.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

I'm strangely discompos'd;

Qualms at my heart, convulsions in my nerves,
Within my little world make medley war.

Dryden.

To MEDLEY. † v. a. To mingle. See To To MEDLY. † MEDDLE.

The things taught by Mahumed are so mixt and confused, that it is no easy task to range them under distinct heads: And yet they are not more medly'd in themselves, than disadvantageously represented by writers.

L. Addison, Life of Mah. p. 83.

MEDULLAR. † adj. [medullaire, French; MEDULLARY † from medulla, Latin.]

Pertaining to the marrow.

These little emissaries, united together at the cortical part of the brain, make the medullary part, being a bundle of very small, thread-like canals or fibres.

Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

The back, for the security of that medullary substance that runs down its cavity, is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve.

Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

MEED. † n. s. [mæb, Saxon; miete, Teutonic; from the Su. Goth. maeta, to recompense. Serenius.]

1. Reward; recompence. Now rarely used, except by poets.

He knows his meed if he be spide,

To be a thousand deaths and shame beside.

Spenser, F. Q.

Whether in beauties glory did exceed,

A rosy garland was the victor's meede.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thanks to men

Of noble minds is honourable meed.

Shakspeare.

He must not float upon his watery bier

Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,

Without the meed of some melodious tear.

Milton, Lycidas.

If so, a cloak and vesture be my meed,

Till his return no title shall I plead.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. Merit; desert. See the commentators on Shakspeare.

Plutus, the god of gold,

Is but his steward, no meed but he repays

Seven-fold above itself.

Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.

My meed has got me fame.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

To MEED. † v. a. [from the noun.] To merit; to deserve. Not in use.

And yet thy body needs a better grave.

Heywood, Silver Age, (1613.)

MEEK. † adj. [miukr, miuk, soft, Icel. and Su. Goth. See To MEEK.]

1. Mild of temper; not proud; not rough; not easily provoked; soft; gentle. Moses was very meek above all men.

Numb. xii. 3.

But he her fears to cease,

Sent down the meek-ey'd peace.

Milton, Ode, Nativ.

We ought to be very cautious and meek-spirited, till we are assured of the honesty of our ancestors.

Collier.

2. Expressing humility and gentleness.

Both confess'd

Humbly their faults, and pardon begg'd, with tears

Watering the ground, and with their sighs the air

Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek.

Milton, P. L.

To MEEK. † v. a. [moeka, Su. Goth. mykia, Icel. from miuk.] To humble.

He that higheth himself shall be mekid: and he that meketh himself schal be enhaunsid.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxiii.

Shall not God spare weyk and feble creatures mekyng themselves, and knowynge their owne infyrmyte?

Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 19.

To ME'KEN. † v. a. [from meek.] To make meek; to soften. This word I have found nowhere else, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the last of the passages from Thomson. It had been in use more than a century before Thomson's time, and Thomson seems to have been fond of the word.

A journey tedious for a strength so young

I undertook; —

Climb'd mountains where the wanton kidding dallies,

Then with soft steps ensal'd the meeken'd vallies,

In quest of memory. Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 1.

Where meeken'd sense, and amiable grace,

And lively sweetness dwell. Thomson, Spring.

His sweetest beams

The sun sheds equal o'er the meeken'd day.

Thomson, Autumn.

The glaring lion saw, his horrid heart

Was meeken'd, and he join'd his sullen joy.

Thomson.

ME'EKLY. adv. [from meek.] Mildly; gently; not ruggedly; not proudly.

Be therefore, O my dear lords, pacify'd,

And this mis-seeming discord meekly lay aside.

Spenser, F. Q.

No pride does to your rising honours grow,

You meekly look on suppliant crowds below.

Stepney.

ME'EKNESS. n. s. [from meek.] Gentleness; mildness; softness of temper.

That pride and meekness mixt by equal part,

Do both appear t'adorn her beauty's grace.

Spenser.

You sign your place and calling, in full seeming;

With meekness and humility; but your heart

Is cram'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride.

Shakspeare.

When his distemper attacked him, he submitted to it with great meekness and resignation, as became a Christian.

Atterbury.

MEER. adj. [See MERE.] Simple; unmixed.

MEER. n. s. [See MERE.] A lake; a boundary.

ME'ERED. adj. Relating to a boundary; meer being a boundary or mark of division.

Hammer.

What, although you fled — why should he follow?

The itch of his affection should not then

Have nickt his captainship; at such a point,

When half to half the world oppos'd, he being

The meered question. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

MEET. † adj. [of obscure etymology.]

1. Fit; proper; qualified: applied both to persons and things. Now rarely used, except as a northern expression.

Ah! my dear love, why do you sleep thus long,
When meeter were that you should now awake?

Spenser.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every parish, would they chuse the meekest?

W. h. l'gt.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest to death. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
 To be known shortens my laid intent,
 My boon I make it, that you know me not,
 Till time and I think meet. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
 What at any time, have you heard her say?
 — That, sir, which I will not report after her.
 — You may to me, and 'tis most meet you should. Shakespeare.

York is meetest man
 To be your regent in the realm of France. Shakespeare.

The eye is very proper and meet for seeing. Bentley.

2. MEET with. Even with. [from meet, the verb.] A very common expression in the midland counties, and signifies, he'll be your match, he'll be even with you. Steevens.

Niece, you tax Signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you. Shakespeare.

To MEET.† v. a. pret. I met; I have met; particip. met. [metan, Saxon, to find; moeten, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—It is from the Gothick motjan, to meet.]

1. To come face to face; to encounter, by travelling in opposite directions.

Met'st thou my posts? Shakespeare.
 His daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and dances. Judges, xi. 34.

Meanwhile our primitive great sire, to meet
 His godlike guest, walks forth. Milton, P. L.

2. To encounter in hostility.

To meet the noise
 Of his almighty engine, he shall hear Infernal thunder. Milton, P. L.

So match'd they stood;
 For never but once more was either like
 To meet so great a foe. Milton, P. L.

3. To encounter unexpectedly.

So judge thou still, presumptuous, till the wrath
 Which thou incur'st by flying, meet thy flight
 Sevenfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell. Milton, P. L.

4. To join another in the same place.

Chance may lead where I may meet
 Some wandering spirit of Heaven by fountain side
 Or in thick shade retired. Milton, P. L.

I knew not, till I met
 My friends, at Cores' now deserted seat. Dryden.
 Not look back to see,
 When what we love we ne'er must meet again. Dryden.

5. To close one with another.

The nearer you come to the end of the lake,
 the mountains on each side grow higher, till at last they meet. Addison.

6. To find; to be treated with; to light on.

Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
 I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
 Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.

Of vice or virtue, whether blest or curst,
 Which meets contempt, or which compassion first. Pope.

To me no greater joy,
 Than that your labours meet a prosperous end. Granville.

7. To assemble from different parts. This is the right place for the example which follows from Milton, and which the folio editions partly exhibit. But in the quarto editions it is transferred to the third meaning of the neuter verb; and Mr. Malone says, that it surely belongs to the verb neuter. Such a mistake would not have been made, if the whole passage of the poet had been duly attended to: in which met is clearly the participle of the verb active meet, i. e. having been assembled together from different parts.

Those two massy pillars
 With horrible convulsion to and fro
 He tugg'd, he shook, till down they came and drew

The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder
 Upon the heads of all who sat beneath,
 Lords, ladies, captains, counsellors, or priests,
 Their choice nobility and flower, not only
 Of this but each Philistian city round,
 Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton, S. A.

To MEET. v. n.

1. To encounter; to close face to face.

2. To encounter in hostility.

Then born to distance by the tides of men,
 Like adamant and steel they meet again. Dryden.

3. To assemble; to come together.

They appointed a day to meet in together. 2 Mac.

The materials of that building happily met together, and very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tillotson.

4. To MEET with. To light on; to find: it includes, sometimes obscurely, the idea of something unexpected.

When he cometh to experience of service abroad, he maketh as worthy a soldier as any nation he meeteth with. Spenser.

We met with many things worthy of observation. Bacon.

Hercules' meeting with pleasure and virtue, was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates. Addison.

What a majesty and force does one meet with in these short inscriptions: are not you amazed to see so much history gathered into so small a compass?
Addison on Anc. Medals.

5. To MEET with. To join.

Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us. Shakspeare.

6. To MEET with. To suffer unexpectedly.

He, that hath suffered this disordered spring,
 Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf. Shakspeare.

A little sum you mourn, while most have met
 With twice the loss, and by as vile a cheat. Creech.

7. To MEET with. To encounter; to engage.

Royal mistress,
 Prepare to meet with more than brutal fury
 From the fierce prince. Rowe, Amb. Step-mother.

8. To MEET with. A Latinism. To obviate; occurrere objecto.

Before I proceed farther, it is good to meet with an objection, which if not removed, the conclusion of experience from the time past to the present will not be sound. Bacon.

9. To advance half way.

He yields himself to the man of business with reluctance, but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of desire. South.

Our meeting hearts
 Consented soon, and marriage made us one. Rowe.
 10. To unite; to join: as, these rivers meet at such a place and join.

ME'ETER. n. s. [from meet.] One that ac-costs another.

There are beside
 Lascivious meeters, to whose venom'd sound
 The open ear of youth doth always listen. Shakspeare.

ME'ETERLY.* adv. See ME'ETERLY,

ME'ETING. n. s. [from meet.]

1. An assembly; a convention.

If the fathers and husbands of those, whose relief this your meeting intends, were of the household of faith, then their relics and children ought not to be strangers to the good that is done in it, if they want it. Spratt, Serm.

Since the ladies have been left out of all meetings except parties at play, our conversation hath degenerated. Swift.

2. An interview.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, and lead him on with a fine baited delay. Shakspeare.

3. A conventicle; an assembly of dissenters.

4. A conflux: as, the meeting of two rivers.

MEETING-HOUSE. n. s. [meeting and house.]
 Place where dissenters assemble to worship.

His heart misgave him that the churches were so many meeting-houses; but I soon made him easy. Addison.

ME'ETLY.† adv. [from the adjective.]
 Fitly; properly.

You can do better yet; but this is meetly. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

See then all this contrariety of sects meetly well reconciled. Bp. Bedell, Cop. of Cert. Lett. p. 323.

ME'ETNESS.† n. s. [from meet.] Fitness; propriety.

This worthiness of meetness, fitness, or due disposition for the heavenly glory, comprehends a deep and profound sense of our own utter unworthiness of it. Bp. Bull, Works, i. 384.

ME'GACOSM.* n. s. [μέγας, great, κόσμος,
 the world, Gr.] The great world.

I desire him to give me leave to set forth our microcosm, man, in some such deformed way, as he doth the megacosm, or great world. Bp. H. Croft, Anim. on Burnet's Theory, 1685, p. 138.

MEGA'POLIS.* n. s. [μέγας, great, πόλις, a city.] A principal city; metropolis.
 Not in use.

Amadavad — is at this present the megapolis of Cambaya. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 64.

MEGRIM.† n. s. [from hemicranium; Latin, hemicrania; Gr. ἡμικρανία; Fr. migrain.
 Our own word at first was migrim. See Huloet's Dict.] Disorder of the head.

In every megrin or vertigo there is an obtene-ration joined with a semblance of turning round. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There screen'd in shades from day's detested
 glare,
 Sleen sighs for ever on her pensive bed,
 Pain at her side, and megrin at her head. Pope.

He accused some of giving all their customers
 colicks and megrims. Tatler, No. 131.

To MEINE.† v. a. [Dr. Johnson merely introduces this word from Ainsworth, without etymology, and without example. It is one of our oldest; and is the Sax. menxan, to mix.] To mingle.
 Obsolete. The participle, meint or
ment.

Of love the sickness
 Is meint with swete and bitterness, Chaucer, Rom. R. 2296.

The salt Medway, that trickling stremes
 Adowne the dales of Kent,
 Till with his elder brother Thames
 His brackish waves be meynt. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

Amongst the woods and thickets ment.
Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

ME'INY.† n. s. [mesnie, French. See the second sense of the substantive many.]

Wicliffe uses the adjective meyneal, "Greete ghe wel her meyneal chirche," which in our present version is, "the church that is in their house," Rom. xvi. 5.] A family; a retinue; domestick servants.

When Jacob came to a foorde, he made all his meiny to goo before. Lib. Festiv. fol. 18. b.

Whilst all the world consisted of a few householders, the elder (or father of the family) exercised authoritie over his meiny.

Lambard, Arch. p. 2.
They summon'd up their meiny; strait took horse;

Commanded me to follow, and attend.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The words are a meiosis, and import much more than they express. South, vol. iv. S. 10.

ΜΕΛΑΜΠΟΔΕ.* n. s. [melampodium, Lat.] The black hellebore.

Here grows melampode every where,
And terebinth, good for goats.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

ΜΕΛΑΝΑΓΟΓΕΣ. n. s. pl. [from μέλας and ἄγω.] Such medicines as are supposed particularly to purge off black choler.

ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟΛΙΚ.† adj. [from melancholy.]

1. Disordered with melancholy; fanciful; hypochondriacal; gloomy.

Our melancholic friend, Propertius,
Hath clos'd himself up in his Cynthia's tomb:
And will by no intreaties be drawn thence.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

If he be mad, or angry, or melancholic, or sprightly, he will paint whatsoever is proportionable to any one. Dryden.

The commentators on old Ari-Stotle, 'tis urg'd, in judgment vary:
They to their own conceits have brought
The image of his general thought:
Just as the melancholic eye
Sees fleets and armies in the sky. Prior.

2. Unhappy; unfortunate; causing sorrow.

The king found himself at the head of his army, after so many accidents and melancholic perplexities. Clarendon.

3. Dismal. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Like the black and melancholic yew-tree,
Dost think to root thyself in dead men's graves,
And yet to prosper? Webster, Vittoria Corombona.
I was tempted to it, by the melancholique prospect I had of it. Dryden, Lett. ed. Malone, L. 8.

ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟ΄ΛΙΑΝ.* } n. s.
ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟΛΙΚ.* }

1. A person diseased with melancholy.

We shall accordingly observe omens, the falling of salt, a dream of a funeral, an unlucky day or hour, the voice of the screech-owl, odd noises in the night, to command the most solemn regards of persons whose imagination is more active and busy than their reason; heathens, women, young persons, melancholics, superstitious or infirm persons, the illiterate multitude.

Spenser on Prodiges, (1665,) p. 75.

You may observe, in the modern stories of our religious melancholics, that they commonly pass out of one passion into another, without any manner of reasoning. Scott, Works, (ed. 1718,) ii. 125.

2. A gloomy state of mind.

My condition is much worse than yours, and different I believe from any other man's; and will very well justify the melancholic that I confess to you, possesses me. Ld. Clarendon, Life, P. ii.

VOL. II.

ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟΛΙΛΥ.* adv. [from melancholy.] In a melancholy manner.

On a pedestal — is set the statue of this young lady, reposing herself in a curious wrought osier chair, all of polished alabaster; melancholily inclining her cheek to her right hand.

Keape, Monument. Westm. (1683,) p. 62.

ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟΛΙΝΕΣ.* n. s. [from melancholy.] Disposition to gloominess; state of being melancholy.

When a boy, he was playmate enough; but withal he had then a contemplative melancholiness.

Aubrey, Acc. of Hobbes, Anec. ii. 600.

This false persuasion in the quakers of being immediately inspired, arises from the melancholiness of their temper.

Hallywell, Acc. of Familism, (1673,) p. 105.

ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟ΄ΛΙΟΥΣ.* adj. [melancolieux, old French.] Melancholy; gloomy, dismal. A word well authorized, but not now in use.

And am so melancolious. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 9.

However flat and melancholious it be, and must serve, though to the eternal disturbance and languishing of him that complains.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. i. 3.

ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟΛΙΣΤ.* n. s. [from melancholy.] One disordered with melancholy; a fanciful or hypochondriacal person.

The melancholist was afraid to sit down for fear of being broken. Glanville, Ess. iv.

As laughter is a faculty peculiar to the human species, the resolution of a religious melancholist entirely to discard it may be reckoned a little essay towards putting away the properties of a rational creature.

Bp. Lavington, Enthus. of Meth. and Pap. i. 20.

ΤΟ ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟΛΙΖΕ.* v. n. [from melancholy.] To become melancholy or gloomy.

They dare not come abroad all their lives after, but melancholize in corners, and keep in holes.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 99.

His phantasy is so restless, operative, and quick, that if it be not in perpetual action, ever employed, it will work upon itself, melancholize, and be carried away instantly with some fear, jealousy, discontent, suspicion, some vain conceit or other.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 290.

If we be not otherwise well employed, we shall be apt in our thoughts to melancholize, and doat upon our misfortunes; the sense of them will fasten upon our spirits, and gnaw our hearts.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. v.

ΤΟ ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟΛΙΖΕ.* v. a. To make sad or melancholy. With the accent formerly on the second syllable, as it was also upon melancholy. See MELANCHOLY.

That thick cloud, you are now enveloped with, of melancholized old age, and undeserved adversity.

More, Song of the Soul, Dedicat. (1647).

Like faithless wife, that by her frampared guise.
Peevish demeanour, sullen sad disdain,
Doth inly deed the spright melancholize
Of her aggrieved husband.

More, Song of the Soul, i. iii. 40.

ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟΛΥ.† n. s. [melancolie, Fr. from μέλας and χολή, Greek.] This word was formerly accented on the second syllable by our poets, as by Spenser, B. Jonson, and Drayton; which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. Yet it was evidently poetick licence only; for Drayton thus uses the word, with the accent both on the first and second syllables:

"And being rouz'd out of melancholly,
"Fly, whirle-winde thoughts, unto the
"heavens, quoth he."

Drayton, Shepherd's Garland, (1593,) p. 4.
"But melancholie grafted in thy braine."

Ibid. p. 5.

It may be added, that this word is rarely found in the plural number. An instance occurs in Lord Rivers's translation of the Dictes and Sayings of the Philosophers, printed by Caxton in 1477. "The maistre of a grete house hath many melancolyes," sign. F. vi.]

1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundancy of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli. Quincy.

2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.

I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is polittick; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these: but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humourous sadness. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Moon struck madness, moping melancholy.

Milton, P. L.

3. A gloomy, pensive, discontented temper.

He protested, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him. Sidney.

All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

This melancholy flatters, but unmans you;
What is it else but penury of soul,
A lazy frost, a numbness of the mind? Dryden.

In those deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heavenly pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns. Pope.

ΜΕΛΑΝΧΟΛΥ. adj. [melancolique, Fr.]

1. Gloomy; dismal.

Think of all our miseries

But as some melancholy dream, which has awak'd us,

To the renewing of our joys. Denham.

If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last, mine undecay'd,
Burn on through death, and animate my shade. Pope.

2. Diseased with melancholy; fanciful; habitually dejected.

How now, sweet Frank; art thou melancholy? Shakspeare.

He observes Lamech more melancholy than usual, and imagines it to be from a suspicion he has of his wife Adah, whom he loved. Locke.

MELANGE.* n. s. [French.] A mixture.

Our conversation was a strange melange of French and Italian.

Drummond, Trav. Lett. 2, (1744).

MELICE'RIS. n. s. [μελικερίς.]

Meliceris is a tumour inclosed in a cystis, and consisting of matter like honey. If the matter resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a suety substance, steatomy.

Sharp.

ME'LILOT. n. s. [melilot, French; melilotus, Latin.] A plant.

TO ME'LORATE. v. a. [meliorer, French, from melior.] To better; to improve.

Grafting meliorates the fruit; for that the nourishment is better prepared in the stock than in the crude earth. Bacon.

But when we graft or buds inoculate, Nature by art we nobly meliorate. Denham.

A man ought by no means to think that he should be able so much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness. South.

Castration serves to meliorate the flesh of those beasts that suffer it. Graunt.

Much labour is requir'd in trees.
Well must the ground be digg'd, and better dress'd,
New soil to make, and meliorate the rest.

Dryden, Virg.

MELIORA'TION. n. s. [melioration, Fr.; from meliorate.] Improvement; act of bettering.

For the melioration of music there is yet much left, in this point of exquisite consorts, to try.

Bacon.

Which is found a notable way for melioration of the fruit.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 47.

A direct discouragement of melioration; as directly as if the law had said in express terms, Thou shalt not improve.

Burke, Tracts on the Popery Laws.

MELIO'RITY. n. s. [from melior.] State of being better. A word very elegant, but not used.

Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despite of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliority and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness.

Bacon.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernable ends of them, the meliority above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and benign agent.

Bentley.

TO MELL. v. n. [meler, se meler, French.] To mix; to meddle. Obsolete.

Here is a great deal of good matter

Lost for lack of telling:

Now sicker I see thou dost but clutter,

Harm may come of melting. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Hence, ye profane, mell not with holy things!

Bp. Hall, Sac.

MELL.* n. s. [mell, Latin.] Honey.

Her smiles were sober, and her looks were chearfull unto all;

Even such as neither wanton seeme, nor waiward;

mell, nor gall. Warner, Albion's England.

MELLI'FEROUS. adj. Productive of honey.

Dict.

MELLIFICA'TION. n. s. [mellifico, Latin.] The art or practice of making honey; production of honey.

In judging of the air, many things besides the weather ought to be observed: in some countries, the silence of grasshoppers, and want of mellification in bees.

Arbutnot.

MELLI'FLUENCE. n. s. [mell and fluo, Latin.] A honied flow; a flow of sweetness.

He was ather struck with the pastoral mellifluence of its lyric measures.

Warton, Milton's Sm. Poems, Pref.

MELLI'FLUENT. † adj. [mell and fluo, Lat.] MELLI'FLUOUS. † Flowing with honey; flowing with sweetness.

A mellifluous voice, as I am a true knight.

Shakespeare.

As all those things which are most mellifluous are soonest changed into choler and bitterness, so are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest sorrows.

Raleigh.

Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade Of new sprung leaves, their modulations mix

Mellifluous. Thomson, Spring.

The freely flowing verse
In thy immortal praise, O form divine,
Smooths her mellifluous stream.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 1.

And thus I construed the mellifluous strain.

Shenstone, Eleg. 6.

ME'LLOW. † adj. [meappa, soft, Saxon, Skinner; more nearly from mollis, molle, mellow, mellow; though r is indeed easily changed into l in common speech. Dr. Johnson.—Su. Goth. miæll, miallr, facilè solubilis; miællsoet, prædulcis. Serenius.]

1. Soft with ripeness; full ripe.

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves.

Shakespeare.

An apple in my hand works different effects upon my senses: my eye tells me it is green; my nose, that it hath a mellow scent; and my taste, that it is sweet.

Digby.

A little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit, without a winter storm.

Dryden.

2. Soft in sound.

Of seven smooth joints a mellow pipe I have,
Which with his dying breath Dametas gave.

Dryden.

3. Soft; unctuous.

Camomile sheweth mellow grounds fit for wheat.

Bacon.

4. Drunk; melted down with drink.

Greedy of physicians' frequent fees,
From female mellow praise he takes degrees.

Roscommon.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a testy, touchy, pleasant fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee.

Addison.

TO ME'LLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To ripen; to mature; to soften by ripeness; to ripen by age.

Lord Aubrey Vere

Was done to death, and more than so, my father;

Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years.

Shakespeare.

The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine.

Addison.

2. To soften.

They plow in the wheat stubble in December;
and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not plow it again till April. Mortimer, Husb.

3. To mature to perfection.

This episode, now the most pleasing entertainment of the Æneis, was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it.

Dryden.

TO ME'LLOW. v. n. To be matured; to ripen.

Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou
In my grave's inside see'st, what thou art now;
Yet thou 'rt not yet so good, till us death lay
To ripe and mellow there: we're stubborn clay.

Donne.

ME'LLOWNESS. † n. s. [from mellow.]

1. Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness by maturity.

My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the same apple.

Digby of Bodies.

The Spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,

But Autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use;

So age a mature mellowness doth set

On the green promises of youthful heat. Denham.

2. Maturity; full age.

3. Softness of sound.
This is that "suaviloquentia," that mellowness and sweetness of speaking, so much praised in some of the Roman orators, in opposition to the rusticity of noisy declaimers.

Abp. Horst, Instruct. to the Clergy of Tuam.

ME'LLOWY.* adj. [from mellow.] Soft; unctuous.

Whose mellowy gleabe doth bear
The yellow ripen'd sheaf. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 10.

the greatest fruits are towards the bottom. Bacon.

MELIO'DIOUS. † adj. [melodieux, French. Cotgrave.] Musical; harmonious.

Fountains! and ye that warble, as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs; warbling tune his praise.

Milton, P. L.

And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
A music more mellodious than the spheres.

Dryden.

MELIO'DIOUSLY. † adv. [from melodious.] Musically; harmoniously.

If Apollo will promise
Melodiously it to devise. Skelton, Poems, p. 289.

A voice, which, without being accompanied by any instrument, did resound so melodiously.

Shelton, D. Quin. iii. 13.

He stopt to listen, and to see

Who sung there so melodiously.

Old Ballad, Percy's Rel. iii. l. 17.

MELIO'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from melodious.] Harmoniousness; musicalness.

ME'LODRAME.* n. s. [melodrame, French; from melos, a song, and drama, a drama, Greek.] A modern word for a dramatic performance, in which songs are intermixed.

ME'LODY. † n. s. [melodie, French; melodia, Greek.] Musick; sweetness of sound.

Melody may be defined the means or method of ranging single musical sounds in a regular progression, either ascending or descending, according to the established principles.

Avison on Musical Expression.

The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in music also, judging them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him a number of divinely indited poems, and was farther the author of adding unto poetry melody in public prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of men's hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards God.

Hooker.

Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord.

Ephesians.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And hush't with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
And lul'd with sounds of sweetest melody?

Shakespeare.

Lend me your songs, ye nightingales: Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse.

Thomson, Spring.

MELON. n. s. [melon, French; melo, Lat.]

1. A plant.

The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber: some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo; others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three seminal apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds.

Miller.

2. The fruit.

We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers and the melons.

Nun. xi. 5.

MELON-THISTLE. n. s. [melocotus, Lat.]

The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance.

How they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boats with me!

Shakespeare.

When the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil.

Isa. lxiv. 2.

This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melting down.

Locke.

The rock's high summit in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade.

Pope.

If your butter when melting tastes of brass, it is your master's fault, who will not allow you a silver saucepan.

Swift.

2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.

To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind.

Burnet.

3. To mighty to love or tenderness.

The nighty master smil'd to see

That love was in the next degree:

'Twas but a kindred sound to move,

For pyt melts the mind to love.

Dryden, Alex. Feast.

Alas! the story melts away my soul.

Addison, Cato.

4. To waste away.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself

In general riot, melting down thy youth

In different beds of lust.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.

To MELT. v. n.

1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.

Let them melt away as waters which run continually.

Psalms.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
While lilies hang their heads and soon decay,
And whiter snow in minutes melts away.

Dryden.

2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.

I melt, and am not

Of stronger earth than others.

Shaksp. Coriol.

Dighton and Forrest;

Albeit, they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story.

Shakespeare.

This said; the mov'd assistants melt in tears.

Dryden.

Melting into tears, the pious man

Deplor'd so sad a sight.

Dryden.

3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.

Whither are they vanish'd?

Into the air: and what seem'd corporal

Melted as breath into the wind.

Shaksp. Macbeth.

Beauty is a witch,

Against whose charms faith melts into blood.

Shakespeare.

4. To be subdued by affliction.

My soul melts for heaviness: strengthen thou me.

Psalms.

MELT.* n. s. See MILT.

MELTER. n. s. [from melt.] One that melts metals.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of foreswat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments.

Sidney.

This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melters, in not exhausting the ore.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

MELTINGLY. adv. [from melting.] Like somethingly melting.

MELTING.* n. s. [melting, Saxon.] Act of softening; inteneration.

With the same bowels, and meltings of affection; with which any tender mother hears and bemoans the groanings of her sick child.

South, Sermon. ii. 63.

Zelmane lay upon a bank, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought she began meltingly to be metamorphosed to the running river.

Sidney.

MELTINGNESS.* n. s. [from melting.] Disposition to be softened by love or tenderness.

Give me, O thou Father of compassion, such a tenderness and meltingness of heart, that I may be deeply affected with all the miseries and calamities, outward and inward, of my brethren, and diligently employ all my abilities for their succour and relief.

Wh. Duty of Man, Coll. for Charity.

MELT.* n. s. [mole, mialldr, Icel. piscis marini species. Serenius.] A kind of fish.

MEMBER. n. s. [membre, Fr.; membrum, Latin.]

1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

Matth.

The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things.

Jam. iii. 5.

If shape it might be call'd, that shape had none,

Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb.

Milton, P. L.

2. A part of a discourse or period; a head; a clause.

Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to that member of the distinction, in which the respondent denied it.

Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

K. Charles.

Mean as I am, yet have the Muses made

Me free, a member of the tuneless trade.

Dryden.

Sienna is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done service to their country.

Addison.

MEMBERED.* adj. [from member; Fr. membru.] Having limbs: as, big-membered, big-limbed, strong. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. It is also a term of heraldry, applied to the beak and legs of a bird, when of a different tincture from the body.

MEMBERSHIP.* n. s. [from member.] Community; society; union.

Men, whose mystick obligation

Of mutual membership doth them invite

To careful tenderness and free communion.

Beaumont, Psyche, x. 245.

No advantages from external church membership, or profession of the true religion, can of themselves give a man confidence towards God.

South, Sermon. ii. 398.

MEMBRANE. n. s. [membrane, Fr. membrana, Latin.]

A membrane is a web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded.

Quincy.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth after tear asunder.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

They obstacle find none

Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:

Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,

Total they mix.

Milton, P. L.

The inner membrane that involved the several liquors of the egg remained unbroken.

Boyle.

MEMBRANACEOUS.* adj. [membraneus, Fr. membranaceus.] from membrana, MEMBRANOUS. from membrana, Lat.] Consisting of membranes.

Boyle.

Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-bow.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Such birds as are carnivorous have no gizzard, or muscular, but a membranous stomach; that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranous stomach.

Ray on Creation.

Anodyne substances, which take off contractions of the membranous parts, are diuretic.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

Birds of prey have membranaceous, not muscular stomachs.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

MEMENTO. n. s. [Latin.] A memorial notice; a hint to awaken the memory.

Our master, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes; yet he is but a man, and seasonable memento may be useful.

Bacon.

Is not the frequent spectacle of other people's deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own?

L'Estrange.

MEMOIR. † n. s. [memoire, French.] The accent perhaps is now usually upon the first syllable, rather than upon the last as Dr. Johnson places it, and as Prior's poetry gives it.]

1. An account of transactions familiarly written.

Be our great master's future charge
To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs,
High schemes of government and plans of wars.

Prior.

2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

I set this memoire down, because A. W. had acquaintance with both of them.

Life of A. Wood, (under the year 1657,) p. 100.

There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected.

Arbutnot on Coins.

MEMORABLE. adj. [memorable, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.

Nothing I so much delight to recount, as the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the three princes.

Sidney.

From this desire, that main desire proceeds,
Which all men have surviving fame to gain,

By tombs, by books, by memorable deeds,
For she that this desires doth still remain.

Davies.

Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
In sight of what he durst not once defend;
But basely fled that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands redeem'd the flaming prey?

Dryden.

MEMORABLY. adv. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.

MEMORANDUM. † n. s. [Latin. In the plural, memoranda and memorandums.] A note to help the memory; a memento, or memorial notice.

They shall walk about like living carcases, ugly spectacles of misery, and memorandums of divine vengeance.

Stokes, on the Proph. (1659,) p. 577.
I resolved to new pave every street, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly.

Guardian.

Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
Stale memorandums of the schools.

Swift.

The advice here given to the curious traveller of making all his memoranda on the spot, and the reasons for it, deserve our notice.

Mason, Notes on Gray's Letters.

To MEMORATE.* v. a. [memoro, Lat.] To make mention of a thing. Not in use.

Cockeram.

MEMORATIVE.* adj. [memorativus, Fr.] Tending to preserve memory of any thing.

The story of God's appearing to Jacob at Luz, Gen. 28., is so known a passage, so remarkable even to children by that memorative topic, the ladder and the angels, that I shall not need assist your memories.

Hammond, Works, iv. 496.

MEMORIAL. adj. [memorial, Fr. memorialis, Latin.]

1. Preservative of memory.

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and sighs and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainty kisses to it.

Shakspeare.

May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it?

Broome.

The tomb with many arms and trophies raise;
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame.

Pope.

2. Contained in memory.

The case is with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind: a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memories.

Watts.

MEMORIAL. n. s.

1. A monument; something to preserve memory.

Churches have names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom, some in memory of the Trinity itself, some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, saint, or martyr; many of all.

Hooker.

A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord.

Numb. xvi. 43.

All the laws of this kingdom have some monuments or memorials thereof in writing, yet all of them have not their original in writing; for some of those laws have obtained their force by immemorial usage.

Hale.

In other parts like deeds deserv'd
Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought.

Milton, P. L.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation.

South, Sermon.

Medals are so many monuments consigned over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost.

Addison on Medals.

2. Hint to assist the memory.

He was a prince, sad, serious, and full of thoughts and secret observations, and full of notes and memorials of his own hand touching persons.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history.

Hayward.

3. An address; reminding of services and soliciting reward.

MEMORIALIST. n. s. [from memorial.] One who writes memorials.

I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the memorialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord.

Spectator.

MEMORIST.* n. s. [from memory.] One that causes things to be remembered.

Conscience, the punctual memorialist within us.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 21.

To MEMORIZE. v. a. [from memory.] 1. To record; to commit to memory by writing.

They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the same was supposed.

Spenser on Ireland.

Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorized in the full table of time; for my part, I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of miseries.

Watson.

2. To cause to be remembered.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

MEMORY. † n. s. [memoire, Fr. memoria, Latin.]

1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; reminiscence; recollection.

Memory is the power to revive again in our minds, those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight.

Locke.

The memory is perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may ruminate, when their present pasture fails.

Addison, Spect.

2. Extension from oblivion.

That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth!

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To MEMORY.* v. a. To lay up in the memory. Obsolete.

Ful worthy ben thy wordes to memorie
To every wight, that wit and reason can.

Chaucer, March. Tale.

MEN. † The plural of man. Men's is often used for the genitive plural; but is condemned by bishop Hurd. "It draws men's minds off from the bitterness of party." Addison, Spect. No. 262. We say, a man's mind; but we can only say, the minds of men; as Addison should have done in the passage cited.

Wits live obscurely, men know not how; or die obscurely, men mark not when.

Ascham.

For men, there are to be considered the valour and number: the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniard's valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldier's heart.

Bacon, War with Spain.

He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war.

Clarendon.

MEN-PLEASER. n. s. [men and pleaser.] One too careful to please others.

Servants be obedient to them that are your masters; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, 'doing the will of God from the heart.

Eph. vi. 6.

To MENACE. † v. a. [menacer, Fr. from minax, minacis, Latin.] At first our word was written manace, as by Wicliffe and Chaucer; but in 1486 Caxton writes it menace. To threaten; to threat.

Who ever knew the heavens menace so?

Shakspeare.

Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?

Shakspeare.

My master knows not but I am gone hence,
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents. Shakspeare.
From this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

What should he do? 'Twas death to go away,
And the god menac'd if he dar'd to stay.

Dryden, Fob.

ME'NACE. n. s. [menace, Fr. from the verb.] Threat.

He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The Trojans view the dusty cloud from far,
And the dark menace of the distant war.

Dryden, Æn.

ME'NACER. n. s. [menaceur, Fr. from menace.] A threatener; one that threatens.

Hence, menacer! nor tempt me into rage:
This roof protects thy rashness. But begone!

Philips.

ME'NACING.* n. s. [from menace.] Threat.

These, many times, instead of convincing the judgements of sober persons, like learned divines and serious christians, fall to cavellings and menacings.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 66.

MEN'AGE-† n. s. [French.]

1. A collection of animals.

I saw here the largest menage that I ever met with.

ME'NAGOGUE. n. s. [μῆγος and ἀγοή.] A medicine that promotes the flux of the menses.

ME'NALD, or ME'NILD.* adj. A term applied to deer, whose skins are beautifully variegated; and by Cotgrave to birds, under the Fr. Maille. "Perdrix maille, a mayle, menild, or spotted partridge." Perhaps it may be from the Sax. menzan, to mix.

To MEND-† v. a. [emendo, Latin; mendare, Italian.]

1. To repair from breach or decay.

They gave the money to the workmen to repair and mend the house. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 10.

2. To correct; to alter for the better.

The best service they could do to the state, was to mend the lives of the persons who composed it.

Temple.

You need not despair, by the assistance of his glowing reason, to mend the weakness of his constitution.

Locke.

Name a new play and he's the poet's friend;
Nay, show'd his faults—but when would poets mend?

Pope.

Their opinion of Wood, and his project, is not mended.

Swift.

3. To help; to advance.

Whatever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and impairs others: and he that is hopen takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a wrong.

Bacon.

If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum stans of the schools, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration.

Locke.

Though in some lands the grass is but short,
yet it mends garden herbs and fruit.

Mortimer, Hush.

4. To improve; to increase.

Death comes not at call; Justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace, for prayer, or cries.

Milton, P. L.

When upon the sands the traveller,
Sees the high sea come rolling from afar,
The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
While death behind him covers all the place.

Dryden.

He saw the monster mend his pace; he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings.

Dryden.

To MEND-† v. n. To grow better; to advance in any good; to be changed for the better.

Mend, when thou canst; be better at thy leisure.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

ME'NDABLE-† adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low, but old, word.

Sherwood.

MENDA'CIOUS.* adj. [from mendax, mendacis, Lat.] False; lying.

A mendacious legend of Ignatius's miracles.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 63.

They are called mendacious, lying, because many of them shall be counterfeit. Ibid. p. 245.

MENDACITY. n. s. [from mendax, Lat.] Falsehood.

In this delivery there were additional mendacities; for the commandment forbid not to touch the fruit, and positively said, Ye shall surely die; but she, extenuating, replied, Lest ye die.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

ME'NDER. n. s. [from mend.] One who makes any change for the better.

What trade art thou? A trade that I may use with a safe conscience; a mender of bad souls.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

ME'NDICANCY.* n. s. [from mendicant.] Beggary.

Nothing, I am credibly informed, can exceed the shocking and disgusting spectacle of mendicancy displayed in that capital, [Paris.] Burke.

ME'NDICANT-† adj. [mendicans, Latin.] Begging; poor to a state of beggary; denoting one of a begging fraternity.

We are now come to the age, wherein the mendicant friars began first to set up in the world.

Bp. Cosin, Can. of Script. p. 165.

Be not righteous over-much, is applicable to those who, out of an excess of zeal, practise mortifications, whereby they macerate their bodies; or to those who voluntarily reduce themselves to a poor and mendicant state.

Fiddes.

ME'NDICANT-† n. s. [mendicant, Fr.] A beggar; one of some begging fraternity in the Romish church.

The sign of a mendicant.

Hammond, Works, iv. 545.

Whether it be not of great advantage to the church of Rome, that she hath clergy suited to all ranks of men, in gradual subordination from cardinals down to mendicants?

Bp. Berkeley, Querist, § 262.

What is station high?

'Tis a proud mendicant; it boasts, and begs.

Young, Night Th. 6.

MENDS for amends.

Let her be as she is: If she be fair, 'tis the better for her; and if she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Shakspeare.

ME'NIAL-† adj. [from meiny or many; mesnie, old French.]

1. Belonging to the retinue, or train of servants.

Two menial dogs before their master press'd;
Thus clad, and guarded thus, he seeks his kindly guest.

Dryden, Æn.

2. Swift seems not to have known the meaning of this word, Dr. Johnson says; but surely, in the passage cited, it means belonging to the office of a servant, and is perfectly intelligible. Swift means the lowest offices.

The women attendants perform only the most menial offices.

Gulliver's Travels.

ME'NIAL-† n. s. One of the train of servants.

Menials are those servants, which live within their master's walls.

ME'NTAL adj. [mentale, French; mentis, Latin.] Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power

This eye shoots forth? How big imagination Moves in this lip? To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret. Shakespeare, Timon.

So deep the power of these ingredients pièr'd,
Even to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.

Milton, P. L.

The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that affects the palate.

Addison.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them.

Locke.

She kindly talk'd, at least three hours,

Of plastic forms, and mental pow'rs.

Prior.

Those inward representations of spirit, thought, love, and hatred, are pure and mental ideas, belonging to the mind, and carry nothing of shape or sense in them.

Watts.

ME'NTALLY. adv. [from mental.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically or externally, but in thought or meditation.

If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body.

Bentley.

MENTION. n. s. [mention, Fr. mentio, Latin.]

1. Oral or written expression, or recital of any thing.

Think on me when it shall be well with thee; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh.

Of all the planets Mercury is the least, at the same time it is that which is nearest the sun.

Adams.

2. The chymist's name for quicksilver is mercury.

Hill.

The gall of animals and mercury kill worms: and the water in which mercury is boiled has this effect.

Arbutnot.

3. Sprightly qualities.

Thus the mercury of man is fix'd,
Strong grows the virtue with his nature mix'd;
The gross cements what else were too refin'd,
And in one int'rest body acts with mind.

Pope.

4. A news-paper: so called from Mercury, the intelligencer of the gods.

Ainsworth.

5. It is now applied, in cant phrase, to the carriers of news and pamphlets. Dr. Johnson.—It had been a cant phrase more than a century before Dr. Johnson's time; and was used, generally, for a messenger.

We now call those hawkers that go up and down the streets crying news-books, and selling by retail; and those, who sell them by whole-sale from the press, are called mercuries.

Cowet, in V. Hawkers.

We give the winds wings, and the angels too; as being the swift messengers of God, the nimble mercuries of heaven. Abp. Sancroft, Sermon, p. 181.

Herb mercury is of an emollient nature, and is eaten in the manner of spinach, which, when cultivated in a garden, it greatly excels.

Hill, Mat. Med.

MERCURY's finger. n. s. [hermodactylus, Lat.] Wild saffron.TO MERCURY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To wash with a preparation of mercury.

Your palms, (Jupiter knows,) they are as tender as the foot of a foundered nag, or a lady's face new mercuried; they'll touch nothing.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

MERCY, n. s. [merci, Fr.; contracted from miseriordia, Latin.]

1. Tenderness; goodness; pity; willingness to spare and save; clemency; mildness; unwillingness to punish.

Oh heaven have mercy on me!

—I say, amen.

And have you mercy too?

Shakespeare.

Mercy is not strained;

It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven,
Upon the place beneath. It is twice bless'd;
It blesteth him that gives and him that takes.

Shakespeare.

Thou, O God, art gracious, long-suffering, and in mercy ordering all.

Wisd. xv. 1.

Examples of justice must be made for terror to some; examples of mercy for comfort to others: the one procures fear, and the other love.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Good heaven, whose darling attribute we find
Is boundless grace, and mercy to mankind,
Abhors the cruel.

Dryden.

We adore his undeserved mercy towards us,
that he made us the chief of the visible creation.

Bentley, Sermon.

2. Pardon.

'Twere a paper lost,

As offered mercy is.

I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall. Shakspeare.

Thou remembrest,
Since once I set upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shakspeare.

Did sense persuade Ulysses not to hear
The mermaids' songs, which so his men did please,
That they were all persuaded, through the ear,
To quit the ship and leap into the seas? Davies.
Few eyes have escaped the picture of a mermaid:
Horace his monster, with woman's head above, and fishy extremity below, answers the shape of the ancient Syrens that attempted upon Ulysses. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MERMAID'S TRUMPET. n. s. A kind of fish.

Ainsworth.

MERMAN.* n. s. The sea man; the male of the mermaid.

However naturalists may doubt of the reality of the mermen or mermaids, if we may believe particular writers, there seems testimony enough to establish it. Chambers.

MERRILY. adv. [from merry.] Gaily; airily; cheerfully; with mirth; with gaiety; with laughter.

Merrily, merrily, shall we live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough. Shakspeare.

When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merrily. Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

Milton, Comus.

MERRINESS. n. s. [from merry.] Mirth; merry disposition.

The stile shall give us cause to climb in the merriness.

Shakespeare.

MERRY.† adj. [Dr. Johnson has offered no etymology; it is the Saxon mýrig, mýrige, mepig, mepie; of which an ancient sense is sweet, pleasant, agreeable; and so merry is used by our old authors. In Gen. xiii. 10. mýrige is applied to the plain of Jordan, where our present translation uses the words, "as the garden of God," and a more ancient one, "paradise;" to denote a pleasant and fruitful country; and thus some of the old commentators, "sicut locus amanissimus."] 1. Pleasant; sweet; agreeable; delightful; charming. Dr. Johnson has given, as a third illustration of this word, a single example from Dryden, with the definition of prosperous; which belongs to the present meaning, hitherto overpassed in our dictionaries. Spenser thus applies merry to wind and weather; i. e. pleasant, or agreeable, not foul, not tempestuous, fair.

The nightingale with so merry a note,
Answer'd him, that all the wood rang.

Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

His vois was merier than the mery organ,
On masse daies that in the churches gon.

There eke my feeble bark awhile may stay,
Till mery wind and weather call her thence away.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 1.

The merry harp with the lute, [in the older version, pleasant harp.]

Psalm lxxxi. 2.

In my small pinnacle I can sail,
Contenting all the blustering roar;
And running with a merry gale,
With friendly stars my safety seek,
Within some little winding creek,
And see the storm ashore.

Dryden.

2. Laughing; loudly cheerful; gay of heart.

They drank and were merry with him.

Gen. xliii. 84.

The vine languisheth, all the merry-hearted sigh.

Isa. xxiv.

Some that are of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company into which they come to be sad and ill-disposed; and others that are of a jovial nature, do dispose the company to be merry and cheerful.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Man is the merriest species of the creation; all above and below him are serious.

Addison.

3. Causing laughter.

You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death;
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest.

A fox 'spy'd a bevy of jolly, gossiping wenches making merry over a dish of pullets.

L'Estrange.

MERRY.* n. s. [merise, Fr.] The common wild red cherry.

MERRY-ANDREW† n. s. [This term is traced to a facetious practitioner in physick of Henry the Eighth's time, and who is said to have been the physician of that monarch. His name was Andrew Borde. "Dr. Borde was an ingenious man, and knew how to humour and please his patients, readers, and auditors. In his travels and visits, he often appeared and spoke in publick; and would often frequent markets and fairs, where a conflux of people used to get together, to whom he prescribed: and to induce them to flock thither the more readily, he would make humorous speeches, couched in such language as caused mirth, and wonderfully propagated his fame! — 'Twas from the Doctor's method of using such speeches at markets and fairs, that in aftertimes those that imitated the like humorous, jocose language, were styled Merry Andrews; a term much in vogue on our stages." Hearne, Benedict. Abb. ed. Ox.
1735, tom. i. Præf. p. 50.] A buffoon;
a zany; a jack-pudding.

He would be a statesman because he is a buffoon; as if there went no more to the making of a counsellor, than the faculties of a merry-andrew or tumbler.

L'Estrange.

The first who made the experiment was a merry-andrew.

Spectator.

MERRYMEETING.* n. s. [merry and meet.]
A meeting for mirth; a festival.

It struck their fancy luckily, and maintained
the merry-meeting. Bp. Taylor, House of Feasting.

thence, doth figure our death to the former, (to a natural and worldly defilement,) and receiving to a new life.

Barrow on Baptism.

MESERAI'CK. n. s. [μεσραικον: mesaraique,
French: analogy requires it mesarai'ck.]
Belonging to the mysentery.

It taketh leave of the permanent parts at the mouths of the meserai'cks, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion into the siege.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The most subtle part of the chyle passeth immediately into the blood by the absorbent vessels of the guts, which discharge themselves into the meserai'ck veins.

Arbuthnot.

MES'EEMS.† impersonal verb. [me and seems, or it seems to me: for this word it is now too common to use methinks or methought, an ungrammatical word.
Dr. Johnson. — But see METHINKS.] I think; it appears to me; methinks.

Me semeth that the partye that forsayeth his marriage dooth ayent the law of nature.

MESENTERICK. adj. [mesenterique, French;
from mesentery.] Relating to the mesentry.

They are carried into the glands of the mesentery, receiving a fine lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilutes this chylous fluid, and scours its containing vessels, which, from the mesenterick glands, unite in large channels, and pass directly into the common receptacle of the chyle.

Cheyne.

MESH. n. s. [maesche, Dutch; make, old French: it were therefore better written, as it is commonly pronounced, mask.] The interstice of a net; the space between the threads of a net.

The drovers hang square nets athwart the tide, through which the shoal of pilchard passing, leave many behind entangled in the meshes.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Such a hare is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

He spreads his subtle nets in sight,
With twinkling glasses to betray
The larks that in the meshes light.

Dryden.

With all their mouths the nerves the spirits drink,
Which through the cells of the fine strainers sink:
These all the channell'd fibres every way,
For motion and sensation, still convey:
The greatest portion of the arterial blood,
By the close structure of the parts withstood,
Whose narrow meshes stop the grosser flood.

Blackmore.

TO MESH.† v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a net; to ensnare.

They were so meshed in this kynde of follie, that they knewe neither what they sayde, nor what they did.

North, Tr. of Philosoph. at Court, (1575.) p. 89.

The flies by chance mesht in her hair,
By the bright radiance thrown

From her clear eyes, rich jewels were,
They so like diamonds shone.

Drayton.

ME'SHY. adj. [from mesh.] Reticulated; of net-work.

Some build his house, but thence his issue barre,
Some make his meshy bed, but reave his rest.

Carew.
Caught in the meshy snare, in vain they beat
Their idle wings. Thomson.

ME'SLIN.† n. s. [from mesler, French, to mix; or rather corruptly pronounced for miscellane. See MASLIN. Dr. Johnson. — It has been there observed, that the word is more probably of Goth. origin; maesteluyn, Teut. farrago; myrhc, Sax. various.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

What reason is there which should but induce, and therefore much less enforce, us to think, that care of dissimilitude between the people of God and the heathen nations about them, was any more the cause of forbidding them to put on garments of sundry stuff, than of charging them withal not to sow their fields with meslin. Hooker, iv. § 7.
If worke for the thresher ye mind for to have,
Of wheat and of meslin unthreshed go save.

Tusser.

MESOLEU'CYS. n. s. [μεσολεύκος.] A precious stone, black, with a streak of white in the middle. Dict.

MESOLGARITHMS. n. s. [μέσος, λόγος, and αριθμός.] The logarithms of the cosines and tangents, so denominated by Kepler. Harris.

MESOMELAS. n. s. [μεσομέλας.] A precious stone with a black vein parting every colour in the midst. Bailey.

MESPRISE.† n. s. [mespris, French. Dr. Johnson gives the word mesprise, supposing it to be an error of the press in the first passage from Spenser, which only he has cited. It is indeed an error made in the second edition of the Fairy Queen, which some editions have followed. But mesprise is repeated by the poet.] Contempt; scorn.

Mammon was much displeas'd, yet not he chuse
But bear the rigour of his bold mesprise,
And thence him forward led, him further to entice.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 39.
Then, if all fayle, we will by force it win,
And eke reward the wretch for his mesprise,
As may be worthy of his hainous sin.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 9.
And Atë eke provokt him privily
With love of her, and shame of such mesprise.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 11.

MESS.† n. s. [mes, old French; messio, Italian; missus, Latin; mes, Gothic; mere, Saxon, a dish. Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of the Saxon metrian, cibare, to furnish meat or food: in French mets; in Italian messio, from the same verb. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Parl. ii. 327. — I differ both from Dr. Johnson and Mr. Tooke. Yet Dr. Johnson, in part of his etymology, is thus supported by bishop Patrick. "It was the ancient custom for great men to honour such as were in their favour, by sending dishes to them, which were first served up to themselves: from whence they were called missa, messes, things sent." Note on Genesis, xliii. 34. But I consider the word as denoting a measure or portion; and thus Sir John Char-din informs us that in Persia, Arabia, and the Indies, a carver parts each dish, which is set before the master of the house, or the principal guest, or in the middle of the hall, into as many portions, put into different plates, as there are people to eat. And so Benjamin's mess, on which the learned bishop has made the preceding remark, is five portions, or five times as much of every thing as any of his brethren's. Our word, in this sense, is to be found in the Germ. mass, a measure; and thus, in our old lexicography, mess is explained "a mease of meat, a mease of pottage." Huloet's Dict. See also MEASE.]

1. A dish; a quantity of food sent to table together.

The bounteous huswife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you. Shaksp. Timon.

Now your traveller,
He and his toothpick at my worship's mess.

Shakspere.
I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge.
Shakspere. M. Wives of Windsor.

Herbs and other country messes,
Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses.

Milton, L'All.
Had either of the crimes been cooked to their palates, they might have changed messes.

Decay of Chr. Piety.
From him he next receives it thick or thin,
As pure a mess almost as it came in. Pope.

2. The ordinary of military men at a regulated price; the meal provided for a certain number. See TO MESS.

TO MESS.† v. n.

1. To eat; to feed. If this be the general sense of the word, of which however Dr. Johnson gives neither example nor etymon, it may be from the Saxon metrian, to furnish meat or food.

2. To contribute to the common expence of the table in settled proportions; to eat and drink together at a regulated price. Chiefly a military phrase. [from the substantive.]

We will place them at an inn, where the officers of a regiment he had served in were messing.

Pye, Sketches on Var. Subjects, (1796,) p. 10.

ME'SSAGE.† n. s. [message, Fr. q. d. med-saegen, à Suio-Goth. med, cum, with, and saega, dicere, to speak. Serenius.] An errand; any thing committed to another to be told to a third.

She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way,

To bear the message of her gentle spright. Spenser.
May one, that is a berald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears? Shakspere.

She is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wonderous virtues; sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages. Shakspere.

Gently hast thou told
Thy message, which might else in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton, P. L.

Let the minister be low, his interest inconsiderable, the word will suffer for his sake; the message will still find reception according to the dignity of the messenger.

South.
The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd;
'Twas to be wish'd and hop'd, but scarce believ'd.
Dryden.

ME'SSENGER.† n. s. [messenger, French. Dr.

Johnson. — And so our own word was at first written. "This messenger turmented was, till he tellen plat and plain, &c. Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.] One who carries an errand; one who comes from another to a third; one who brings an account or foretoken of any thing; an harbinger; a forerunner.

Came running in, much like a man dismayd,
A messenger with letters, which his message said.

Spenser.

Yon grey lines,

That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shaks.

The earl dispatched messengers one after another to the king, with an account of what he heard and believed he saw, and yet thought not fit to stay for an answer. Clarendon.

Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd
Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd.

Pope.

MESSIAH. n. s. [from the Hebrew.] The Anointed; the Christ; the Saviour of the world; the Prince of peace.

Great and publick opposition the magistrates made against Jesus, the man of Nazareth, when he appeared as the Messiah. Watts on the Mind.

MESSIAHSHIP.† n. s. The office of the Messiah.

The Messiahship was pretended to by several impostors; but fallacy and falsehood being naturally weak, they still sunk and came to nothing.

South, Serm. iii. 286.
Christ — gave as strong a proof of his Messiahship, as infinite power, joined with equal veracity, could give.

South, Serm. iii. 382.

MESSIEURS. n. s. [French, plural of monsieur.] Sirs; gentlemen.

ME'SSMATE. n. s. [mess and mate.] One who eats at the same table.

ME'SSUAGE. n. s. [messuagium, law Latin; formed perhaps from message by mistake of the n in court-hand for u, they being written alike, message from maison, French.] The house and ground set apart for household uses.

MET. the preterite and part. of meet.

A set of well-meaning gentlemen in England, not to be met with in other countries, take it for granted they can never be wrong so long as they oppose ministers of state. Addison, Freeholder.

MET.* n. s. [perhaps from mete.] A measure. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

METABASIS. n. s. [Greek.] In rhetoric, a figure by which the orator passes from one thing to another. Dict.

METABOLA. n. s. [μεταβολή.] In medicine, a change of time, air, or disease.

METACARPAL. adj. [from metacarpus.] Belonging to the metacarpus. Dict.

It will facilitate the separation in the joint, when you cut the finger from the metacarpal bone.

Sharp, Surgery.

METACARPUS. n. s. [μετακάρπιον.] In anatomy, a bone of the arm made up of four bones, which are joined to the fingers. Dict.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis; as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus.

Wiseman, Surgery.

METACHRONISM.* n. s. [μετά and χρόνος, Gr.] A mistake in the computation of time; placing an event after the time when it really happened.

Capellus laboureth to prove that it is a metachronism of six years, Kepler of five.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650.), p. 165.

An error committed herein [the designation of time] is called anachronism; and either saith too much, and that is a prochronism, or too little, and that is a metachronism. Ibid. p. 174.

METAGE.* n. s. [from To mete.] Measurement of coals.

METAGRAMMATISM. n. s. [μετάγραμμα.]

Anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, is a dissolution of a name into its letters, as its elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named. Camden.

METAL. n. s. [metal, French; metallum, Lat.]

1. The metals are characterized as a class, by a peculiar degree of brilliancy and opacity: they are conductors of electricity and of heat; they include the heaviest and lightest solids, and differ extremely in fusibility: some are brittle; others, malleable and ductile. All the metals unite to oxygen, producing metallic oxides, which, combined with acids, form metallic salts. Journ. of Science, &c. No. 20. p. 286.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out. Moxon.

2. Courage; spirit. In this sense it is more frequently written mettle.

Being glad to find their companions had so much metal, after a long debate the major part carried it. Clarendon.

3. Upon this signification the following ambiguity is founded.

Both kinds of metal he prepar'd,
Either to give blows or to ward;
Courage and steel both of great force,
Prepar'd for better or for worse. Hadibras.

METALLED.* See METTLED.

METALEPSIS. n. s. [μετάληψις.] A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations. Bailey.

METALEPTICALLY.* adv. [from metalepsis.] By transposition.

The name of promises may metaleptically be extended to comminations.

Ep. Sanderson, on Promiss. Oaths. i. § 9.

METALLICAL. adj. [from metallum, Lat.]

METALLICK. adj. [metallique, Fr.] Partaking of metal; containing metal; consisting of metal.

The antients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or fusibility, seem to have resolved it to nobler use; an art now utterly lost. Wotton, Architecture.

The lofty lines abound with endless store
Of min'ral treasure, and metallick oar. Blackmore.

METALLIFEROUS. adj. [metallum and fero, Latin.] Producing metals. Dict.

METALLINE. adj. [from metal.]

1. Impregnated with metal.
Metalline waters have virtual cold in them; put therefore wood or clay into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon.

2. Consisting of metal.
Though the quicksilver were brought to a very close and lovely metalline cylinder, not interrupted by interspersed bubbles, yet having caused the air to be again drawn out of the receiver, several little bubbles disclosed themselves. Boyle.

METALLIST. n. s. [from metal; metalliste, Fr.] A worker in metals; skilled in metals.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out; it is made of quick lime and ox blood. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

METALLOGRAPHY. n. s. [metallum and γραφω.] An account or description of metals. Dict.

METALLURGIST. n. s. [metallurgiste, Fr. metallum and εργον.] A worker in metals.

METALLURGY. n. s. [metallurgie, French; metallum and εργον.] The art of working metals, or separating them from their ore.

Drayton personifies the Peak in Derbyshire, which he makes a witch skilful in metallurgy. Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

METALMAN.* n. s. [metal and man.] A coppersmith; a tinman.

A smith, or a metallman, the pot's never from his nose. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 110.

TO METAMORPHOSE, v. a. [metamorphoser, Fr. μεταμορφω.] To change the form or shape of any thing.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time; Shakespeare.

They became degenerate and metamorphos'd like Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he had the face of a man, had the heart of a beast. Davies on Ireland.

The impossibility to conceive so great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphos'd into travellers, with no train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton.

From such rude principles our form began;
And earth was metamorphos'd into man. Dryden, Ovid.

METAMORPHOSER.* n. s. [from to metamorphose.] One who changes the shape.

What shall I name this man but a beastly metamorphoser both of himself, and of others? Gascoigne, Delic. Diet for Drunkards, (1576.)

METAMORPHOSICK.* adj. [from metamorphosis.] Transforming; changing the shape.

All the metamorphosic fables of the ancients, turning policies and commercial people into horrid and savage monsters, will, like clouds before the sun, dispel and evaporate before the light of truth. Pownall on Antiq. p. 69.

METAMORPHOSIS. n. s. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμορφωσις.]

1. Transformation; change of shape.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the cause of this metamorphosis. Sidney.
Obscene talk is grown so common, that one would think we were fallen into an age of metamorphosis, and that the brutes did not only poetically but really speak. Gov. of the Tongue.

What! my noble colonel in metamorphosis! On what occasion are you transformed? Dryden, Span. Friar.

There are probable machines in epic poems, where the gods are no less actors than the men; but the less credible sort, such as metamorphoses, are far more rare. Broome.

2. It is applied by Harvey to the changes an animal undergoes, both in its formation and growth; and by several to the various shapes some insects in particular pass through, as the silk-worm and the like. Quincy.

METAPHOR. n. s. [metaphore, Fr. μεταφορα.] The application of a word to an use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put; as, he bridles his anger; he deadens the sound; the spring awakes the flowers. A metaphor is a simile comprized in a word; the spring putting in action the powers of vegetation, which were torpid in the winter, as the powers of a sleeping animal are excited by awaking him.

The work of tragedy is on the passions, and in a dialogue; both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epocæ delights.

Dryden, Ded. to Virg. Æn.

One died in metaphor, and one in song. Pope.
METAPHORICAL. adj. [metaphorique, Fr.]
METAPHORICK. adj. [from metaphor.] Not literal; not according to the primitive meaning of the word; figurative.

The words which were to continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use. Hooker.

METAPHORICALLY.* adv. [from metaphorical.] Figuratively; not literally.

Such as are improperly melancholy, or metaphorically mad, lightly mad.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

If strictly taken, it is not true; if metaphorically taken, though it be true, yet it is not pertinent. Pearson on the Creed. Art. 5.

METAPHORIST.* n. s. [from metaphor.] A maker of metaphors.

Let the poet send to the metaphorist for his allegories. Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scriblerus.

METAPHRASE. n. s. [μετάφρασις.] A mere verbal translation from one language into another; a close interpretation.

Where the English metaphrase readeth, Thou shalt accept, &c. the Hebrew saith, Thou shalt consume. Gregory, Posthum. (1650.), p. 224.

This translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphrase. Dryden.

METAPHRAST. n. s. [metaphraste, Fr. μεταφραστης.] A literal translator; one who translates word for word from one language into another; an interpreter.

He [Symeon] obtained the distinguishing appellation of the metaphrast, because, at the command and under the auspices of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, he modernized the more ancient narratives of the miracles and martyrdoms of the most eminent eastern and western saints for the use of the Greek church; or rather digested from detached, imperfect, or obsolete books on the subject, a new and more commodious body of the sacred biography. Warton, Hist. E. p. ii. 190.

METAPHRASTICK.* adj. [from metaphrast.] Close in interpretation; literal.

Maximus Planudes has the merit of having familiarised to his countrymen many Latin classics of the lower empire, by metaphrastic versions. Warton, Hist. E. p. ii. 169.

METAPHYSICK. adj.

1. Versed in metaphysics; relating to metaphysics.
He knew what's what, and that's as high
As metaphysick wit can fly. Hadibras, i. 1.
His ideas on that subject were much more Platonic and metaphysical. Warton, Hist. E. p. i. 383.

2. In Shakspeare it means supernatural or preternatural. So metaphysicks were called "supernatural arts." Engl. Dict. by H. C. 1655.

Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear;
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate, and metaphysical aid, doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal. Shaksp. Macbeth.

METAPHYSICALLY.* adv. [from metaphysical.] In a metaphysical manner; with metaphysical distinction.

This argument seems metaphysically to conclude. South. Serm. viii. 261.

Supposing it were philosophically or metaphysically possible or conceivable. Biblioth. Bibl. i. 295.

METAPHYSICIAN.* n. s. [from metaphysicien, Fr.] One versed in metaphysics.

The pathetic or sublime strokes of Virgil would be but little relished by theologians and metaphysicians. Watson, Hist. E. P. i. 340.

METAPHYSICK.† n. s. [from metaphysique, Gr. μετὰ τὰ φυσικά, the opening of Aristotle's chapter after that on physics.] Ontology; the doctrine of the general affections of substances existing.

The mathematicians and the metaphysicks, Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you. Shakspere.

Call her the metaphysicks of her sex,
And say she tortures wits as quartans vex Physicians. Cleaveland.

If sight be caused by intromission, or receiving in, the form of contrary species should be received confusedly together, which how absurd it is, Aristotle shews in his metaphysicks.

See physick beg the Stagyrite's defence!
See metaphysick call for aid on sense! Pope, Dunciad.

The topics of ontology or metaphysick, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and sign. Watts, Logic.

METAPLASM. n. s. [from μεταπλασμός.] A figure in rhetoric, wherein words or letters are transposed contrary to their natural order. Dict.

METASTASIS. n. s. [from μετάστασις.] Translation or removal.

His disease was a dangerous asthma; the cause a metastasis, or translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs.

METATARSAL. adj. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

The bones of the toes, and part only of the metatarsal bones may be carious; in which case cut off only so much of the foot as is disordered. Sharp, Surgery.

METATARSUS. n. s. [from μέτα and τάρσος.] The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot. Dict.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining the tarsus to the metatarsus. Wiseman, Surgery.

METATHESIS.† n. s. [from μετάθεσις.] A transposition.

What a metathesis is this, that he who perhaps was born of royal blood, and kept company with kings and princes, shall now cry out with Job "to corruption, thou art my father; to the worm, thou art my mother and sister!" Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 105.

To METE. v. a. [from μετρίω, Latin.] To measure; to reduce to measure.

I will divide Shechem, and mete the valley of Succoth. Psalms.

To measure any distance by a line, apply some known measure wherewith to mete it. Holder.

Though you many ways pursue
To find their length, you'll never mete the true,
But thus; take all that space the sun
Mets out, when every daily round is run. Creech.

ME'TERLY.* adv. [probably from mete.] Moderately. Westmoreland Dialect. Tolerably well; within bounds. Craven Dialect, and Brockett. In the older northern glossaries, the word is defined indifferent.

ME'TEWAND.† n. s. [from mete and yard, or ME'TEYARD.] wand. A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

A true touchstone, a sure metewand lieth before their eyes. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in meteyard, weight, or measure. Lev. xix. 35.

To METEMPSYCHOSE. v. a. [from metempsychosis.] To translate from body to body. A word not received.

The souls of usurers after their death, Lucian affirms to be metempsychosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones. Peacham on Blazoning.

METEMPSYCHO'SIS.† n. s. [from μετεμψύχωσις.] The transmigration of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Here, Philemon, at parting with the subject of the sacred animals, I may observe to you, that the doctrine of the metempsychosis, supposed by the Greek writers a native of Egypt, is by many people believed to owe its birth to this article of her theology. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 4.

ME'TEOR. n. s. [from meteore, Fr. météore.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature.

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case,
Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face? Shakspere.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star must rise upon the horizon of Ireland; for there had the like meteor strong influence before. Bacon, Hen. VII.

These burning fits but meteors be;
Whose matter in their soon is spent:

Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee,
Are an unchangeable firmament. Donne.

Then flaming meteors, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene. Dryden, Æn.

Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast down-ward

To be trod out by Cesar? Dryden, All for Love.

O poet, thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

To ME'TEORIZE.* v. n. [from meteor.] To ascend in evaporation.

To the end the dew may meteorize, and emit their finer spirits. Evelyn, Pomona, ch. 1.

METEOROLOGICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Others are considerable in meteorological divinity. Brown.

Make disquisition whether these unusual light, be new-come guests, or old inhabitants in heavens or meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Howell, Voc. Forest.

METEOROLOGIST. n. s. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

The meteorologists observe, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creatures, there is a notable correspondence. Howell, Voc. Forest.

METEOROLOGY. n. s. [from μειτεωρα and λέγω.] The doctrine of meteors.

In animals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather. Brown, Vulg. Err.

METE'ROUS. adj. [from meteor.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the o'er bill
To their fix station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as evening mist,
It's'n from a river. Milton, P. L.

ME'TER n. s. [from mete.] A measurer: as, a coal-meter, a land-meter.

METHEGLIN.† n. s. [from meddyglyn, Welsh, from medd and glyn, to glue, Minshew; or meddely, a physician, and glyn, drink, because it is a medicinal drink. See MEAD, and MEATH.] Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.
—Nay then two treys; and if you grow so nice,
Metheglin, wort, and malmsey. Shakspere.

To ally the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Bacchus new metheglin join. Dryden.

Beneath its aspect warm
O'er well-rang'd hives the bees shall swarm,
From which, ere long, of golden gleam
Metheglin's luscious juice shall stream.

Watson, Progr. of Discontent.

METHINKS.† verb impersonal. [from me and thinks.] This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I. Dr. Johnson. — Here is no French corruption; it is the same as meseems, that is, it seems to me; so me is here the dative case, and the whole phrase means, it appears to me; as Lye repeatedly translates the Saxon me þincþ, mihi videtur, whence, he says, our methinketh, methinks. Our old language has also him thinketh, or thought; that is, he thinks or thought, it so appeared to him on consideration.] I think; it seems to me; meseems. See MESEEMS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used likewise meseems.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praises of the good and virtuous. Spenser on Ireland.

If he choose out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it. Dryden.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Addison, Spect.

Methinks already I your tears survey. Pope.

METHOD. n. s. [methode, French μεθόδος.]

Method, taken in the largest sense, implies the placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end. Watts.

To see wherein the harm which they feel consisteth, the seeds from which it sprang, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill the study whereof is full of toil, and the practice beset with difficulties. Hooker.

If you will just with me know my aspect, And fashion your demeanour to my looks, Or I will beat this method in your sconce. Shaks.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools. Locke on Education.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain. Addison, Spect.

METHO'DICAL. adj. [methodique, French, from method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author. Addison, Spect.

Let me appear, great sir, I pray, Methodical in what I say. Addison, Rosamond.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irrefragable confusion; but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.

METHO'DICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

To begin methodically, I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object. Suckling.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

METHO'DICK.* adj. [methodique, Fr.]

1. Ranged or proceeding in just and due order.

Some native and methodick powers, and springs of motion in things. Spenser on Prod. (1665.) p. 137.

Aristotle strict, methodic, and orderly. Harris, Hermes, iii. ch. 5.

2. Denoting those who follow the method of the ancient school of physicians, known by the name of methodists.

Thessalus, head of the methodick sect in the reign of Nero, [used to] brag, that he could make physicians without the help either of astrology or music. Grev, Cosmol. Sacra.

Every animal body, according to the methodick physicians, is, by the predominance of some exuberant quality, continually declining towards disease and death. Johnson, Rambler, No. 156.

METHODISM.* n. s. The religious opinions of those who are called methodists. See the last sense of METHODIST.

Nor is this pedigree, which makes methodism of the younger house to independency, invented, like heraldic devices, to ennoble my subject. Warburton, Doct. of Grace, B. 186.

METHODIST.† n. s. [from method.]

1. An observer of method, generally speaking, without reference either to physick or religion. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

He teacheth us how we shall fear recti methodo; he teacheth us to be perfect methodists in fear, and that we misplace not our fear.

Farinond's Serm. (1647.) p. 191.

I dance little after method, because no methodist. Hermetical Banquet, &c. (1652.)

2. A physician who practises by theory.

As many more,

As methodist Musus kill'd with hellebore

In autumn last. Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599.) [The] old sect of methodists resolved, that the laxum and strictum, the immoderate dissolution or constipation, were the principals and originals of all diseases in the world. Hammond, Works, iv. 577.

Our warriest physicians, not only chemists, but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and distempers. Boyle.

3. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method. Dr. Johnson.—Dr. Johnson's lately arisen must be referred to the year 1729, when the term was applied to certain young men at Oxford of very methodical conduct; of whom it was said, in allusion to the ancient school of physicians, "there is a new sect of methodists sprung up;" and of which appellation it has since been with an absurd air of consequence pretended, that the word "being new and quaint, it took immediately, and the methodists were known all over the university." But we see that the word is at least nearly a century and a half older in our language, in the medical sense; and nearly a century, in a general sense. Mr. Wesley and Mr. Whitfield are those of this remarkable association, who are best known to fame; and who afterwards had their respective followers; those of Mr. Wesley being Arminians, those of Mr. Whitfield, Calvinists. The word is often vaguely and unjustly used of persons, who are no sectaries.

Mr. John Wesley, one among the present methodists, having already freed himself from the folly of Calvinism.

Whiston, Memoirs of himself, (1749.) p. 138.

They, who now go under the name of methodists, were, in the days of our forefathers, called precisians. Warburton, Doct. of Grace, ii. 184.

When West's book was published, it was bought by some who did not know his change of opinion, in expectation of new objections against Christianity; and as infidels do not want malignity, they revenged the disappointment by calling him a methodist. Johnson, Life of West.

METHO'DISTICAL.* adj. [from methodist.] Relating to the religious sect of methodists.

The precise number of methodistical marks you know best.

Bp. Lavington, Enth. of Meth. to Mr. Wesley, p. xii.

To METHO'DIZE. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Resolv'd his unripe vengeance to defer,

The royal spy retir'd again unseen,

To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen,

And methodize revenge. Dryden, Boccace.

The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves. Spectator.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critic. Addison, Spect.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd, Are nature still, but nature methodis'd. Pope.
METHOUGHT.† the preterite of methinks. See METHINKS and MESEEMS. I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has meseemed, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from meseems. Dr. Johnson.—Dr. Johnson had forgotten meseemed in an example from Spenser, which he himself has cited under meseems. Addison has once used, improperly, methoughts. "Methoughts I returned to the great hall." Spect. No. 3.

Methought, a serpent eat my heart away, And you sat smiling at his cruel prey. Shakspeare.

Since I sought

By prayer the offended Deity to appease; Kneel'd, and before him humbled all my heart, Methought, I saw him placable, and mild, Bending his ear: persuasion in me grew That I was heard with favour; peace return'd Home to my breast; and to my memory His promise, 'That thy seed shall bruise our foe.' Milton, P. L.

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank, Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how. Dryden.

METICULOUS.* adj. [meticulosus, Lat.] Fearful; timid. Not in use. Coles.

METICULOUSLY.* adv. [from meticulous.] Timidly.

Move circumspectly, not meticulously.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 39.

METONY'MICAL.† adj. [from metonymy.] Put by metonymy for something else.

The verbal signification of these words being metonymical, it will be best to leave them to their own place.

Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, p. 61.

METONY'MICALLY. adv. [from metonymical.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle on Colours.

METONYMY. n. s. [metonymie, French; μετωνυμία.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the materiate; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another. Tillotson.

METOPÆ.* n. s. [metopæ, French.] A square space between triglyphs in the frieze of the Dorick order. Sherwood.

The entablature and all its parts and ornaments, architrave, frieze, cornice, triglyphs, metopæ, modillions, and the rest, have each an use, or appearance of use, in giving firmness and union to the building, in protecting it from the weather, in casting off the rain, in representing the ends of the beams with their intervals, the production of the rafters, and so forth. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

METOPOSCOPIST.* n. s. [from metoposcopy.] One versed in the study of physiognomy.

Among the whole tribe of metoposcopists, there is not so much as one who goes about to prove his assertions.

Philosoph. Letters on Physiognomy, (1751.) p. 206.

METOPOSCOPY.† n. s. [metoposcopia, French; μετωπια and σκεπη.] The study of physiognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

Signs of melancholy from physiognomy, metoposcopia, chironomy. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 56.

Fac. Doctor, how canst thou know this so soon? I am amus'd at that!

Sub. By a rule, captain,
In metoposcopia, which I do work by;
A certain star i' the forehead, which you see not.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.
There was a seam in the middle of his [K. Ch. I.] forehead, downwards; which is a very ill sign in metoposcopia.
Aubrey's Miscellanies, p. 38.

MET'RE. n. s. [metrum, Latin; μέτρον.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose.
Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Abuse the city's best good men in metre,
To laugh at lords. Pope.

MET'RICAL. † adj. [metricus, Latin; μετρικη, French.]

1. Pertaining to metre or numbers.
Let any the best psalmist of them all compose a hymn in metrical form, and sing it to a new tune with perfect and true musick.

Bp. Taylor on Extemp. Prayer, § 29.
2. Consisting of verses: as, metrical precepts.

A voluminous metrical translation of Guido de Colonna.
Warton, Hist. E. p. i. 119.

Most of the old metrical romances are, from their nature, supposed to be incoherent rhapsodies.
Ibid. p. 182.

METRI'CIAN.* n. s. [from metre.] A Metrist, } writer of verses. Two old and significant words.

Ye, that ben metriens, me excuse.
Chaucer, Court of Love.
Blind popish poets, and dirty metrists.
Bale on the Revel. P. ii. (1550), sign. c. ii.

METRO'POLIS. † n. s. [metropolis, Latin; metropole, French; μετροπολις, Gr.] Very rarely found with a plural. Dr. Johnson has given no example. The learned Hammond affords one.] The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen: or some renown'd metropolis,
With glistering spires and pinnacles adorn'd.

Milton, P. R.
Reduc'd in careful watch
Round their metropolis. Milton, P. L.

Many cities became metropoles, which formerly were not. Hammond on the Ep. to the Philippi. i. 1.
We stopped at Pavia, that was once the metropolis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town.
Addison on Italy.

METRO'POLITAN. † n. s. [metropolitanus, Latin.] A bishop of the mother church; an archbishop.

Gregorye — admitted him for the first metropolitane of all the whole realme, appointing his seat from thence forth at Canterbury.

Bale, Acts of Eng. Vol. P. i. (1550), p. 31.
He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and countenanced men of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon.

METRO'POLITAN. † adj. Belonging to a metropolis.

The patriarch, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forborn to institute metropolitan bishops.
Raleigh.

Still to acknowledge God's ancient people their betters, and that language the metropolitan language.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

METRO'POLITE.* n. s. [from metropolis.] A metropolitan; an archbishop; a bishop of the mother church.

Other ancient synods style him metropolit; and to the metropolites of the principal cities they gave the title of archbishop.

Burrow on the Pope's Supremacy.
The patriarch of Constantinople is elected by the metropolites, or bishops, according to the plurality of voices.

Ricaute, State of the Greek Church, p. 95.
All the power he hath, is to constitute an archbishop over them, whose seat is at Careis, and another at Sidero-Copti, but subordinate to the metropolit of Thessalonica. Ibid. p. 250.

METROPOLITICAL. † adj. [from metropolis.] 1. Chief or principal as applied to cities.

He fearing the power of the Christians was gone as far as Gratia, the metropolit city of Stria. Knolles.

2. Denoting archiepiscopal dignity or power.

Having at that time a lawful archbishop of their own, legally established in the metropolit chair.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 91.

The erection of a power in the person of Titus, a metropolit power over the whole island of Crete. Abp. Sancroft, Sermon, p. 4.

METRO'POLITICK.* adj. Archiepiscopal. Not in use.

Kent — had the first English king; in it was the first Christianity among the English, and Canterbury then honoured with the metropolitique see. Seldon on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 18.

MET'TLE. n. s. [corrupted from metall, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]

1. Spirit; spriteliness; courage.
What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?
He was quick mettle when he went to school.
Shakespeare.

I had rather go with sir priest than sir knight;
I care not who knows so much of my mettle.
Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the seditious.
Hayward, Edw. VI.

He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon.

'Tis more to guide than spur the muse's steed,
Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The winged courser, like a gen'rous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course.
Pope.

2. Substance: this at least should be mettal.

Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puffed,
Engenders the black toad, and adder black. Shakspeare.

MET'TLED. † adj. [from mettle.] Spritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and mettal'd dance
Saw you never. B. Jonson.

An ineffectual laziness is the seminary both of vice and infamy: it clouds the mettled mind, it mists the wit, and chokes up all the sciences.
Felham, Res. ii. 49.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows.
Addison.

MET'TLESOME. adj. [from mettle.] Spritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery; courageous.

Their force differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Tatler, No. 61.

MET'TLESOMELY. adv. [from mettlesome.]

With spriteliness.

MET'TWAND.* n. s. See METEWARD.

The golden metwand of the law.

Burke, Speech on the Middlesex Elect.

MEW. † n. s. [mue, French. Dr. Johnson. — The word mue denotes a change; "hence any casting of the coat or skin, as the ming of a hawk." Cotgrave. Then it came to denote a cage, in which the hawk was kept till he had moulted; and lastly a cage in general.]

1. A cage for hawks. The king's meus at Charing Cross is the place where formerly the king's hawks were kept.

By her beddes head she made a mew: —
Thus lete I Canace her hawk keeping.

Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

2. A cage; an inclosure; a place where any thing is confined.

Forth-coming from her darksome mew,
Where she all day did hide her hated hew.

Spenser, F. Q.
There then she does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly mis-shapes with ugly sights,
Capiv'd eternally in iron meus,
And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shews.

Spenser, F. Q.
Her lofty hand would of itself refuse
To touch the dainty needle or nice thread;
She hated chambers, closets, secret meus,
And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhead.

Fairfax.

3. [Mæp, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.

Among the first sort we reckon coots, sanderlings, and meaves.
Carew.
The vessel sticks, and shews her open'd side,
And on her shatter'd mast the meus in triumph ride.
Dryden.

To MEW. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to inclose.

He in dark corners mew'd,
Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Why should you fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up Your tender kinsman. Shakespeare, K. John.

Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon.

Shakespeare.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Shakespeare.
Feign them sick,

Cloise mew'd in their sedans for fear of air.

Dryden, Juv.

It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company.

Locke.

2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers. Dr. Johnson. — It is rather, I should suppose, from the original meaning of muer, to change, from the Latin mutare; thence to change or cast the skin or feathers.

Stand forth, transform'd Antonio, fully mew'd
From brown soar feathers of dull yeomanry,
To the glorious bloom of gentry.

Albunazar, (1614.)

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty defac'd the royal stamp.

Cleveland.

Ten times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length
With travel weary, unsupplied with strength,
And with the burden of her womb oppress'd,
Sabeen fields afford her needful rest.

Dryden.

3. [Miauler, French; micau, Icel.] To cry as a cat.

Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, the dog will have his day.

Shakespeare.

They are not improvable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark.

Grew.

To Mew,* v. n. [muer, Fr.] To change;
to put on a new appearance.

The fowles about the field do syng; now every thing doth mew,
And shifts his rustie winter robe.

Turberville, Ecl.

ME'WING,* n. s. [from mew.] The act of moulting.

Cotgrave.

I should discourse of hawks, then treat of their ayries, mewings, casting and renovation of their feathers.

Walton.

To MEWL, v. n. [miauler, French.] To squall as a child.

The infant

Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms.

Shakespeare.

ME'WLER,* n. s. [from mewl; Fr. miauleur.]
One who squalls or mewls.

Cotgrave.

ME'ZERON, n. s. A species of spurge laurel.

Mezereon is common in our gardens, and on the Alps and Pyrenean mountains: every part of this shrub is acrid and pungent, and inflames the mouth and throat.

Hill.

MEZZO-RELIEVO,* n. s. [Italian.]
Projection of figures between the proportion of those in alto and basso-relievo;
called also semi-relievo.

We saw antique figures of men, carved in the natural rock, in mezzo-relievo, and in bigness equal to the life.

Maunderell, Trav. p. 37.

ME'ZZOTINTO, n. s. [Italian.] A kind of graving so named as nearly resembling paint, the word importing half-painted:
It is done by beating the whole into asperity with a hammer, and then rubbing it down with a stone to the resemblance intended.

MEYNT,† adj. Mingled. See To MEINE.
Obsolete.

MI'ASM, n. s. [from μῆμα, iniquo, to infect.] Such particles or atoms as are supposed to arise from distempered, putrefying, or poisonous bodies, and to affect people at a distance.

The plague is a malignant fever, caused through pestilential miasms insinuating into the humoral and consistent parts of the body.

Harvey on Consumptions.

MI'CA,* n. s. [Latin.] A mineral substance capable of being divided into thin, flexible, and elastic leaves.

Coloured micas generally contain some metallic matters, chiefly iron; and are much more fusible than those which are pure and colourless.

Chambers.

MICA'CEOUS,* adj. [from mica.] Of the nature of mica; easily separable.

A reddish earth filled with friable micaceous nodules.

Pennant.

MICE, the plural of mouse.

Mice that mar the land.

1 Sam. vi. 5.

MI'CHAELOMASS. [Michael and mass.] The feast of the archangel Michael, celebrated on the twenty-ninth of September.

They compounded to furnish ten oxen after Michaelmass for thirty pounds price.

Carew.

To MICHE,† v. n. [a word of great age in our language; perhaps from the old French mucer, musser, to conceal, to lurk, Cotgrave; mucha, concealed, Kel- ham.]

1. To pilfer; to commit secret theft.
"Mychyn or pryvely stelyn smale thyngs." Prompt. Parv.

What he may get of his mychynge.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Miching or mightie thieves.

Lambard, Eirenarch, (1610,) p. 186.

2. To be secret or covered; to lie hid;
to lurk out of sight; to play truant.

See MICHER.

Lest any of them should straggle up and downe the cuntry, or micke in corners amongst their friends idly.

Spenser on Ireland.

Wherefore thus vainly in land Lybye mitche
you?

Stanyhurst, Virg. (1582.)

Marry, this is micching mallecho; it means mischief.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

MI'CHER,† n. s. [from miche.]
1. A thief; a pilferer. So used in Norfolk. See also MICHERY.

A miccher forsworne. Chaucer, Rom. R. 6541.

Wanton wenches, and also micchers,

With many other of the devyll's officers.

Old Morality of Hycke-Scorner.

2. A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of sight; a hedge-creeper.

Miche or mick is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow. It is used in the western countries for a truant boy.

How tenderly her tender hands between

In ivory cage she did the miccher bind.

How like a miccher he stands, as though he had truanted from honesty.

Lily, Moth. Bombe, (1594.)

Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a miccher, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked.

Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

MI'CHERY,* n. s. [from miche.] Theft;
cheating.

With covetise yet I finde

A servant of the same kinde,

Which stelh is hote; and micherie

With him is ever in companie.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

MI'CKLE,† adj. [mickel, Saxon; mikil, old Teut. mikel, Icel. μεγαλος, Greek.
"Vox antiquissima," Serenius observes.]
Much; great. Still used in our northern countries.

This rede is rife, that oftentime

Great clymbers fall unsoft:

In humble dale is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his misse not mickle.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

Many a little makes a mickle. Camden, Rem.
If I to-day die don't with Frenchmen's rage,
To-morrow I shall die with mickle age.

Shakespeare, Henry VI.

O, mickle is the pow'rful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities.

Shakespeare.

All this tract that fronts the falling sun,
A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,
Has in his charge.

Milton, Comus.

MI'CROCOSM, n. s. [μικρος and κόσμος.]
The little world. Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.

You see this in the map of my microcosm.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

She to whom this world must itself refer,
As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;

She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st
this,

Thou know'st how lame a creeple this world is.

Donne.

As in this our microcosm, the heart
Heat, spirit, motions gives to every part:
So Rome's victorious influence did disperse
All her own virtues through the universe.

Denham.

Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politic.

Swift.

MICROCOSMICAL,* adj. [from microcosm.]
Pertaining to the microcosm.

Calculate thyself within; seek not thyself in the moon, but in thine own orb or microcosmical circumference.

Brown, Chr. Mor.

MICROGRAPHY, n. s. [μικρος and γραφω.]
The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernible only with a microscope.

The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter: a curious description and figure of the sting see in Mr. Hook's micrography.

Grew, Mus.

MI'CROSCOPE, n. s. [μικρος and σκοπία;
microscope, French.] An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.

If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscopes, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing, to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed; the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beset all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs.

Bentley.

The critical eye, that microscope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit.

Pope, Dunciad.

MICRO'METER, n. s. [μικρος and μετρον; mi- crometre, French.] An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.

MICROSCO'PICAL, } adj. [from microscope.]
MICROSCO'PICK, }

1. Made by a microscope.

Make microscopical observations of the figure and bulk of the constituent parts of all fluids.

Arbutnot and Pope.

2. Assisted by a microscope.

Evading even the microscopic eye!

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson, Summer.
3. Resembling a microscope.

Why has not man a microscopic eye?
For this plain reason, Man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer optics given,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heaven?

Pope.

MID-† adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon miðb.]

1. Middle; equally between two extremes.
No more the mountain larks, while Daphne sings,
Shall, lifting in mid air, suspend their wings.

Pope.

Ere the mid hour of night, from tent to tent,
Unweary'd, through th' num'rous host he past.

MID-COURSE. n. s. [mid and course.] Middle of the way.

Why in the east

Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light,
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white?

Milton, P. L.

MID-DAY. adj. [mid and day.] Meridional, being at noon.

Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush.

Sidney.

His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces.

Shakespeare.

Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,
And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?

Addison.

MID-DAY. n. s. Noon; meridian.

Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works, though toughly labour'd, will be
Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day.

Donne.

MID-HEAVEN. n. s. [mid and heaven.] The middle of the sky.

But the hot hell that always in him burns,
Though in mid-heaven, soon ended his delight.

Milton, P. L.

MID-SEA. n. s. [mid and sea.] The Mediterranean sea.

Our Tyrrhene Pharos, that the mid-sea meets
With its embrace, and leaves the land behind.

Dryden.

More.

The outward fringe vanished first, and the middlemost next, and the innermost last.

Newton, Opticks.

The outward stars, with their systems of planets, must necessarily have descended toward the middlemost system of the universe, whither all would be most strongly attracted from all parts of a finite space.

Bentley, Sermon.

MID'DLING. adj. [from middle.]

1. Of middle rank; of condition equally remote from high and low.

A middleling sort of a man, left well enough to pass by his father, could never think he had enough so long as any man had more.

L'Estrange, Fab.

2. Of moderate size; having moderate qualities of any kind.

The bigness of a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of middleling lungs will easily extend.

Gravatt, Bills of Mortality.

Longinus preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs, to the middleling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to any excellence.

Dryden.

MID'DLINGLY.* adv. [from middleling.] Passably; indifferently.

Johnson, in V. Indifferently.

MIDGE.† n. s. [mictege, Saxon.] A gnat.

Wheatly on the Comm. Prayer, p. 227.

MID'LENTING.* adj. Going about to visit parents at midlent. See MOTHERING.

A custom still retained in many parts of England, and well known by the name of midlenting or mothering. Wheatly on the Comm. Pr. p. 227.

MID'MOST.† adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemost: this is one of the words which have not a comparative degree. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Saxon miðmeȝta.] The middle.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hasting up behind.

Dryden.

Hear himself repine
At fate's unequal laws, and at the clue,

Which, merciless in length, the midmost sister drew.

Dryden.

What dulness dropt among her sons impress,
Like motion, from one circle to the rest:
So from the midmost the nutation spreads
Round and more round o'er all the sea of heads.

Pope.

MID'NIGHT.† n. s. [mid and night; miðniht, Sax.] Milton seems to have accented the last syllable, Dr. Johnson observes; which indeed was not peculiar to him. Shakespeare more than once has so accented it; and Mallet, in the first edition of his William and Margaret, thus gives it:

"When all was wrapt in dark midnight,
"And all were fast asleep."

Which however he borrowed from elder poetry; and in a subsequent edition changed midnight and the two lines into the cold and quaint periphrasis of "the silent solemn hour, when night and morning meet." The noon of night; the depth of night; twelve at night.

To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go betimes.

By night he fled, and at midnight return'd
From compassing the earth; cautious of day.

After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had past.

In all that dark midnight of popery there were still some gleams of light, some witnesses that arose to give testimony to the truth.

They can tell what altitude the dog-star had at midnight or midnoon in Rome when Julius Cæsar was slain.

MIDNIGHT. adj. Being in the middle of the night.

How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags? What is't you do?

I hope my midnight studies, to make our countries flourish in mysterious and beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects.

Some solitary cloister will I chuse,
Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep,
Broke by the melancholy midnight bell.

MIDWIFE. n. s. [mibwɪpɛ, Saxon.] The diaphragm.

The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities; the thorax and abdomen: it is composed of two muscles; the first and superior of these arises from the sternum, and the ends of the last ribs on each side. The second and inferior muscle comes from the vertebrae of the loins by two productions, of which that on the right side comes from the first, second, and third vertebrae of the loins; that on the left side is somewhat shorter, and both these productions join and make the lower part of the midriff.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd
Smote him into the midriff with a stone,
That beat out life.

In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carnosus fibres of that muscular part are infected.

MIDSHIP. n. s. [mid and ship.] A term of distinction, applied by shipwrights to several pieces of timber which lie in the broadest part of the vessel.

MIDSHIPMAN. n. s. [from mid, ship, and man.]

Midshipmen are officers aboard a ship, whose station is some on the quarter-deck, others on the poop. Their business is to mind the braces, to look out, and to give about the word of command from the captain, and other superior officers: they also assist, on all occasions, both in sailing the ship, and in stowing and rummaging the hold.

MIDST. n. s. Middle.

All is well when nothing pleases but God, being thankful in the midst of his afflictions.

Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Arise, ye subtle spirits that can spy
When love is enter'd in a female's eye;
You that can read it in the midst of doubt,
And in the midst of frowns can find it out.

Dryden.

MIDST. adj. [contracted from middest, the superlative of mid.] Midmost; being in the middle.

On earth join all ye creatures to extol
Him first, Him last, Him midst, and without end.

Milton, P. L.

In the Slighted Maid, there is nothing in the first act but what might have been said or done in the fifth; nor any thing in the midst which might not have been placed in the beginning.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

MIDST.* prep. Sometimes poetically used for amidst, in all its senses.

MIDSTREAM. n. s. [mid and stream.] Middle of the stream.

The midstream's his, I creeping by the side,
And shoulder'd off by his impetuous tide.

Dryden.

MIDSUMMER. † n. s. [mid and summer; Sax. mibsumper.] The summer solstice, reckoned to fall on June the twenty-first.

However orthodox my sentiments relating to publick affairs may be while I am now writing, they may become criminal enough to bring me into trouble before Midsummer.

Swift.

At eve last Midsummer no sleep I sought.

Gay, Past.

MIDWARD.* adj. [mibbepeapb, Saxon.] Midst; being in the middle.

Prompt. Parv.

MIDWAY. n. s. [mid and way.] The part of the way equally distant from the beginning and end.

No midway 'twixt these extremes at all.

Shakespeare.

He were an excellent man that were made in the midway between him and Benedick; the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Pity and shame! that they, who to live well
Stood so fair, should turn aside to tread
Paths indirect, or in the midway faint!

Milton, P. L.

The hare laid himself down about midway, and took a nap; for I can fetch up the tortoise when I please.

L'Estrange.

How didst thou arrive at this place of darkness, when so many rivers of the ocean lie in the midway.

Broome.

MIDWAY. adj. Being in the middle between two places.

How fearful

And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!
The crows and choughs that wing the midway air,
Shew scarce so gross as beetles.

Shakespeare.

MIDWAY. adv. In the middle of the passage.

With dry eyes, and with an open look,
She met his glance midway.

Dryden, Boccace.

MIDWIFE. † n. s. [This is derived, both by Skinner and Junius, from mib or meed, a reward, and wi, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — The interpretation of this etymology, which Verstegan also gives, is, "a woman of meed, deserving recompence." But this seems a forced meaning. May not the word be more naturally derived from the Saxon proposition mib, with, and wi, wife; implying the wife or woman who is attendant upon, that is, with the woman in childbirth?] A woman who assists women in childbirth.

When man doth die, our body, as the womb,
And as a midwife, death directs it home. Donne.
Without a midwife these their throats sustain,
And, bowing, bring their issue forth with pain.

Sandys.

There saw I how the secret felon wrought,
And treason lab'ring in the traitor's thought,
And midwife time the ripen'd plot to murder brought.

Dryden, Kn. Tale.

I had as clear a notion of the relation of brothers between them, as if I had all the skill of a midwife.

Locke.

But no man, sure! e'er left his house
And saddled Ball with thoughts so wild,
To bring a midwife to his spouse,
Before he knew she was with child.

Prior.

To MIDWIFE. } v. a. [from the noun.]
To MIDWIFE. }

1. To assist in childbirth.

Without this ubiquity, how could she be seen at harvest, wiping the faces of reaping monks, whilst she is elsewhere burning villages, or in a rich abbey midwiving an abbeys, whom her steward had unfortunately gotten with child?

Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, (1674,) p. 86.

2. To produce.

This child of yours, born without spurious blot, And fairly midwiv'd, as it was begot,
Doth so much of the parents' goodness bear,
You may be proud to own it for your heir.

Bp. H. King, Verses pref. to Sandys's Ps. (1648.)

The soul, by the same strength, as opportunities do midwife them out, brings forth christian spiritual actions.

Hammond, Works, iv. 573.

Two severe fits of sickness did midwife them [two discourses] into the world.

Dulgarno, Deaf & Dumb Man's Tutor, (1680,) Intr.

Having been before only as an embryo, ready to be midwiv'd into the world.

Chancellor Geddes, Tracts, iv. 80.

To MIDWIFE.* v. n. To perform the office of a midwife.

Where was the "genius loci" when this disaster happened? Perhaps in the office of Diana, when her temple was burning, gone a midwifing.

Warburton to Hard, Let. 21.

MIDWIFERY. † n. s. [from midwife.]

1. Assistance given at childbirth.

2. Trade of a midwife.

3. Act of production; help to production; co-operation in production.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsome, p. 119.

As to mental midwifery, and communication of our notions. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 478.

So hasty fruits, and too ambitious flowers,
Scorning the midwifery of rip'ning showers,
In spite of frosts spring from th' unwilling earth.

Stepney.

There was never any thing propounded for public good, that did not meet with opposition; arising from the humour of such as would have nothing brought into the world but by their own midwifery.

Child, Disc. on Trade.

MIDWINTER. † n. s. [mid and winter; Saxon, mibwintep. "Christmas-day is frequently called, in our old monuments, mibwintep-dæg, midwinter-day, and mibwintep-mæsse, midwinter-masse: from whence, I suppose, it may reasonably be concluded, that, when that name was first applied to that day, the day whereon Christmas fell was in the calendar either coincident with, or not far removed from, the winter solstice." Hammond, Works, i. 651.] The winter solstice; December the twenty-first.

Begin when the slow waggoner descends,
Nor cease your sowing till midwinter ends.

Dryden.
MIEN.† n. s. [mine, French. Dr. Johnson.
— Mynd, Goth. the countenance. Sere-nius.] Air; look; manner.

[He] mark'd her rare demeanure, which him seemed

So farre the meane of shepherds to excell.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 11.
In her alone that owns this book is seen
Clorinda's spirit, and her lofty mien.

What can have more the figure and mien of a ruin, than craggs, rocks, and cliffs.

Burnet, The. of the Earth.
One, in whom an outward mien appear'd,
And turn superior to the vulgar herd.

What winning graces, what majestic mien,
She moves a goddess, and she looks a queen. Pope.

MIFF.* n. s. Displeasure; ill-humour:
"He left me in a miff," a colloquial expression in many places; and a word well authorized.

They take a miff at him, they pirke up themselves, and come boldly and malapertly to him.

Ep. Ward, Apol. for the Myst. of the Gos. (1673), p. 32.

MIGHT.† the preterite of may. [what the
A. Saxons wrote mægeþ or mæðoe, i. e.
what one mayeth; the third person singular of the indicative of magan, valere, posse. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii.
421.]

1. To have had power to; to have been possible.

Matters of such consequence should be in plain words, as little liable as might be to doubt. Locke.

2. Used by Spenser for should.

The thing that might not be, and yet was done.
Spenser, F. Q. i. vi. 39.

MIGHT. n. s. [might, Saxon.] Power; strength; force.

What so strong,
But wanting rest, will also want of might? Spenser.

Quoth she, great grief will not be told;
And can more easily be thought than said;

Right so, quoth he, but he that never would,
Could never; will to might gives greatest aid.

Spenser.

An oath of mickle might. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
Wherefore should not strength and might

There fail, where virtue fails. Milton, P. L.

MIGHT and main. Utmost force; highest degree of strength.

With might and main they chac'd the murd'rous
fox,

With brazen trumpets and inflated box. Dryden.
This privilege the clergy in England formerly contended for with all might and main.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

MIGHTILY.† adv. [mightlice, Saxon.]

1. With great power; powerfully; effica-ciously; forcibly.

With whom ordinary means will prevail, surely the power of the word of God, even without the help of interpreters, in God's church worketh mightily, not unto their confirmation alone which are converted, but also to their conversion which are not.

So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed.
Acts, xix. 20.

2. Vehemently; vigorously; violently.

Do as adversaries do in law,

Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends. Shaks.

Let man and beast be covered with sackcloth,
and cry mightily unto God. Jonah, iii. 8.

3. In a great degree; very much. This is a sense scarcely to be admitted but in low language.

Therein thou wrong'st thy children mightily.
Shakespeare.

There's ne'er a one of you but trusts a knave,
That mightily deceives you. Titus Andronicus.

An ass and an ape conferring grievances: the ass complained mightily for want of horns, and the ape for want of a tail. L'Estrange, Fab.

These happening nearer home made so lasting impressions upon their minds, that the tradition of the old deluge was mightily obscured, and the circumstances of it interwoven and confounded with those of these later deluges. Woodward.

I was mightily pleased with a story applicable to this piece of philosophy. Spectator.

MIGHTINESS.† n. s. [mihhtneffe, Saxon.]

Power; greatness; height of dignity.

Think you see them great,
And followed with general throug and sweat
Of thousand friends; then in a moment see,
How soon this mightiness meets misery.

with a strong sweet scent like that of raspberries. Mason.

To MIGRATE.* v. n. [migro, Lat.] To remove from one place to another; to change residence.

M. de Buffon says, that the swallow is not torpid in winter, and must therefore migrate to the coast of Senegal. Barrington, Ess. 4.

This territory was — newly people in the fourth century by a colony or army of the Welsh, who migrated thither. Warton.

If I grew better, I should not be willing, if much worse, not able to migrate.

Johnson, Lett. to Ld. Thurlow, Boswell's Life of J.

MIGRATION. n. s. [migratio, migro, Lat.]

1. Act of changing residence; removal from one habitation to another.

Aristotle distinguisheth their times of generation,
latiancy, and migration, sanity, and venation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Change of place; removal.

Although such alterations, transitions, migrations of the centre of gravity, and elevations of new islands, had actually happened, yet these shells could never have been reposed thereby in the manner we find them. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

MIGRATORY.* adj. [from migrate.] Disposed to remove from one place to another; changing residence.

This purpose is sometimes carried on by a sort of migratory instinct; sometimes by the spirit of conquest; at one time avarice drives men from their homes, at another they are actuated by a thirst of knowledge.

Burke, Abr. of Eng. Hist. ii. 2.

MILCH.† adj. [melce, Saxon; milky.]

1. Giving milk.

Herne doth, at still of midnight,
Walk round about an oak, with ragged horns;
And then he blasts the tree, and takes the cattle,
And makes milch kine yield blood. Shakespeare.

The best mixtures of water in ponds for cattle, to make them more milch, fatten, or keep them from murrain, may be chalk and nitre.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Not above fifty-one have been starved, excepting infants at nurse, caused rather by carelessness and infirmary of the milch women.

Grant, Bills of Mortality.

With the turneps they feed sheep, milch cows,
or fating cattle. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Soft; tender; merciful: "milch-hearted," Huloet. Obsolete.

The instant burst of clamour that she made, —
Would have made milch the burning eye of heaven,
And passion in the gods. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

5 D 2

MILD. adj. [milb, Saxon.]

1. Kind; tender; good; indulgent; merciful; compassionate; clement; soft; not severe; not cruel.

The execution of justice is committed to his judges, which is the severer part; but the milder part, which is mercy, is wholly left in the king.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

If that mild and gentle god thou be,
Who dost mankind below with pity see. Dryden.
It teaches us to adore him as a mild and merciful being, of infinite love to his creatures.

Rogers, Serm.

2. Soft; gentle; not violent.

The rosy morn resigns her light,
And milder glory to the noon. Waller.
Nothing reserv'd or sullen was to see,
But sweet regards, and pleasing sanctity;
Mild was his accent, and his action free. Dryden.
Sylvia's like autumn ripe, yet mild as May,
More bright than noon, yet fresh as early day.

Pope.

The folding gates diffus'd a silver light,
And with a milder gleam refresh'd the sight.

Addison.

3. Not acrid; not corrosive; not acrimonious; demulcent; assuasive; mollifying; lenitive.

Their qualities are changed by rendering them acrimonious or mild.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. Not sharp; mellow; sweet; having no mixture of acidity.

The Irish were transplanted from the woods and mountains into the plains, that, like fruit trees, they might grow the milder, and bear the better and sweeter fruit.

Davies.

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale.

Prior.

MILDEW. n. s. [milbeape, Saxon.]

Mildew is a disease in plants, caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils the plant: or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, found in great plenty, preying upon this exsudation. Others say, that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the spring and summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun nor wind. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the east, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are concreted upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are inticed thereto. Hill.

Down fell the mildew of his sugared words.

Fairfax.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh.

Bacon.

Soon blasting mildewes black'ned all the grain.

Dryden.

To MILDEW. v. a. To taint with mildew.

Here is your husband, like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

He mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creatures of the earth.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Morals snatch from Plutarch's tatter'd page,
A mildew'd Bacon, or Stagyræ's sage.

Gay, Trivia.

MILDLY.† adv. [milbelice, Saxon.]

1. Tenderly; not severely.

Prince, too mildly reigning,

Cease thy sorrow and complaining. Dryden.

2. Gently; not violently.

The air once heated maketh the flame burn more mildly, and so helpeth the continuance.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MILDNESS. n. s. [from mild.]

1. Gentleness; tenderness; mercy; clemency.

This milky gentleness and course of yours;
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmless mildness.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The same majestick mildness held its place;

Nor lost the monarch in his dying face. Dryden.

I saw with what a brow you brav'd your fate;

Yet with what mildness bore your father's hate.

Dryden.

His probity and mildness shows
His care of friends and scorn of foes.

Addison.

2. Contrariety to acrimony.

MILE.† n. s. [mil, mila, Saxon; mille passus, Latin.] The usual measure of roads in England, one thousand seven hundred and sixty yards, or five thousand two hundred and eighty feet.

We must measure twenty miles to-day. Shaks.

Within this three mile you may see it coming,

A moving grove. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

When the enemy appeared, the foot and artillery was four miles behind. Clarendon.

Millions of miles, so rapid is their race,

To cheer the earth they in few moments pass.

Blackmore.

MILESTONE. n. s. [mile and stone.] Stone set to mark the miles.

MILFOIL. n. s. [millefolium, Latin.] A plant, the same with yarrow.

Milfoil and honey-suckles pound,

With these alluring savours strew the ground.

Dryden.

MILINARY. adj. [miliun, Latin, millet; miliare, French.] Small; resembling a millet seed.

The scarf-skin is composed of small scales, between which the excretory ducts of the military glands open.

Cheyne.

MILIARY fever. A fever that produces small eruptions.

MILICE. n. s. [Fr.] Standing force. A word innovated by Temple, but unworthy of reception.

The two-and-twentieth of the prince's age is the time assigned by their constitutions for his entering upon the publick charges of their milice.

Temple.

MILITANCY.* n. s. [from militant.] Warfare. A word worthy of revival.

All human life, especially the active part, is constituted in a state of continual militancy.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648), p. 122.

MILITANT. adj. [militans, Latin; militante, French.]

1. Fighting; prosecuting the business of a soldier.

Against foul fiends they aid us militant;

They for us fight: they watch and duly ward,

And their bright squadrons round about us plant.

Spenser.

2. Engaged in warfare with hell and the world. A term applied to the church of Christ on earth, as opposed to the church triumphant.

Then are the public duties of religion best ordered, when the militant church doth resemble, by sensible means, that hidden dignity and glory wherewith the church triumphant in heaven is beautified.

Hooker.

The state of a Christian in this world is frequently compared to a warfare: and this allusion has appeared so just, that the character of militant has obtained as the common distinction of that part of Christ's church sojourning here in this world from that part of the family at rest. Rogers.

MILITAR. } adj. [militaris, Latin; mili-MILITARY. } taire, French. Militar is now wholly out of use.]

1. Engaged in the life of a soldier; soldierly.

He will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. Suiting a soldier; pertaining to a soldier; warlike.

In the time of Severus and Antoninus, many, being soldiers, had been converted unto Christ, and notwithstanding continued still in that military course of life.

Hooker.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, yet his cruelties weighed down his virtues.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Numbers numberless
The city gates out-pour'd, light-armed troops
In coats of mail and military pride. Milton, P. R.

The wreaths his grandsire knew to reap
By active toil, and military sweat,
Pining incline their sickly leaves.

Prior.

3. Effected by soldiers.

He was with general applause, and great cries of joy, in a kind of military election or recognition, saluted king.

Bacon.

MILITARY.* n. s. pl. The soldiery.

MILITARILY.* adv. [from military.] In a soldierly manner.

We were militarily affected.

Trial of the Regicides, (1660,) p. 155.

To MILITATE.* v. n. [milito, Latin. Of modern use in our language. In 1673 the Latin word (printed in Italicks) is given instead of it; as in the Pref. to the learned Dr. Jackson's works, published in that year. "It is expected, that two objections will militate against the labours of this great author, &c."] To oppose; to operate against.

This consideration would militate with more effect against his hypothesis, than a thousand syllogisms.

Blackburn, Confessional.

MILITIA. n. s. [Latin.] The trainbands; the standing force of a nation.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia be good and valiant soldiers.

Bacon, Essays.

The militia was so settled by law, that a sudden army could be drawn together.

Clarendon.

Unnumbered spirits round thee fly,

The light militia of the lower sky.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

MILK.† n. s. [mele, Sax.; melck, Dutch; melk, German; μέλας, Greek; from ἀμύγω, to milk; melgeo, Latin; melcian, melcan, Saxon. We had formerly emulck for milked. See Cockeram's Vocab.]

1. The liquor with which animals feed their young from the breast.

Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I fear thy nature,
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness
To catch the nearest way. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Milk is the occasion of tumours of divers kinds.
Wiseman.

Illustrious robes of satin and of silk,
And wanton laments more soft and white than milk.
Beaumont, Psyche.

When milk is dry'd with heat,
In vain the milkmaid tugs an empty teat. Dryden.
I concluded, if the gout continued, to confine myself wholly to the milk diet. Temple, Miscel.
Broths and milk-meats are windy to stomachs troubled with acid ferments.

Floyer on the Humours.
2. Emulsion made by contusion of seeds.
Pistachoes, so they be good and not musty, joined with almonds in almond milk, or made into a milk of themselves, like unto almond milk, are an excellent nourisher. Bacon.

To MILK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To draw milk from the breast by the hand.

Capacious chargers all around were laid,
Full pails, and vessels of the milking trade.
Pope, Odys.

2. To suck.

I have given suck, and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me.
Shakespeare.

MILKEN. adj. [from milk.] Consisting of milk.

The remedies are to be proposed from a constant course of the milken diet, continued at least a year. Temple.

MILKER.† n. s. [from milk.]

1. One that milks animals.
His kine with swelling udders ready stand,
And lowing for the pail invite the milker's hand.
Dryden.

2. A cow that gives milk. A northern expression. Craven Dial. and Brockett.

MILKINESS. n. s. [from milky.] Softness like that of milk; approach to the nature of milk.

Would I could share thy balmy, even temper,
And milkiness of blood. Dryden, Cleomenes.
The saltness and oilyness of the blood absorbing
the acid of the chyle, it loses its milkiness.

Floyer on the Humours.
MILKLIVERED. adj. [milk and liver.]
Cowardly; timorous; faint-hearted.

Milkivered man!
That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wrongs.
Shakespeare.

MILKMAID. n. s. [milk and maid.] Woman employed in the dairy.

When milk is dry'd with heat,
In vain the milkmaid tugs an empty teat.
Dryden, Virg.

A lovely milkmaid be began to regard with an eye of mercy. Addison.

MILKMAN. n. s. [milk and man.] A man who sells milk.

MILKPAIL. n. s. [milk and pail.] Vessel into which cows are milked.

That very substance which last week was grazing in the field, waving in the milkpail, or growing in the garden, is now become part of the man.

Watts, Impr. of the Mind.
MILKPAN. n. s. [milk and pan.] Vessel in which milk is kept in the dairy.

Sir Fulke Grevil had much and private access to Queen Elizabeth, and did many men good;
yet he would say merrily of himself, that he was like Robin Godfellow; for when the maids split the milkpans, or kept any racket, they would lay it upon Robin: so what tales the ladies about the queen told her, or other bad offices that they did,
they would put it upon him. Bacon, Aphorisms.

MILKPO'TTAGE. n. s. [milk and pottage.]
Food made by boiling milk with water and oatmeal.

For breakfast and supper, milk and milkpottage are very fit for children. Locke.

MILKSCORE. n. s. [milk and score.] Account of milk owed for, scored on a board.

He is better acquainted with the milkscore than his steward's accounts. Addison.

MILKSOP.† n. s. [milk and sop.] A soft,
mild, effeminate, feeble-minded man.
This word of contempt is very old in our language.

Alas, she saith, that ever I was yshape
To wed a milksope, or a coward ape.

Chaucer, Monk's Prologue.
Of a most notorious thief, which lived all his life-time of spoils, one of their bards will say, that he was none of the idle milksope that was brought up by the fire-side, but that most of his days he spent in arms, and that he did never eat his meat before he had won it with his sword. Spenser.

A milksope, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
We have as good passions as yourself; and a woman was never designed to be a milksope.
Addison, Spect.

But give him port and potent sack;
From milksope he starts up muckack. Prior.

MILKTOOTH. n. s. [milk and tooth.]

Milkteeth are those small teeth which come forth before when a foal is about three months old, and which he begins to cast about two years and a half after,
in the same order as they grew.

Farrier's Dict.
MILKTHISTLE. n. s. [milk and thistle:]
plants that have a white juice are named milkly. An herb.

MILKTREFOIL. n. s. [cytissus.] An herb.

plant. Miller.

MILKWEED. n. s. [milk and weed.] A plant.

MILKWHITE. adj. [milk and white.] White as milk.

She a black silk cap on him begun
To set, for foil of his milkwhite to serve. Sidney.

Then will I raise aloft the milkwhite rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd.

Shakespeare.
The bolt of Cupid fell,
It fell upon a little western flower;
Before milkwhite, now purple with love's wound;
And maidens call it love's idleness. Shakespeare.

A milkwhite goat for you I did provide;
Two milkwhite kids run frisking by her side.

Dryden.

MILKWORT. n. s. [milk and wort.] A bell-shaped flower.

MILKWOMAN. n. s. [milk and woman.] A woman whose business is to serve families with milk.

Even your milkwoman and your nursery-maid have a fellow-feeling.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

MILKY. adj. [from milk.]

1. Made of milk.

2. Resembling milk.

Not tasteless herbs that in these gardens rise,
Which the kind soil with milky sap supplies,

Can move the god. Pope.

Some plants upon breaking their vessels yield a milky juice. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Yielding milk.

Perhaps my passion he disdains,
And courts the milky mothers of the plains.
Roscommon.

4. Soft; gentle; tender; timorous.

Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns in less than two nights. Shakespeare.

This milky gentleness and course of yours,
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

MILKY-WAY. n. s. [milky and way.] The galaxy.

The milky-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track encompassing the whole heavens, and extending itself in some places with a double path, but for the most part with a single one. Some of the ancients, as Aristotle, imagined that this path consisted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but, by the telescopical observations of this age, it hath been discovered to consist of an immense quantity of fixed stars, different in situation and magnitude, from the confused mixture of whose light its whole colour is supposed to be occasioned. Harris.

Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies to find the milky-way:
It forcibly intrudes upon our sight.

Creech, Manilius.
How many stars there must be, a naked eye may give us some faint glimpse, but much more a good telescope, directed towards that region of the sky called the milky-way. Cheyne.

MILL.† n. s. [μύλος, Gr. mola, Lat. melin,
Welsh; myln, mln, Saxon; moulin, Fr.

molen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—Thus our word was formerly written milne or mylne, like the Saxon; and, in some parts of England, a miller is still called milner. Chaucer, "these milnestones,"

Tr. and Cress. ii. 1385. Serenius calls mill "vox antiquissima, multisque lin-guis communis;" and he deduces it from the Goth. malan, to grind.] An engine or fabrick in which corn is ground to meal, or any other body is comminuted. In general an engine in which any operation is performed by means of wind or water; sometimes it is used of engines turned by the hand, or by animal force.

The table, and we about it, did all turn round by water which ran under, and carried it about as a mill. Sidney.

Olives ground in mills their fatness boast.
Dryden.

A miller had his arm and scapula torn from his body by a rope twisted round his wrist, and suddenly drawn up by the mill. Sharp, Surgery.

Greek; melia, to beat, mala, to grind, Icelandick.]

1. To grind; to comminute.

2. To beat up chocolate.

3. To stamp coin in the mints.

It would be better for your milled medals, if they carried the whole legend on their edges; but at the same time that they are lettered on the edges, they have other inscriptions on the face and the reverse. Addison.

Wood's halfpence are not milled, and therefore more easily counterfeited. Suiff.

MILL-COG. n. s. [mill and cog.] The denotations on the circumference of wheels, by which they lock into other wheels.

The timber is useful for mill-cogs.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650.) p. 87.

2. One who expects the millennium.

The error of the millenarians was very rifo.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 499.

MILLENNARY. adj. [millenaire, Fr. millenarius, Latin.] Consisting of a thousand.

The millenary sestertium, in good manuscripts, is marked with a line cross the top thus HS.

Arbutnot on Coins.

MILLENNIST. n. s. [from mille, Lat.] One that holds the millennium.

MILLENNIAL. adj. [from millennium, Lat.] Pertaining to the millennium.

To be kings and priests unto God, is the characteristic of those that are to enjoy the millennial happiness.

Burnet.

MILLENNIUM. n. s. [Latin.] A thousand years; generally taken for the thousand years during which, according to an ancient tradition in the church, grounded on a doubtful text in the Apocalypse, our blessed Saviour shall reign with the faithful upon earth after the resurrection, before the final completion of beatitude.

We must give a full account of that state called the millennium.

Burnet, The. of the Earth.

MILLEPED.† n. s. [millepieds, French; mille and pes, Latin.] This word is not commonly used in the singular number. Dr. Johnson has not even so noticed it. Other dictionaries have it.] A species of the wood-louse, so called from its numerous feet; the palmer-worm also has this name.

If pheasants and partridge are sick, give them millepedes and earwigs, which will cure them.

Mortimer, Husb.

MILLER. n. s. [from mill.] One who attends a mill.

More water glideth by the mill

Than wots the millier of.

Shakspeare.

Gillius, who made enquiry of millers who dwelt upon its shore, received answer, that the Euripus ebbed and flowed four times a day.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

MILLER. n. s. A fly.

Ainsworth.

MILLER'S-THUMB. n. s. [millier and thumb.] A small fish found in brooks, called likewise a bullhead.

MILLESIMAL. adj. [millesimus, Lat.] Thousandth; consisting of thousandth parts.

To give the square root of the number two, he laboured long in millesimal fractions, till he confessed there was no end.

Watts on the Mind.

MILLET. n. s. [miliun, Lat. mil and millet, Fr.]

1. A plant.

The millet hath a loose divided panicle, and each single flower hath a calyx, consisting of two leaves, which are instead of petals, to protect the stamina and pistillum of the flower, which afterwards becomes an oval, shining seed. This plant was originally brought from the eastern countries, where it is still greatly cultivated, from whence we are annually furnished with this grain, which is by many persons much esteemed for puddings.

Miller.

In two ranks of cavities is placed a roundish studd, about the bigness of a grain of millet.

Woodward on Fossils.

Millet is diaphoretic, cleansing, and useful, in diseases of the kidneys.

2. A kind of fish; unless it be misprinted for mullet.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whiting, mackerel, millet.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

MILLINER.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson believes it to be Milaner, an inhabitant of Milan: others, Maliniere from Malines, as the French called Mechlin. Our lexicography defines the word, "a haberdasher of small wares."] One who sells ribbands and dresses for women.

He was perfumed like a milliner; And, 'twixt his finger and his thumb, he held

A pouncet box, which ever and anon He gave his nose.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Ask from your courtier to your inns-of-court man,

To your meer milliner.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

The mercers and milliners complain of her want of publick spirit.

Taylor.

The millener must be thoroughly versed in physiognomy; in the choice of ribbons she must have a particular regard to the complexion.

Guardian, No. 149.

If any one asks Flavia to do something in charity, she will toss him half a crown, or a crown, and tell him, if he knew what a long milliner's bill she had just received, he would think it a great deal for her to give.

Law.

MILLION. n. s. [million, Fr. milliogne, Italian.]

1. The number of an hundred myriads, or ten hundred thousand.

Within thine eyes; sat twenty thousand deaths, In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers.

Shakspeare.

2. A proverbial name for any very great number.

That the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones, is a truth more evident than many of those propositions that go for principles; and yet there are millions who know not this at all.

Locke.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know.

Locke.

She found the polish'd glass, whose small convex Enlarges to ten millions of degrees

The mite, invisible else.

Philips.

Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receive'd; And glad all heaven with millions thou hast sav'd.

Prior.

MILLIONED.* adj. [from million.] Multiplied by millions.

Time, whose million'd accidents

Creep in 'twixt vows, and change decrees of kings.

Shakspeare, Sonnet 115.

MILLIONTH. adj. [from million.] The ten hundred thousandth.

The first embriom of an ant is supposed to be as big as that of an elephant; which nevertheless can never arrive to the millionth part of the other's bulk.

Bentley.

MILLSTONE. n. s. [mill and stone.] The stone by which corn is comminuted.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge.

L'Estrange.

MILT.† n. s. [mildt, Dutch.]

1. The sperm of the male fish.

You shall scarce take a carp without a melt, or a female without a roe or spawn.

Walton, Angler.

2. The spleen. [milt, Saxon; mil, Dan. milto, Icel.]

TO MILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To impregnate the roe or spawn of the female fish.

MILTHER. n. s. [from milt.] The he of any fish, the she being called spawner.

The spawner and millter labour to cover their spawn with sand.

Walton, Angler.

MILTORT. n. s. [asplenon.] An herb.

MIME.† n. s. [mime, French; μῖμος; mimos, Lat.]

1. A buffoon who practises gesticulations, either representative of some action, or merely contrived to raise mirth.

Thou'st thou, mime, this is great.

B. Jonson.

Let him go now, and brand another man injuriously with the name of mime; being himself the loosest and most extravagant mime that hath been heard of, whom no less than almost half the world could serve for stage-room to play the mime in.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

2. A ludicrous composition; a farce.

Scaliger defines a mime to be a poem intimating any action to stir up laughter.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

Our farces are really what the Romans called mimes; — the intended end and effect of which was excessive laughter.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iii. 351.

TO MIMET.† v. n. To play the mime.

Acts old iniquity; and in the fit Of miming, gets the opinion of a wit.

B. Jonson, Epigr. 115.

In an ill hour hath this unfortunate rashness stumbled upon the mention of miming.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

MI'MER.† n. s. [from mime.] A mimic; a buffoon. Dr. Johnson here cites, for an example, a line from Milton's Samson Agonistes, in which the word is not mimer, but mimick. By an error of the press, in the first edition of Milton's poem, the word was printed mimirs; but the table of errata directs us to read mimicks; which, however, few editions have regarded, and which Dr. Johnson overlooked.

Jugglers, and dancers, anticks, mummers, mimicks. S. A. ver. 1325.
MIME'TICAL.* adj. [μυμητικός, Greek.] Imitative.

If I were composing a dialogue in the old mimetical or poetic form, I should tell you, perhaps, the occasion that led us into this track of conversation. Hard.

MI'MICAL. adj. [mimicus, Latin.] Imitative; besitting a mimic; acting the mimic.

Man is of all creatures the most mimical in gestures, styles, speech, fashion, or accents.

Wotton on Education.
A mimical daw would needs try the same experiment; but his claws were shackled.

L'Estrange.
Singers and dancers entertained the people with light songs and mimical gestures, that they might not go away melancholy from serious pieces of the theatre. Dryden, Juv.

MI'MICALLY.† adv. [from mimical.] In imitation; in a mimical manner.

As the sacrifices offered up to the true God of Israel were federal rites, and those that did partake of them did thereby enter into a covenant with God to become his servants, and obey his laws; so the airy principally hath mimically observed the same thing; and those that offered sacrifices to demons were supposed, by partaking of those sacrifices, to enter into a stricter league and familiarity with those evil spirits.

Hallywell, Melamprom, (1681), p. 58.
MI'MICK.† n. s. [mimicus, Latin.]

1. A ludicrous imitator; a buffoon who copies another's act or manner so as to excite laughter: at first, simply an actor; a player.

No matter whether the scenes be good or no; the better they are, the worse do you distast them; and, being on your feet, sneke not away like a coward, but salute all your gentle acquaintance that are spread either on the rushes, or on stools about you, and draw what troupe you can from the stage after you: the mimicks are beholden to you, for allowing them elbow room: their poet cries perhaps, a pox go with you; but care not you for that; there's no musick without frets.

Dekker, Guls Hornebooke, (1609), p. 31.
Jugglers, and dancers, anticks, mummers, mimicks. Milton, S. A.

Like poor Andrew I advance,
False mimick of my master's dance:
Around the cord awhile I sprawl,
And thence, though slow, in earnest fall. Prior.

2. A mean or servile imitator.

Cunning is only the mimick of discretion; and may pass upon weak men, in the same manner as vivacity is often mistaken for wit, and gravity for wisdom. Addison, Spect. No. 225.

MI'MICK. adj. [mimicus, Latin.] Imitative.

In reason's absence mimick Fancy wakes
To imitate her; but, misjoining shapes,
Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams. Milton, P. L.

The busy head with mimick art runs o'er
The scenes and actions of the day before. Swift.

To MI'MICK. v. a. [from the noun.] To imitate as a buffoon; to ridicule by a burlesque imitation.

Morpheus express'd
The shape of man, and imitated best;
The walk, the words, the gesture, could supply,
The habit mimick, and the mien belye. Dryden.
Who wou'd it care some happy fiction frame;
So mimicks truth, it looks the very same. Granville.

MI'MICKRY. n. s. [from mimick.] Burlesque imitation.

By an excellent faculty in mimickry, my correspondent tells me he can assume my air, and give my taciturnity a slyness which diverts more than any thing I could say. Spectator.

MIMO'GRAPHER.† n. s. [minus and γράφω.] A writer of farces.

Some are poetsasters or mimographers.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 331.

MI'NACER.* n. s. A threatener. See MINACIOUS.

MINACIOUS.† adj. [minax, Latin.] Full of threats.

Whether the face of heaven smile upon us with a cheerful bright azure, or look upon us with a more sad and minacious countenance, dark pitchy clouds being charged with thunder and lightning to let fly against the earth.

More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660), p. 69.
MINA'CITY. n. s. [from minax, Latin.] Disposition to use threats.

MI'NACY.* n. s. [minacie, Lat.] Menace; threat. Not now in use.

Drummond, Trav. (Lett. dat. 1747), p. 211.
The mosques and other buildings of the Arabians are rounded into domes, and covered roofs, with now and then a slender square minaret terminating in a ball or pine-apple.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.
MI'NATORILY.* adv. [from minatory.]

With threats.

His works being prohibited so strictly and minatorily, that bishops might not read them.
Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 103.

MI'NATORY.† adj. [minor, Latin.] Threatening.

The king made a statute minatory and minatory, towards justices of peace, that they should duly execute their office, inviting complaints against them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

There is another way of taking the words as plainly minatory or threatening.

Pococke on Hosea, p. 209.

To MINCE.† v. a. [contracted, as it seems, from minish; or from mincer, Fr.; mince, French, small. Dr. Johnson. — Icel. minka, diminish, à minna, minus. Scenarius.]

1. To cut into very small parts.
She saw Pyrrhus making malicious sport,
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs. Shakespeare.

With a good chopping-knife mince the two capons as small as ordinary minced meat. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

What means the service of the church so imperfectly, and by halves, read over? What makes them mince and mangle that in their practice, which they could swallow whole in their subscription? South, Serm.

Revive the wits;
But murder first, and mince them all to bits. Pope, Dunciad.

2. To mention any thing scrupulously, by a little at a time; to palliate; to extenuate.

I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say I love you. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Shakespeare, Othello.

These gifts,
Saving your mincing, the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

I'll try to force you to your duty:
For so it is, howe'er you mince it,
Ere we part, I shall evince it. Hudibras.

Siren; now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase.
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden, Span. Friar.

If, to mince his meaning, I had either omitted some part of what he said, or taken from the strength of his expression, I certainly had wronged him. Dryden.

These, seeing no where water enough to effect a general deluge, were forced to mince the matter, and make only a partial one of it, restraining it to Asia. Woodward.

3. To speak with affected softness; to 'clip the words.

Behold you simpering dame,
Whose face between her forks presageth snow;
That minces virtue, and does shake the head
To hear of pleasure's name. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To MINCE.† v. n.

1. To walk nicely by short steps; to act with appearance of scrupulousness and delicacy; to affect nicety.

Fast by her side did sit the bold Sansloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy. Spenser, F. Q.

I'll turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks, and wanton eyes, walking, and mincing [in the margin, tripping nicely] as they go. Isaiah, iii. 16.

A harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye. Pope, Dunciad.

2. To speak small and imperfectly.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are as much distinguished from each other as the mincing lady prioress and the broad speaking wife of Bath. Dryden, Fab.

MINCE-PIE.* } n. s. A pie made of meat
MINCED-PIE. } minced or cut into very small pieces, with other ingredients; called also a Christmas-pie, as being mostly in use about the time of Christmas.

Your petitioner is remarkable in his county for having dared to treat Sir P. P. a cursed sequester, and three members of the assembly of divines, with brawn and minced-pies upon New Year's day. Spectator, No. 629.

We have never been witnesses of animosities excited by the use of mince-pies and plumb-porridge. Johnson, Life of Butler.

MI'NCINGLY.† adv. [from mince.]

1. In small parts; not fully.

Justice requireth nothing mincingly, but all with pressed and heaped, and even over-enlarged, measure. Hooker.

2. Affectedly.

Caraffa, in his theses, more mincingly terming their now pope, Paul the fifth, vice-deus, vice-god. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, p. 278.

MIND.† n. s. [gemýnb, Saxon; minde, Danish; from the Goth. ga-munan, to remember.]

1. The intelligent power.

I am a very foolish, fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding: which word, mind, we use also for opinion; as, I am of this or that mind: and sometimes for men's conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind: sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake: sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse: oftentimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences: but as it is used in the proper signification, including both the understanding agent and passible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object: or more at large thus; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be dissevered as eternal from that which is mortal. Raleigh.

I thought th' eternal Mind
Had made us masters. Dryden.

2. Intellectual capacity.

We say that learning's endless, and blame fate
For not allowing life a longer date,
He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
He found them not so large as was his mind.

Cowley.

3. Liking; choice; inclination; propensity; affection.

Our question is, Whether all be sin which is done without direction by Scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time amiss, by following their own minds without asking counsel of God. Hooker.

We will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our mind.

Shakespeare.

Being so hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind.

Shakespeare.

I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it.

Shakespeare.

Be of the same mind one towards another.

Rom. xii. 16.

Hast thou a wife after thy mind? forsake her not.

Ecclesi.

They had a mind to French Britain; but they have let fall their bit.

Bacon, War with Spain.

Sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let the occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world.

Milton, P. L.

Waller coasted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged.

Clarendon.

He had a great mind to do it.

Clarendon.

All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms.

Tillotson, Sermon.

Suppose that after eight years' peace he hath a mind to infringe any of his treaties, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make?

Addison.

4. Quality; disposition. Not usual.

These trees receiving grafts of other kind,
Or thence transplanted, change their savage mind.

Dryden, Georg. ii. 71.

Of vegetable woods are various kinds,
And the same species are of several minds.

Dryden, Georg. ii. 120.

5. Thoughts; sentiments.

The ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind exprest,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest.

Dryden.

6. Opinion.

The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you, it shook.

Shakespeare.

These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite space. Locke.

The gods permitting traitors to succeed
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind.

Granville.

7. Memory; remembrance.

"In all the proofs Johnson gives, a preposition is prefixed; in mind, to mind, out of mind. I question much if in English it is used, as with us." Dr. Jamieson. That is, in Scotland, without the preposition. But it appears to have been so used in old English; "As the bokes maken minde," i. e. remembrance. Gower. Conf. Am. See Tyrwhitt's Gloss. in V. MIND. The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will therein set
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton, P. L.
These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.
The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path disus'd was out of mind.

Dryden.

They will put him in mind of his own waking thoughts, ere these dreams had as yet made their impressions on his fancy. Atterbury, Sermon.

A wholesome law, time out of mind;
Had been confirm'd by fate's decree. Swift.

To MIND.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark; to attend.

His mournful plight is swallow'd up unawares,
Forgetful of his own that minds another's cares.

Spenser, F. Q.

Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoins,
That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou me!

Milton, P. L.

If, in the raving of a frantic muse,
And *mind*ing more his verses than his way,
Any of these should drop into a well. Roscommon.
Cease to request me; let us mind our way;
Another song requires another day. Dryden.

He is daily called upon by the word, the ministers and inward suggestions of the Holy Spirit, to attend to those prospects, and mind the things that belong to his peace. Rogers.

2. To put in mind; to remind.

Let me be punish'd, that have *mind*ed you
Of what you should forget.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

I desire to mind those persons of St. Austin.

Burnet.

This minds me of a cobbling colonel.

L'Estrange.

I shall only mind him, that the contrary supposition, if it could be proved, is of little use. Locke.

3. To intend; to mean. Not in use.

As for me, be sure I mind no harme
To thy grave person. Chapman, Il. 24.

To MIND.† v. n. To incline; to be disposed.

When one of them mindeth to go into rebellion,
he will convey away all his lordships to feeoffees in trust.

Belike she minds to play the Amazon.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

MI'NDED. adj. [from mind.]

1. Disposed; inclined; affected.

We come to know

How you stand *mind*ed in the weighty difference Between the king and you. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Whose fellowship therefore unmeet for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike,
And be so *mind*ed still. Milton, P. L.

If men were *mind*ed to live virtuously, to believe a God would be no hindrance to any such design, but very much for its advancement.

Tillotson.

Pyrrhus is nobly *mind*ed; and I fain
Would live to thank him. Philips.

2. Minded is used in compounds: as, high-minded.

Sherwood.

I am not high-minded, I have no proud looks.

Psalms.

We say likewise low-minded.
MI'NDFUL. adj. [mind and full.] Attentive; heedful; having memory.

I acknowledge the usefulness of your directions, and I promise you to be mindful of your admonitions. Hammond.

MI'NDFULLY. adv. [from mindful.] Attentively; heedfully.MI'NDFULNESS.† n. s. [from mindful.] Attention; regard.

Sherwood.

MI'NDLESS. adj. [from mind.]

1. Inattentive; regardless.

Cursed Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forget now thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.

Shakespeare.

As the strong eagle in the silent wood.
Mindless of warlike rage, and hostile care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood. Prior.

2. Not endued with a mind; having no intellectual powers.

God first made angels, bodiless, pure minds;
Then other things which mindless bodies be,
Last he made man. Davies.

3. Stupid; unthinking.

Pronounce thee a gross lowt, a mindless slave,
Or else a hovering temporizer.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

MIND-STRIKEN. adj. [mind and stricken.] Moved; affected in his mind.

He had been so mind-stricken by the beauty of virtue in that noble king, though not born his subject, he ever professed himself his servant. Sidney.

MINE. pronoun possessive. [myñ, Saxon; mein, German; mien, French; meus, Latin. It was anciently the practice to use my before a consonant, and mine before a vowel; which euphony still requires to be observed. Mine is always used when the substantive precedes: as, this is my cat; this cat is mine.] Belonging to me.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears,
Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.

Shakespeare.

A friend of mine is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him. St. Luke.

That palm is mine. Dryden.

MINE. n. s. [mine, French; mwyn, or mwyn, Welsh, from maen, lapis, in the plural meini.]

1. A place or cavern in the earth, which contains metals or minerals.

Though straighter bounds your fortune did confine,

In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Waller.

A workman, to avoid idleness, worked in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which was little esteemed. Boyle.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem, which he knows not what to make of. Boyle.

The heedless mine-man aims only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible. Boyle.

2. A cavern dug under any fortification that it may sink for want of support; or, in modern war, that powder may be lodged in it, which being fired at a proper time, whatever is over it may be blown up and destroyed.

By what eclipse shall that sun be defac'd?
What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower?
What sacrifice hath such a saint disgrac'd? Sidney.

Build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down, and fill up the mines that you have digg'd. Whitgift.

Others to a city strong
Lay siege, encamp'd; by battery, scale, and mine, Assaulting. Milton, P. L.

To MINE.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dig mines or burrows; to form any hollows under ground.

The ranging stork in stately beeches dwells;
The climbing goats on hills securely feed;
The mining conies shroud in rocky cels. Wotton, Rem. p. 386.

Of this various matter the terrestrial globe consists from its surface to the greatest depth we ever dig or mine. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. To practise secret means of injury.

Mining fraud shall find no way to creep
Into their fenced ears with grave advice. Sackville, Gorboduc.

To MINE.† v. a. To sap; to ruin by mines; to destroy by slow degrees, or secret means.

If an housebande man wiste in what hour the thief would come, sotheli he schulde wake, and not suffre his house to be mynded. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xii.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth; but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.

MI'NER. n. s. [mineur, Fr.; from mine.]

1. One that digs for metals.

By me kings' palaces are push'd to ground,
And miners crush'd beneath their mines are found. Dryden.

2. One who makes military mines.

As the bombardier levels his mischief at cities,
the miner busies himself in ruining private houses. Tatler.

MI'NERAL. n. s. [minérale, Lat.] Fossile body; matter dug out of mines. All metals are minerals, but all minerals are not metals. Minerals in the restrained sense are bodies that may be melted, but not malleated.

She did confess, she had

For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and ling'ring
By inches waste you. Shakespeare, Cymb.

The minerals of the kingdom, of lead, iron, copper, and tin, are of great value. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton, P. L.

Minerals: nitre with vitriol; common salt with alum; and sulphur with vitriol. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

MINERAL. adj. Consisting of fossile bodies.

By experience upon bodies in any mine, a man may conjecture at the metallick or mineral ingredients of any mass found there. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

MI'NERALIST. n. s. [from mineral.] One skilled or employed in minerals.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem or a mineral, which he knows not what to make of till he shews it a jeweller or a mineralist. Boyle.

The metals and minerals which are lodged in the perpendicular intervals do still grow, to speak in the mineralist's phrase, or receive additional increase. Woodward.

MINERALOGIST. n. s. [mineralogie, Fr. from mineral, and λόγος.] One who discourses on minerals.

Many authors deny it, and the exactest mineralogists have rejected it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MINERALOGY. n. s. [from mineral and λόγος.] The doctrine of minerals.

MI'NEVER.† n. s. [the orthography seems to be meniver. See MENIVER. Some write it miniver.] The skin of the meniver; white fur with specks of black. To win some patched shreds of minivere. Ep. Hall, Sat. iv. 2.

To MING.* v. a. [mengan, mynzan, Sax.]

1. To mingle; to mix. Still a provincial expression. Chaucer uses meng in this sense.

2. To remind; to mention; to call to remembrance. A northern word, according to Grose; and certainly used, in this sense, by bishop Hall.

Could never man work thee a worser shame
Than once to minge thy father's odious name? Ep. Hall, Sat. B. iv. 8. 2.

To MI'NGLE.† v. a. [mengan, Sax. mengen, Germ. menga, Su. Goth. from maengd, a multitude. Wicliffe and Chaucer use meng for mingle.]

1. To mix; to join; to compound; to unite with something so as to make one mass.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and with subtle heart,
Concocted and adusted, they reduc'd
To blackest grain. Milton, P. L.

Lament with me! with me your sorrows join,
And minge your united tears with mine! Walsh.
Our sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, we are ready to mingle with ourselves, and cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts, Logick.

2. To contaminate; to make of dissimilar parts.

To confound the race
Of mankind in one root, and Earth with Hell
To minge and involve. Milton, P. L.
The best of us appear contented with a mingled, imperfect virtue. Rogers, Sermon.

3. To confuse.

There mingle broils.

Milton, P. L.

To MI'NGLE. v. n. To be mixed; to be united with.

Ourself will mingle with society,

And play the humble host. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Alcimus had defiled himself wilfully in the times of their mingling with the Gentiles. 2 Mac. xiv. 13.

Nor priests, nor statesmen,

Could have completed such an ill as that,

If women had not mingled in the mischief. Rowe.

Her, when she saw her sister nymphs, suppress'd
Her rising fears, and mingled with the rest. Addison.

MI'NGLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Mixture; medley; confused mass.

Trumpeters,

With brazen din blast you the city's ear,

Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shakespeare.

Neither can I defend my Spanish Friar; though the comical parts are diverting, and the serious moving, yet they are of an unnatural mingle. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

MINGLE-MANGLE.* n. s. A medley; a hotch-potch.

He cannot love the Lord Jesus with his heart, which lendeth one ear to his apostles, and another to false apostles, which can brook to see a mingle-mangle of religion and superstition, ministers and massing priests, light and darkness, truth and error, traditions and scriptures. Hooker, Sermon, 1. On St. Jude.

Publishing some botcherly mingle-mangle of collections out of others. Hartlib, Ref. of Schools, (1642), p. 30.

MI'NGLEDLY.* adv. [from the part. mingled.] Here and there; confusedly. Barret, in V. Here.

MI'NGLER.† n. s. [from the verb.] He who mingles.

Such brewers, and minglers of this wine.

Harmer, Tr. of Beza, (1587), p. 230.

MI'NIARD.* adj. Soft; dainty. See MIGNIARD.

To MI'NIARDIZE.* v. a. [mignardiser, French.] To render soft, delicate, or dainty.

Choice of words, and softness of pronunciation, proceeding from such wanton spirits that did miniardize and make the language more dainty and feminine. Howell, Lett. iv. 19.

To MI'NIATE.* v. a. [miniare, Ital. from minium.] To paint or tinge with vermilion.]

The initials are written or flourished in red and blue, and all the capitals in the body of the text are miniated with a pen. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. p. v.

MI'NIATURE.† n. s. [miniature, French; from minium, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Italian miniatura, from miniare; Lat. miniatus, from minium. See To MINIATE.]

1. Painting by powders mixed with gum and water. A mode of painting almost appropriated to small figures.

2. Representation in a small compass; representation less than the reality.

The water, with twenty bubbles, not content to have the picture of their face in large, would in each of these bubbles set forth the miniature of them. Sidney.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature: in order to keep our posterity from dwindling, we have instituted a tall club. Addison, Guardian.

The hidden ways
Of nature would'st thou know? how first she frames

All things in miniature? thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels: lo!
Strange forms arise, in each a little plant
Unfolds its boughs: observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow seeds describ'd. Philips.

3. Red letter: rubrick distinction.

If the names of our saints are distinguished with miniature, her's [the blessed Virgin's] ought to shine in gold. Hicks, Sermon. ii. 72.

MIN'NIKIN.† adj. Small; diminutive. Used in slight contempt. Dr. Johnson. — In this case, the word may be from the old Goth. min, little. But our old lexicography refers minikin to elegant. Bar-ret's Alv. 1580. And, under elegant, combines "neat, pretty, minikin, trim, handsome, &c." It thus seems to have been adopted from the Fr. mignon.

Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd,
Thy sheep be in the corn;
And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,
Thy sheep shall take no harm. Shaksp. K. Lear.

MIN'NIKIN.† n. s.

1. A darling; a favourite. Cotgrave.
Minnekin, now minx, is a nice trifling girl;
minnock is apparently a word of contempt.
Johnson, Note on Mids. N. Dream.

2. A small sort of pins.

MIN'NIM.† n. s. [from minimus, Lat.]

1. A small being; a dwarf.

Not all

Minims of nature; some of serpent-kind,
Wonderous in length, and corpulence, involv'd
Their snaky folds, and added wings. Milt. P. L.

2. This word is applied, in the northern counties, to a small sort of fish, which they pronounce mennim. See MINNOW.

3. One of an order of friars, called minimi, or the least of all, from affected humility.

4. Anciently, the shortest note in music;
now, equal to two crotchets. Dr. Johnson gives minim for this, and for the typographical sense. But minim is correct; though minum is not a false or unexisting word, as Mr. Mason insinuates in his hasty correction of Dr.
Johnson. Cotgrave writes it minum.

He fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion: rests me his minim
rest, one, two, and the third in your bosom.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

5. A little song or poem.

Pardon thy shepherd, mongst so many lays
As he hath sung of thee in all his days
To make one minime of thy poore handmayd.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 28.

6. A small sort of printing letter.

MIN'NIMENT.* n. s. [from minuiment.]

1. Miniments are the evidences or writings, whereby a man is enabled to defend the title of his estate. This word miniment includes all manner of evidences. Cowel.

2. Proof; testimony.

By chance he certain miniments forth drew,
Which yet with him as relics did abide,
Of all the bounty which Belphebe threw
On him, whilst goodly grace she did him shew.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 6.

MINIMUM.* n. s. [Latin.] The smallest quantity possible. See MAXIMUM.

MINIMUS. n. s. [Latin.] A being of the least size.

Get you gone, you dwarf, I

You minimus of hindering knot grass made;

You bead, you acorn. Shakespeare.

MIN'NION.† n. s. [mignon, French; Goth.
minna; Germ. minnen, to love. Our word was formerly written both mignon, and mignion.] A favourite; a darling;
a low dependant; one who pleases rather than benefits. A word of contempt, or of slight and familiar kindness.

Minion, said she: indeed I was a pretty one in those days;

I see a number of lads that love you. Sidney.

They were made great courtiers, and in the way of minions when advancement, the most mortal offence to envy, stirred up their former friend to overthrow them. Sidney.

One, who had been a special minion of Andro-manas, hated us for having dispossessed him of her heart. Sidney.

Fast by her side did sit the bold Sansloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion.

Spenser, F. Q.

Go rate thy minions;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

His company must do his minions grace,
Whilst I at home starve for a merry look.

Shakespeare.

Edward sent one army into Ireland; not for conquest, but to guard the person of his minion Piers Gaveston. Davies.

The ruling corruption of his mind, the peculiar minion of his affections, was worldliness.

South, Sermon. viii. 167.

If a man should launch into the history of human nature, we should find the very minions of princes linked in conspiracies against their master.

L'Estrange.

The drowsy tyrant by his minions led,
To regal rage devotes some patriot's head. Swift.

MIN'NION.* adj. [mignon, Fr.] Trim; feat;
dainty; fine; elegant; also, pleasing;
gentle. Huloet, and Cotgrave.

On his minion harpe full well playe he can.

Pleasaunte, Patkenwaye, &c. s. d. sign. C. liij.

MIN'NION.* n. s. [minium, Latin.] Ver-million.

Let them paint their faces with minion and ceruse. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 482.

MIN'NIONING.* n. s. [from minion.] Kind treatment.

Sooner hard steel will melt with southern winds,
Than woman vow'd to blushless impudence,
With sweet behaviour and soft minioning,
Will turn from that where appetite is fixed.

Marston, Malcontent.

MIN'NIONLIKE.* } adv. [minion and like.]
MIN'NIONLY. } Finely; daintily; affectedly. Not in use. Sherwood.

Hitherto will our sparkful youth laugh at their great grandfathers' English, who had more care to do well, than to speak minionlike.

Camden, Rem. Languages.

MIN'NIONSHIP.* n. s. [from minion.] State of a favourite. Not in use.

The favourite Luines strengtheneth himself more and more in his minionship: but he is much murmured at, in regard the access of suitors to him is so difficult. Howell, Lett. i. i. 17.

MIN'NIOUS. adj. [from minium, Lat.] Of the colour of red led or vermilion.

Some conceive, that the Red Sea receiveth a red and minious tincture from springs that fall into it. Brown.

To MIN'NISH.† v. a. [from diminish; Lat.
minuo, from minus; old Fr. menuiser, to diminish.] To lessen: to lop; to impair.

Ye shall not minish aught from your bricks of your daily task. Ezod. v. 19.

They are minished and brought low through oppression. Psalms. cvii. 39.

Another law was to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipp, minished, or impaired coins of silver, not to be current in payments. Bacon, Hen. VII.

MIN'ISTER. n. s. [minister, Latin; ministre, French.]

1. An agent; one who is employed to any end; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.

You, whom virtue hath made the princess of felicity, be not the minister of ruin. Sidney.

Rumble thy belly full; spit fire, spout rain,
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters;
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness:
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pericious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Th' infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim. Dryden, Theod. and Hon.

Other spirits govern'd by the will,
Shoot through their tracts, and standant muscles fill;

This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Restrains or sends his ministers abroad. Blackmore.

2. One who is employed in the administration of government.

Kings must be answerable to God, but the ministers to kings, whose eyes, ears, and hands they are, must be answerable to God and man.

Bacon.

3. One who serves at the altar; one who performs sacerdotal functions.

Epaphras, a faithful minister of Christ.

1 Col. i. 7.

The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting forth edicts against dancing and gaming. Addison.

The ministers of the gospel are especially required to shine as lights in the world, because the distinction of their station renders their conduct more observable; and the presumption of their knowledge, and the dignity of their office, gives a peculiar force and authority to their example.

Rogers.

Calidus contents himself with thinking, that he never was a friend to heretics and infidels; that he has always been civil to the minister of his parish, and very often given something to the charity-schools. Lau.

4. A delegate; an official.

If wrongfully

Let God revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

5. An agent from a foreign power without the dignity of an ambassador.

To MIN'ISTER. v. a. [ministro, Lat.] To give; to supply; to afford.

All the customs of the Irish would minister occasions of a most ample discourse of the original and antiquity of that people. Spenser on Ireland.

Now he that ministereth seed to the sower, both minister bread for your food and multiply your seed sown. 2 Cor. ix.

The wounded patient bears
The artist's hand that ministers the cure.

Orway, Orphan.

To MIN'ISTER. v. n.

1. To attend; to serve in any office.

At table Eve

Minister'd naked, and their flowing cups,
With pleasant liquors crown'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To give medicines.

Can'st thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain?

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To give supplies of things needful; to give assistance; to contribute; to afford. Others ministered unto him of their substance.

Luke.

He who has a soul wholly void of gratitude, should set his soul to learn of his body; for all the parts of that minister to one another. South.

There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out than the existence of a God; yet he that shall content himself with things as they minister to our pleasures and passions, and not make enquiry a little farther into their causes and ends, may live long without any notion of such a being. Locke.

Those good men, who take such pleasure in relieving the miserable for Christ's sake, would not have been less forward to minister unto Christ himself. Atterbury.

Fasting is not absolutely good, but relatively, and as it ministers to other virtues.

Smalridge, Sermon.

4. To attend on the surface of God.

Whether prophesy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering. Rom. xii. 7.

MINISTERIAL.† adj. [from minister.]

1. Attendant; acting at command.

Understanding is in a man; courage and vivacity in the lion; service, and ministerial officiousness, in the ox. Brown.

From essences unseen, celestial names,
Enlightening spirits, and ministerial flames,
Lift we our reason to that sovereign cause,
Who bless'd the whole with life. Prior.

2. Acting under superiour authority.

For the ministerial officers in court there must be an eye unto them. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth, and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fame that make this verse.

Donne, Poems, p. 167.

Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial cause of moral effects; as it recalls us from the world, and gives a serious turn to our thoughts.

Rogers, Serm.

3. Sacerdotal; belonging to the ecclesiastics or their office.

These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom plainly allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker.

4. Pertaining to ministers of state, or persons in subordinate authority.

Very solid and very brilliant talents distinguish the ministerial benches. Burke.

The whole ministerial cant is quickly got by heart. Burke.

MINISTERIALLY. adv. In a ministerial manner.

Supremacy of office, by mutual agreement and voluntary economy, belongs to the father; while the son, out of voluntary condescension, submits to act ministerially, or in capacity of mediator.

Waterland.

MINISTRY. n. s. [ministerium, Latin.] Office; service. This word is now contracted to ministry, but used by Milton as four syllables.

They that will have their chamber filled with a good scent, make some odoriferous water be blown about by their servants' mouths that are dextrous in that ministry. Digby.

This high temple to frequent
With ministries due, and solemn rites.
Milton, P. L.

MINISTRAL. adj. [from minister.] Pertaining to a minister.

MINISTRANT. adj. [from minister.] Attendant; acting at command. Pope accents it, not according to analogy, on the second syllable.

Him thrones, and powers,
Princedoms, and dominations ministrant,
Accompany'd to heaven-gate. Milton, P. L.
Ministrant to their queen with busy care,
Four faithful handmaids the soft rites prepare.

Pope.

MINISTRATION.† n. s. [old French ministration; from ministro, Latin.]

1. Agency; intervention; office of an agent delegated or commissioned by another.

God made him the instrument of his providence to me, as he hath made his own land to him, with this difference, that God, by his ministration to me, intends to do him a favour.

Bp. Taylor, Living Holy.

Though sometimes effected by the immediate fiat of the divine will, yet I think they are most ordinarily done by the ministration of angels.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Service; office; ecclesiastical function.

The profession of a clergyman is an holy profession, because it is a ministration in holy things, an attendance at the altar. Low.

If the present ministration be more glorious than the former the minister is more holy.

Atterbury.

MINISTRESS.* n. s. [from minister.] She who supplies or dispenses.

This was beauty sent from heaven,
The lovely ministress of truth and good
In this dark world. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 1.

MINISTRY. n. s. [contracted from ministry; ministerium, Latin.]

1. Office; service.

So far is an indistinction of all persons, and by consequence, an anarchy of all things, so far from being agreeable to the will of God, declared in his great household, the world, and especially in all the ministries of his proper household the church, that there was never yet any time, I believe, since it was a number, when some of its members were not more sacred than others. Spratt, Serm.

2. Office of one set apart to preach; ecclesiastical function.

Their ministry perform'd, and race well run,
Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die. Milton, P. L.

Saint Paul was miraculously called to the ministry of the gospel, and had the whole doctrine of the gospel from God by immediate revelation; and was appointed the apostle of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.

3. Agency; interposition.

The natural world he made after a miraculous manner; but directs the affairs of it ever since by standing rules, and the ordinary ministry of second causes. Atterbury.

To all but thee in fits he seem'd to go,
And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow. Parnell.
The poets introduced the ministry of the gods, and taught the separate existence of human souls. Bentley.

4. Business.

He safe from loud alarms,
Abhor'd the wicked ministry of arms. Dryden, Æn.

5. Persons employed in the publick affairs of a state.

I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.

MINIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Red lead.

Melt lead in a broad earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcined into a grey powder; this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow; in this state it is used in painting, and is called masticot or massicot; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead: among the ancients minium was the name for cinnabar: the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleansing and healing old ulcers. Hill, Mat. Med.

MINNEKIN.* n. s. See MINIKIN.

MINNOCK.† n. s. Of this word I know not the precise meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and minx are originally the same word. Dr. Johnson.— This word is justly supposed by Mr. Malone to be an error of the press; and that minick is the true word. One of the old quarto editions of the comedy reads minnick; another minnock; and the folio mimnick. A player was called a mimick, in the poet's time. See MIMICK.

An ass's now! I fixed on his head;
Anon, his Thistle must be answered,
And forth my minnock comes. Shakspeare.

MINNOW.† n. s. [menuise, small fish, Fr. from menu, small; min, Goth. small; and Dr. Jamieson says, he has been informed that the Gaelick name of the fish, meanan, is traced to meanle, little.] A very small fish; a pink. See the second sense of MINIM.

Here you this Triton of the minnows?

Shakspeare, Coriol.

The minnow, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky colour, his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish: he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the spring they make excellent minnow tansies; for being washed well in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primroses, and tansy. Walton, Angler.

The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of minnow-fishing. Walton, Angler.

MINOR.† adj. [Latin.]

1. Petty; inconsiderable.

If there are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet is it not safe to condemn inferior falsities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Inferiour.

He wishes to take on board the eight secondaries, or minor canons, of his college.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 242.

3. Less; smaller.

They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest. Clarendon.
The difference of a third part in so large and collective an account is not strange, if we consider how differently they are set in minor and less mistakable numbers. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MINOR.† n. s.

1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

King Richard the Second, the first ten years of his reign, was a minor. Davies on Ireland.

He and his muse might be minors, but the liberties are full grown. Collier, View of the Stage.

Long as the year's dull circle seems to run, When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.
The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Swift.

A minor or infant cannot be said to be contumacious, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism.

The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.

He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest, where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. Arbutnot.

3. A Franciscan friar. [fratres minores, Lat. fratres, Ital.] A name adopted by the Franciscans to express their extraordinary humility. Minorite is another English term for these persons.

To MINORATE,† v. a. [from minor, Latin.] To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the example from Glanville. The use of the word by others prior to, or contemporary with, Glanville, and those of no mean fame, may perhaps be allowed to establish it.

I could not in any charity believe, that he, who had been so often vice-chancellor, would any way seem to betray or minorate the authority and power of that place.

Hill, Lett. to Bp. Laud, (1631), Abp. Laud's Rem. p. 48.
Forget not how assuafication into a thing minorates the passion from it.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 10.
Imagination puts a double fallacy upon actual men; first, it makes them undervalue themselves, and minorate their own abilities; and then it makes them overvalue the objects of fear, and make them far greater than they are.

Smith on Old Age, p. 155.
This it doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minorates the object.

Glanville, Scepsis.
MINORATION,† n. s. [from minorate.] The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not in use.

His good pleasure was, by this willing minoration and exanination of himself, to shew his greater condescension.

Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615), sign. B. 7.
Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight, as is most evident in the loadstone, whose efficiencies are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

We hope the mercies of God will consider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.

MINORITE,* n. s. A Franciscan friar. See the third sense of MINOR.
The attendant Minorites, their chaplains. Milton, Areopagitica.

MINORITY, n. s. [minorité, Fr. from minor, Lat.]

1. The state of being under age.
I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakespeare.

He is young, and his minority is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shakspr.

These changes in religion should be staid, until the king were of years to govern by himself; this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or no. Hayward, Edw. VI.

Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon, Hen. VII.

If there be evidence, that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet, The. of the Earth.

Their counsels are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.

2. The state of being less.

From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or smallness in the exclusion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. The smaller number: as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.

MINOTAUR. n. s. [minotaure, French; minos and taurus.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Dædalus's labyrinth.

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth, There minotaurs, and ugly treasons lurk. Shakspr.

MINSTER,† n. s. [minstrepe, Saxon.] A monastery: an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.

Scynt Albone
Of that mynstre leyde the first stone. Lydgate, Life of St. Alban.

MINSTREL,† n. s. [The word minstrel does not appear to have been in use here before the Norman conquest; but at what particular period it was taken up I have not discovered, nor yet whether it was coined in England or France: though I am inclined to think the latter, where this character was called menestrel, menestrier, &c. which was Latinized by the monks, &c. ministrellus, ministrallus, menesterellus, &c. Vid. Gloss. Du Cange, et Suppl. Menage derives the French words from ministerialis or ministeriarius, barbarous Latin terms, used in the middle ages to express a workman or artificer, still called in Languedoc ministrat; as if these men were styled artificers or performers by way of excellence. But the origin of the name is given perhaps more truly by Du Cange: "Ministelli — quos vulgò menestreux vel menestriers appellamus, quòd minoribus aulæ ministris accenserentur." Accordingly, he says, the word minister is sometimes used for ministrallus. Although one of these I take to be the true etymology, yet Junius's conjecture deserves mention, who supposes the word minstrel to be of English origin, and deduces it from our old English or Saxon name for a cathedral, minster. Bp. Percy, Rel. of Anc. Poetry, Ess. on the Minstrels, Note A. Another writer thus subscribes to the conjecture of Junius. Minstrel was indiscriminately applied to the harper, the fiddler, or the player on the bagpipe. It appears to be derived from minster; and those, called minstrels, were employed in the public worship of the cathedrals as singers; in the same way the Welsh called musicians cler, as employed in the same manner. V. Junius in voce. Those minstrels, during the middle ages, united the arts of poetry, instrumental and vocal music, their songs being always accompanied with the harp. They seem to have been the genuine successors of the ancient bards. Callander, Two Anc. Scot. Poems, p. 118.] A musician; one who plays upon instruments; a singer.

Hark how the minstrels gin to shrill aloud Their merry musick that resounds from far, The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud, That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.

Whether any minstrelles, or any other persons, doe use to sing any songs or ditties that be vile and uncleane. Q. Elizabeth's Injunct. & Articles, (1559), Art. 54.

I will give you the minstrel.
— Then I will give you the serving creature. Shakespeare.

I to the vulgar am become a jest;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sandys, Paraph.

Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the minstrels, and the people making a noise. St. Matt. ix. 23.

These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country show;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet-cheeks and bloated faces known. Dryden.

Often our seers and poets have confess'd,
That musick's force can tame the furious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.

MINISTRELSY. n. s. [from minstrel.]

1. Musick; instrumental harmony.

Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the world applaud his minstrelsy. Davies.
That loving wretch that swears,
'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsy, the spheres. Donne.

I began, —
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelsy,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton, Comus.

2. A number of musicians.

Ministring spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such hath thou arm'd the minstrelsy of heav'n. Milton, P. L.

MINT. n. s. [minste, Saxon; menthe, Fr. mentha, Lat.] A plant,

Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gather'd mint,
A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.

MINT,† n. s. [moneta, Lat. mýnet, Sax. money; mynetarian, to coin.]

1. The place where money is coined.
What is a person's name or face, that receives all his reputation from the mint, and would never have been known had there not been medals.

Addison on Merals.

2. Any place of invention.

A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shaksp.
As the miners of calumny are at work, a great number of curious inventions are issued out, which grow current among the party.

Addison, Freeholder.

To MINT.† v. a. [mýntecian, Saxon.]

1. To coin; to stamp money.

Another law was, to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped coins of silver not to be current in payments, without giving any remedy of weight; and so to set the mint on work, and to give way to new coins of silver which should be then minted.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To invent; to forge.

Look into the titles whereby they hold these new portions of the crown, and you will find them of such natures as may be easily minted.

Bacon, War with Spain.

3. To aim at; to wish for; to have a mind to. Used in the north of England. [zemyntian, zemynt, Sax.]

MIN'TAGE. n. s. [from mint.]

1. That which is coined or stamped.

[Its] pleasing poison

The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage
Character'd in the face. Milton, Comus.

2. The duty paid for coining. Ainsworth.

MIN'TER.† n. s. [from mint.]

1. A coiner.

Sterling ought to be of pure silver called leaf silver, the mintster must add other weight, if the silver be not pure. Camden.

2. An inventor.

They say — that Apollo, when he is an archer, is not president of the company. O generations of fictitious mintsters! who knows not that Apollo is a dirty errant? Gayton on D. Quiz. p. 242.

MIN'TMAN. n. s. [mint and man.] One skilled in coinage.

He that thinketh Spain to be some great overmatch for this estate, is no good mintman; but takes greatness of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value. Bacon, War with Spain.

MIN'TMASTER. n. s. [mint and master.]

1. One who presides in coinage.

That which is coined, as mintmasters confessed, is alloyed with about a twelfth part of copper. Boyle.

2. One who invents.

The great mintmasters of these terms, the schoolmen and metaphysicians, have wherewithal to content him. Locke.

MIN'NET. n. s. [menuct, French.] A stately regular dance.

The tender creature could not see his fate,
With whom she'd danc'd a minuet so late.

Stepney.

John has assurance to set up for a minuet dancer. Spectator.

MIN'UM.† n. s. See MINIM. This way of spelling minim is found in Cotgrave's dictionary. But it is a corruption.

1. [With printers.] A small sort of printing letter; called also minion.

2. [With musicians.] A note of slow time, two of which make a semibreve, as two crotchets make a minim; and two quavers a crotchet, and two semiquavers a quaver. Bailey.

MINUTE. adj. [minutus, Lat.] Small; little; slender; small in bulk; small in consequence.

Some minute philosophers pretend,
That with our days our pains and pleasures end. Denham.

Such an universal superintendency has the eye and hand of providence over all, even the most minute and inconsiderable things. South, Sermon.

Into small parts the wonderous stone divide,
Ten thousand of minutest size express
The same propension which the large possess. Blackmore.

The serum is attenuated by circulation, so as to pass into the minutest channels, and become fit nutriment for the body. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

In all divisions we should consider the larger and more immediate parts of the subject, and not divide it at once into the more minute and remote parts. Watts, Logic.

MINUTE.† n. s. [minutum, Latin.]

1. The sixtieth part of an hour.

This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with listening ravisht, could not find
His hour of speech a minute. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

2. Any small space of time.

They walk'd about me every minute while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart. Shakspere.

The speed of Gods
Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes
wing'd. Milton, P. L.

Gods! that the world should turn
On minutes and on moments. Denham, Sophy.

Experience does every minute prove the sad truth of this assertion. South, Sermon.

Tell her, that I some certainty may bring;
I go this minute to attend the king. Dryden, Aureng.

3. The first draught of any agreement in writing; this is common in the Scottish law: as, have you made a minute of that contract? Dr. Johnson. — Neither such practice, nor this sense of the word, are by any means confined to Scotland. Its meaning, here recorded, is so general as to signify "a short note of any thing done or to be done." Mason. — It signifies "a minute detail of things singly enumerated;" and is old in this usage, though neither Dr. Johnson nor Mr. Mason could find any example.

His garments were parted, and lots cast upon his inward coat; they gave him vinegar and gall to drink; they brake not a bone of him, but they pierced his side with a spear, looking upon him whom they had pierced; according to the prophecies of him, which were so clear and descended to minutes and circumstances of his passion, that there was nothing left by which they could doubt whether this were he or no who was to come into the world.

Bp. Taylor, Demo. of the Tr. of the Chr. Religion. (ed. Hurd,) p. 41.

Till then there is a very fit place and season for the exercise of the other part of the passion here, that of indignation, the last minute of my last particular. Hammond, Works, iv. 580.

To MIN'UTE. v. a. [minuter, French.] To set down in short hints.

I no sooner heard this critic talk of my works, but I minuted what he had said, and resolved to enlarge the plan of my speculations. Spectator.

MINUTE-BOOK. n. s. [minute and book.]

Book of short hints.

MINUTE-GLASS. n. s. [minute and glass.]

Glass of which the sand measures a minute.

MINUTE-HAND.* n. s. [minute and hand.] The hand that points to the minutes of a clock or watch.

We have no perception of the motion of the index or hour-hand of a clock; and yet this no perception, so many times repeated, becomes real perception, with respect to the minute-hand.

A. Baxter on the Soul, ii. 304.

MINUTE-JACK.* n. s. Another name for Jack of the Clockhouse; which see.

Cap and kneeslaves, vapours, and minute-jacks! Shakspere, Timon.

MINUTE-WATCH. n. s. [minute and watch.]

A watch in which minutes are more distinctly marked than in common watches which reckon by the hour.

Casting our eyes upon a minute-watch, we found that from the beginning of the pumping, about two minutes after the coals had been put in glowing, to the total disappearing of the fire, there had passed but three minutes. Boyle.

MINUTELY.* adj. [from minute.] Dr. Johnson, under the adverb minutely, has admitted that the following word in Shakspere seems to be an adjective; as hourly is both the adverb and adjective. The adjective before us has good authority, besides that of Shakspere.] Happening every minute.

Now minutely revolve upbraid his faith-breach;
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakspere, Macbeth.

His minutely dread and expectation, the dream that so haunts and hounds him.

Hammond, Works, iv. 580.

Those minutely preservations, whereby we are by God's gracious providence kept from danger.

W. H. Duty of Man, Sund. 7th § 10.

MINUTELY. adv. [from minute, the substantive.] Every minute; with very little time intervening.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? As if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity till they arise from so mortiferous a state. Hammond on Fund.

MINUTELY. adv. [from minute.] To a small point; exactly; to the least part; nicely.

In this posture of mind it was impossible for him to keep that slow pace, and observe minutely that order of ranging all he said, from which results an obvious perspicuity. Locke.

Change of night and day,
And of the seasons ever stealing round,
Minutely faithful. Thomson, Summer.

MINUTENESS.† n. s. [from minute.] Smallness; exility; inconsiderableness.

The animal spirit and insensible particles never fall under our senses by reason of their minuteness. Bentley.

Many other such minutenesses, abundance of variations beyond number.

Shuckford on the Creation, Pref. p. lxx.

MINUT'LE.* n. s. pl. [Latin.] The smallest particulars. A word of modern usage.

I will venture to transmit to you some anecdotes concerning him, [Dr. Johnson,] which fell under my own observation. The very minutiae of such a character must be interesting, and may be compared to the filings of diamonds.

Dr. Maxwell, in Boswell's Life of Johnson.

MINX† n. s. [contracted, I suppose, from minnock. Dr. Johnson. — That is, if there be such a word really existing as minnock. But in another place Dr. Johnson calls a minx, “a minneken.” Now minneken, or minikin is probably from mignon, darling; and from that word minx may have been formed, being at first a word of endearment. And thus Burton gives it, with a spelling which countenances this etymology: “Some pretty minkes.” Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 604.] A young, pert, wanton girl.

Lewd minx!

Come, go with me apart. Shakespeare.

Some torches bore, some links

Before the proud virago minx. Hudibras.

She, when but yet a tender minx, began

To hold the door, but now sets up for man. Dryden.

MINY* adj. [from mine.] Subterraneous; below the surface.

Bid Atlas, propping heaven, as poets feign,

His subterranean wonders spread! unveil

The miny caverns, blazing on the day,

Of Abyssinia's cloud-compelling cliffs.

Thomson, Autumn.

MIRABLE* adj. [mirabilis, Lat.] Wonderful; attracting admiration. Not in use.

Not Neoptolemus so mirable,
(On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st O
yes

Cries This is he) could promise to himself

A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

MIRACLE† n. s. [miracle, Saxon; miracle, Fr. miraculum, Latin.]

1. A wonder; something above human power.

Nothing almost sees miracles

But misery. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Virtuous and holy, chosen from above,

To work exceeding miracles on earth.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Be not offended, nature's miracle,

Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in attestation of some truth.

The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of demons, in that they were not made out of vain ostentation of power, and to raise unprofitable amazement; but for the real benefit and advantage of men by feeding the hungry, healing all sorts of diseases, ejecting of devils, and reviving the dead.

Bentley, Sermon.

3. Anciently, a spectacle or sort of dramatick entertainment, representing the lives of saints and the most eminent scriptural stories; known in England, according to Mr. Warton, for more than two centuries before the reign of Edward the Second. So, in France: “Miracle, pièce de notre ancien théâtre, qui, par suite, fut appelée mystère, parce qu'on y traitoit des sujets de religion.” Roquefort, Gloss. Lang. Rom. See also MYSTERY.

Therefore made I my visitations

To vigilies, and to processions, —

To plays of miracles, and mriages.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prolog.

We haunten no tavernes, ne hobeleh abouten;
Att markets and miracles, we medeley us never.

P. Pl. Creede.

To MIRACLE v. a. [from the noun.] To make wonderful. Not in use.

Who this should be,

Doth miracle itself, lov'd before me.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

To MIRACLE v. n. To work a miracle. Not in use.

Their power of miracling, their infallibility did but add countenance and strength to their declarative power.

Hales, (of Etton), Power of the Keys, (1677), p. 169.

MIRACLE-MONGER* n. s. A pretender to the performance of miracles; an impostor.

Direct the intention of these laws only against jugglers, miracle-mongers, or impostors.

Hallywell, Melampus, p. 52.

The two miracle-mongers had not been above a minute in the holy sepulcher, when the glimmering of the holy fire was seen, or imagined to appear, through some chinks of the door; and certainly Bedlam itself never saw such an unruly transport as was produced in the mob at this sight.

Maudrell, Trav. p. 96.

MIRACULOUS adj. [miraculeux, Fr. from miracle.] Done by miracle; produced by miracle; effected by power more than natural.

Arithmetical progression might easily demonstrate how fast mankind could increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from seventy unto six hundred thousand able men. Ralegh, Essays.

Restore this day, for thy great name,

Unto his ancient and miraculous right. Herbert.

Why this strength

Miraculous yet remaining in those locks?

His might continues in thee not for naught.

Milton, S. A.

At the first planting of the Christian religion, God was pleased to accompany it with a miraculous power.

Tillotson.

MIRACULOUSLY adv. [from miraculous.] By miracle; by power above that of nature.

It was the singular providence of God, to draw those northern heathen nations down into those Christian parts, where they might receive Christianity, and to mingle nations so remote miraculously to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him.

Spenser on Ireland.

Turnus was to be slain that very day; and Æneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in single combat, unless his hurt had been miraculously healed.

Dryden.

MIRACULOUSNESS† n. s. [from miraculous.] The state of being effected by miracle; superiority to natural power.

I understand not how any hasty conclusions, concerning the miraculousness of any strange event, can reconcile themselves to counsel and sobriety. Spenser on Prodiges, (1665), p. 242.

The miraculousness of such appearances will be no longer urged as an argument against their possibility. West, on the Resurrection, § 13.

MIRADOR n. s. [Spanish, from mirar, to look.] A balcony; a gallery whence ladies see shews.

Mean time thy valiant son, who had before

Gain'd fame, rode round to every mirador;

Beneath each lady's stand a stop he made,

And bowing, took th' applauses which they paid.

Dryden.

MIRE n. s. [moer, Dutch.] Mud; dirt at the bottom of water.

He his rider from her lofty steed

Would have cast down and trod in dirty mire. Spenser.

Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' the mire. Shakespeare, Timon.

I'm Ralph himself, your trusty squire,

Wh' has dragg'd i' your donship out o' th' mire. Hudibras.

I appeal to any man's reason whether it be not better that there should be a distinction of land and sea, than that all should be mire and water.

More, against Atheism.

Now plung'd in mire, now by sharp brambles torn, Roscommon.

To MIRE v. a. [from the noun.] To whelm in the mud; to soil with mud.

Why had I not, with charitable hand,

Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?

Who smeared thus, and mir'd with infamy,

I might have said no part of it is mire. Shakspeare.

MIRE n. s. [myr, Welsh; mýpa, Saxon; mier, Dutch.] An ant; a pismire.

MIRINESS n. s. [from miry.] Dirtiness; fulness of mire.

MIRK* adj. [myrk, Icel. moerk, Su. Goth. morck, Danish, dark, morcker, darkness; mpice, darkness, Saxon.] Dark; obscure. Used in the north of England.

The shadowe makith her [the moon's] bemes

merke. Chaucer, Rom. R. 5399.

Diggon, I praye thee, speak not so dirke;

Such myster saying me seemeth to-mirke. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

A shadow blacker than the mirkest night,

Inviron'd all the place with darkness sad.

Fairfax, Tass. xvi. 68.

MIRKSOME† adj. [morck, dark, Danish.

In the derivatives of this set, no regular orthography is observed: it is common to write murky, to which the rest ought to conform. Dr. Johnson. — It seems more correct to write mirky, mirk, and mirksome, in conformity to the Saxon mpice.] Dark; obscure.

Through mirksome air her ready way she makes.

Spenser, F. Q.

Into this mirksome source.

More, Immortal. of the Soul, l. iv. 2.

MIRKSOMENESS* n. s. [from mirksome.] Obscurity.

You can easily fold over all the depths thereof, and clearly comprehend all the darkest mirkso-

ness therein.

Mountagu, App. to Cass. (1625), p. 75.

MIRKY† adj. [from mirk.] Dark; wanting light. Dr. Johnson prefers murky, perhaps not justly; though certainly it was formerly so written. See MURKY and MIRK.

MIRROIR† n. s. [miroir, French; mirar, Spanish, to look.]

1. A looking glass; any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection. This sense is very old in our language.

This schal be likened to a man that beholdith the cheer of his birthe in a myrrour. Wicliffe, St. James, i.

This mirroure and this ring that ye may see,

He hath sent to my lady Canace. Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

And in his waters, which your mirror make,
Behold your faces as the crystal bright.

Spenser, Epithalam.

That power which gave me eyes the world to view,

To view myself infus'd an inward light,
Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect sight.

Davies.

Less bright the moon,
But opposite in levell'd west was set
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him.

Milton, P. L.

Mirror of poets, mirror of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,
Pleas'd and displeas'd with her own faults endures
A remedy like those whom music cures. Waller.

By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
Wandering, he saw his features and his hue,
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew. Dryden.

Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,
I saw, alas! some dread event impend. Pope.

2. It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; as, men look in a glass to adjust their mien or dress; an exemplar; an archetype.

The works of nature are no less exact, than if she did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Hooker.

O goddess, heavenly bright,
Mirror of grace and majesty divine.

Spenser, F. Q.

How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?

Shakespeare.

Mirror of ancient faith in early youth. Dryd.

MI'RROR-STONE. n. s. [selenites, Lat.] A kind of transparent stone. Ainsworth.

MIRTH.† n. s. [μῦρῶ, Sax. mýrg, merry.]
Merriment; jollity; gaiety; laughter.
To give a kingdom for a mirth, to sit,
And keep the turn of tipping with a slave.

Shakespeare.

His eye begets occasion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest.

Shakespeare.

Most of the appearing mirth in the world is not mirth but art: the wounded spirit is not seen, but walks under a disguise. South, Serm.

I have always preferred cheerfulness to mirth.
The latter I consider as an act, the former as an habit, of the mind. Mirth is short and transient, cheerfulness fixed and permanent.

Addison, Spect. No. 381.

With genial joy to warm the soul,
Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl.
Pope, Odyssey.

MI'RTHFUL. adj. [mirth and full.] Merry;
gay; cheerful.

No simple word,

That shall be utter'd at our mirthful board,
Shall make us sad next morning. B. Jonson.
The feast was serv'd, the bowl was crown'd
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round.

Prior.

MI'RTHFULLY.† adv. [from mirthful.] In a merry manner.

This neptha is an oily or fat liquid substance,
in colour not unlike soft white clay; of quality hot and dry, so as it is apt to inflame with the sunbeams, or heat that issues from fire; as was mirth-fully experimented upon one of Alexander's pages, who, being anointed, with much ado escaped burning. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 182.

MI'RTHLESS.† adj. [from mirth.] Joyless;
cheerless.

Who can a reason finde or wit in that

Dauncith he mery, that is mirthlesse?

Chaucer, Assembly of Foules.

Sion's doleful state,

Desolate;

Sacked, burned, and enthrall'd;

And the temple spoil'd, which we

Ne'er should see,

To our mirthless minds we call'd.

Donne, Ps. 137. Poems, p. 328.

MI'RY. adj. [from mirre.]

1. Deep in mud; muddy.

Thou should'st have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse: thou should'st have heard in how miry a place, how she was hemmoiled.

Shakespeare, Tann. of the Shriv.

All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vast caves under ground, all dark and miry, full of noisome creatures, and there grovelled in endless stench and misery. Temple.

Deep, through a miry lane she pick'd her way,
Above her ankle rose the chalky clay. Gay, Trivia.

So have I seen ill-coupled hounds
Drag different ways in miry grounds. Swift.

2. Consisting of mire.

Shall thou and I sit round about some fountain
Looking all downwards to behold our cheeks,
How they are stain'd like meadows, yet not dry,
With miry slime left on them by a flood? Shaks.

MIS.† An inseparable particle used in composition to mark an ill sense, or de-pravation of the meaning: as chance, luck; mischance, ill luck; computation, reckoning; miscomputation, false reckoning; to like, to be pleased; to mislike, to be offended; from mes in Teutonic and French, used in the same sense.
Of this it is difficult to give all the examples; but those that follow will sufficiently explain it. Dr. Johnson.—It is the Saxon mýr, from the Gothick missa; both which are often found in composition, denoting error, defect, or dissimilitude.

MISACCEPTATION. n. s. [mis and acceptation.] The act of taking in a wrong sense.

MISADVENTURE. n. s. [mesaventure, Fr.
mis and adventure.] Mischance; misfortune; ill luck; bad fortune.

Your looks are pale and wild, and do import
Some misadventure. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

When a commander, either upon necessity or misadventure, falleth into danger, it much ad-vanceth both his reputation and enterprise, if bravely he behaveth himself. Hayward.

The body consisted, after all the losses and misadventures, of no less than six thousand foot.

Clarendon.

Distinguish betwixt misadventure and design.

L'Estrange.

The trouble of a misadventure now and then,
that reaches not his innocence or reputation, may not be an ill way to teach him more caution.

Locke on Education.

MISADVENTURED. adj. [from misadventure.] Unfortunate.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes,
A pair of starcrossed lovers take their life;

Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrows
Do with their death bury their parents' strife.

Shakespeare.

MISADVISED. adj. [mis and advised.] Ill directed.

TO MISAFFE'CT.† v. a. [mis and affect.]
To dislike; not to be fond of.

That peace which you have hitherto so perversely misaffected. Milton, Animadu. Rem. Defence.

MISAFFE'CTED.† adj. Ill affected; ill disposed.

The whole body groans under such heads, and all the members must needs be misaffected.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

TO MISAFFI'RM.† v. a. [mis and affirm.]
To state incorrectly; to affirm falsely.

I suppose it no injury to the dead, but a good deed rather to the living, if by better information given them, or, which is enough, by only remembering them the truth of what they themselves know to be here misaffirmed, they may be kept from entering the third time unadvisedly into war and bloodshed. Milton, Eiconoclast, Pref.

MISAIMED. adj. [mis and aim.] Not aimed rightly.

The idle stroke enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his misaimed sight,

Did fall to ground. Spenser, F. Q.

MISALLEGATION.† n. s. [mis and allegation.] False statement.

You have compelled me, who have charged me so unjustly with misallegations.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 277.

TO MISALLE'GE.† v. a. [mis and allege.]
To cite falsely as a proof or argument.

[This] is all that Eusebius, by them mistran-slated and misalleged by him, [my refuter,] requireth.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 135.

MISALLIANCE.† n. s. [mis and alliance.]
Improper association.

Their purpose was to ally two things, in nature incompatible, the Gothic and the classic unity;
the effect of which misalliance was to discover and expose the nakedness of the Gothic. Hurd.

MISALLIED.† adj. [mis and ally.] Ill associated.

They [the French revolutionists,] are a misallied and disparaged branch of the House of Nimrod.

Burke.

MI'SANTHROPE.† } n. s. [misanthrope,
MISANTHROPOS. } French; μισάνθρωπος, Gr. from μῦα, to hate, and αν-θρωπος, man. Misanthropos, or misanthropous, "one that hates man's company," is in the old vocabulary of Cockeram. It is now usual to say mis-anthropist.] A hater of mankind.

I am misanthropos, and hate mankind. Shaks.

Alas, poor dean! his only scope
Was to be held a misanthrope;

This into general odium drew him. Swift.

MISANTHROPICAL.† } adj. [from misanthropical.] } thropy.] Hating mankind.

The varieties of misanthropical covetousness.

Granger on Eccl. (1621), p. 101.

MISANTHROPIST.† n. s. [from misanthro-py.] A hater of mankind. Bailey.

MISANTHROPY.† n. s. [Misanthropie, Fr.
from misanthrope.] Hatred of mankind.

In this last part of his imaginary travels, Swift has indulged a misanthropy that is intolerable.

Ld. Orrery on Swift, p. 166.

MISAPPLICATION.† n. s. [mis and application.] Application to a wrong purpose.

The indistinction of many in the community of name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt thereof.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The vigilance of those who preside over these charities is so exemplary, that persons disposed to do good can entertain no suspicions of the misapplication of their bounty. Atterbury.

It is our duty to be provident for the future, and to guard against whatever may lead us into misapplications of it. Rogers.

To MISAPPLY' v. a. [mis and apply.] To apply to wrong purposes.

Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied, And vice sometime by action's dignified. Shaksp.
The holy treasure was to be reserved, and issued for holy uses, and not misapplied to any other ends. Hovell.

He that knows, that whiteness is the name of that colour he has observed in snow, will not misapply that word as long as he retains that idea. Locke.

To MISAPPREHE'ND. v. a. [mis and apprehend.] Not to understand rightly.

That your reasonings may lose none of their force by my misapprehending or misrepresenting them, I shall give the reader your arguments. Locke.

MISAPPREHE'NSION. n. s. [mis and apprehension.] Mistake; not right apprehension.

It is a degree of knowledge to be acquainted with the causes of our ignorance: what we have to say upon this head, will equally concern our misapprehensions and errors. Glanville.

To MISASCRIBE, v. a. [mis and ascribe.] To ascribe falsely.

That may be misascribed to art which is the bare production of nature. Boyle.

To MISASSIGN. v. a. [mis and assign.] To assign erroneously.

We have not misassigned the cause of this phenomenon. Boyle.

To MISATTE'ND. v. a. [mis and attend.] To attend slightly; to disregard.

They shall recover the misattended words of Christ, to the sincerity of their true sense, from manifold contradictions. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 22.

To MISBECOME. v. a. [mis and become.] Not to become; to be unseemly; not to suit.

Either she has a possibility in that which I think impossible, or else impossible loves needs not misbecome me. Sidney.

What to the dauphin from England? — Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt, And any thing that may not misbecome The mighty sender. Shakspere, Hen. V.

That boldness which lads get amongst play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and ill-turn'd confidence, that those misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.

Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct: Thy father will not act what misbecomes him. Addison.

MISBECOMINGNESS. n. s. [from misbecome.] Unbecomingness.

Moral failings, whose unfitness or misbecomingness makes all the guilt. Boyle against Custom. Swearing. p. 115.

MISBEGOT. } adj. [begot or begotten]
MISBEGOTTEN. } with mis.] Unlawfully or irregularly begotten.

Contaminated, base, And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shakspere, Hen. VI.

Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd

To bring man-slaughter into form, set quarrelling Upon the head of valour; which, indeed, Is valour misbegot, and came into the world When sects and factions were but newly born, Shakspere.

The misbegotten infant grows, And, ripe for birth, distends with deadly throes The swelling rind with unavailing strife, To leave the wooden womb, and pushes into life. Dryden.

To MISBEHAVE. v. n. [mis and behave.] To act ill or improperly.

To MISBEHAVE. v. a. To conduct ill or improperly.

Spirits who have misbehaved themselves. Jortin.
MISBEHAVE'D. adj. [mis and behaved.] Untaught; ill-bred; uncivil.

Happiness courts thee in her best array; But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench, Thou pout'st upon thy fortune and thy love. Shakspere.

MISBEHAVE'VOUR. n. s. [mis and behaviour.] Ill conduct; bad practice.

The misbehaviour of particular persons does not at all affect their cause, since a man may act laudably in some respects, who does not so in others. Addison, Frecholder.

MISBELIEF. n. s. [mis and belief.] False religion; a wrong belief.

I, that have sold such as profess'd the faith That I was born in to captivity, Will make their number equal that I shall Deliver from the oar; and win as many, By the clearness of my actions, to look on Their misbelief, and loath it. Massinger, Renegado.

To MISBELIEVE. v. n. [mis and believe.] To hold a false religion; to believe wrongly.

Hither hale that misbelieving Moor. Titus Andronicus.

Bacon, on the Contriv. of the Ch. of England.

MISCONSTRUCTION. n. s. [mis and construction.] Wrong interpretation of words or things.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately

To strike at me upon his misconstruction,

When he conjunct, and flattering his displeasure,

Tript me behind. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Others conceive the literal acceptation to be a misconstruction of the symbolical expression.

Brown.

Those words were very weakly inserted where they are so liable to misconstruction. Stillington.

To MISCONSTRUE. v. a. [mis and construe.]

To interpret wrong.

That which by right exposition buildeth up Christian faith, being misconstrued breedeth error; between true and false construction the difference reason must shew.

Hooker.

We would have had you heard
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same
Unto the citizens, who, haply may Misconstrue us in him. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Many of the unbelieving Israelites would have misconstrued this story of mankind.

Ralegh.

Do not, great sir, misconstrue his intent,
Nor call rebellion what was prudent care,
To guard himself by necessary war.

Dryden, Aureng.

A virtuous emperor was much afflicted to find his actions misconstrued and defamed by a party.

Addison.

MISCONSTRUER. * n. s. [from misconstrue.]

I am descended of a gentler blood.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty. This is the only sense now in use.

Though she be dearer to my soul than rest

To weary pilgrims, or to misers gold,

Rather than wrong Castilio I'd forget her.

Otway, Orphan.

No silver saints by dying misers given, Here bri'd'th the rage of ill-requested heaven; But such plain roofs as piety could raise, And only vocal with the Maker's praise.

Pope.

MISERABLE.† adj. [miserable, French; miser, Latin.]

1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.

O nation miserable,

With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!

When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?

Shakspeare.

Most miserable is the desire that's glorious.

What's more miserable than discontent?

Shakspeare.

There will be a future state, and then how miserable is the voluptuous unbeliever left in the lurch.

South.

What hopes delude thee, miserable man?

Dryden, Æn.

2. Wretched; worthless.

Miserable comforters are ye all.

Job, xvi. 2.

3. Culpably parsimonious; stingy. In low language. Dr. Johnson.—South was of a different opinion from Dr. Johnson, and thus powerfully shews the propriety of the adjective in the present sense.

Reason tells me, that it is more misery to be covetous than to be poor, as our language, by a peculiar significance of dialect, calls the covetous man the miserable man.

South, Sermon, viii. 155.

4. Despicable; wretched; mean: as, a miserable person.

MISERABLENESS.† n. s. [from miserable.]

State of misery.

You may see the miserableness of your cause, which must be supported by such frauds and falsehoods.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 199.

Mentioning happiness and miserableness after death.

Hammond, Works, iv. 642.

His prosperity either shrivels him into miserableness, or melts him into luxury.

Scott, Christian Life, P. ii. ch. 4.

MISERABLY. adv. [from miserable.]

1. Unhappily; calamitously.

Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrelled, one of which was slain, and the other hanged for it; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably stabbed to death.

South.

2. Wretchedly; meanly.

As the love I bear you, makes me thus invite you, so the same love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place, where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained.

Sidney.

3. Covetously.

Ainsworth.

MIS'ERY. n. s. [miseria, Latin; misere, French.]

1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.

My heart is drown'd with grief,

My body round engirt with misery.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Happiness, in its full extent, is the utmost pleasure we are capable of, and misery the utmost pain.

Locke.

Perhaps it may be found more easy to forget the language than to part entirely with those tempers which we learnt in misery.

Law.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.

When we our betters see bearing our woes, We scarcely think our miseries our foes.

Shakspeare.

The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strife, And mourn the miseries of human life.

Dryden, Æn.

3. [From miser.] Covetousness; avarice. Not in use. Miser now signifies not an unhappy, but a covetous man; yet misery now signifies not covetousness but unhappiness.

He look'd upon things precious, as they were The common muck o'th' world: he covets less Than misery itself would give.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

In a fabrick of forty thousand pounds' charge. I wish thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model; for a little misery may easily breed some absurdity of greater charge.

Wotton.

MISESTE'EM. n. s. [mis and esteem.] Disregard; slight.

To MISFA'LL.* v. n. [mis and fall.] To befall unluckily.

Therast she gan to triumph with great boast, And to upbraid that chance which him misfell.

Spenser, F. Q. v. v. 10.

To MISFA'RE.* v. n. [mis and fare, Sax. mirapan.] To be in an ill state.

Ere thou so with thyself misfare.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

MISFA'RE.* n. s. Ill state; misfortune.

Of whom Sir Arthegall gan then enquire The whole occasion of his late misfare.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 48.

To MISFA'SHION. v. a. [mis and fashion.] To form wrong.

A thing in reason impossible, through their misfashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God.

Hakewill on Providence.

To MISFE'IGN.* v. n. [mis and feign.] To feign with an ill design.

Who all this while Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see

By him, who has the guerdon of his guile
For so misfeigning her true knight to bee.
Spenser, F. Q. i. iii. 40.

TO MISFO'RM. v. a. [mis and form.] To put in an ill form.

His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misformed shape misshaped more.
Spenser.

MISFO'RTUNE. n. s. [mis and fortune.] Calamity; ill luck; want of good fortune.

Fortune thus gan say, misery and misfortune is all one,
And of misfortune, fortune hath only the gift.
Sidney.

What world's delight, or joy of living speech,
Can heart so plung'd in sea of sorrows deep,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes reach?
Spenser.

Consider why the change was wrought,
You'll find it his misfortune, not his fault.
Addison.

MISFO'RTUNED.* adj. [from misfortune.] Unfortunate; attended with misfortune. Charity hath the judging of so many private grievances in a misfortuned wedlock.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

TO MISGIVE. v. a. [mis and give.]

1. To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence. It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.

As Henry's late presaging prophesy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart misgive me in these conflicts
What may befall him, to his harm or ours. Shakspeare.

This is strange! Who hath got the right Anne?
My heart misgives me.
Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Yet oft his heart, divine of something ill,
Misgave him. Milton, P. L.

His heart misgave him, that these were so many meetinghouses; but, upon communicating his suspicions, I soon made him easy.
Addison, Freetholder.

2. To grant or give improperly or amiss. Not usual.

I knew nothing of any of their liberty misgiven or misused, till about a fortnight since.
Alp. Laud, Hist. of his Chancell. of Oz. Rem. p. 192.

MISGIVING. n. s. [from misgive.] Doubt; distrust.

If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his absolution, the sinner is left in the plunge of infinite doubts, suspicions, and mis- givings, both as to the measures of his present duty, and the final issues of his future reward. South.

MISGOTTEN.* adj. [mis and gotten.] Unjustly obtained.

Leave, faylor, quickly that misgotten weft.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 18.
The surreption of secretly misgotten dispensations. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

TO MISGOVERN. v. a. [mis and govern.] To govern ill; to administer unfaithfully.

Misgovern'd both my kingdom and my life,
I gave my selfe to ease, to sleepe, and sinne.
Mir. for Mog. p. 78.

Solyman charged him bitterly, that he had mis- governed the state, and inverted his treasures to his own use. Knolles.

MISGOVERNED. adj. [from misgovern.] Rude; uncivilised.

Rude misgovern'd hands, from window tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.
Shakspeare.

MISGOVERNANCE. n. s. [mis and govern- ance.] Irregularity.

Thy muse too long slumbereth in sorrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance.
Spenser.

MISGOVERNMENT. n. s. [mis and govern- ment.]

1. Ill administration of publick affairs.
Men lay the blame of those evils whereof they know not the ground, upon publick misgovern- ment. Raleigh, Ess.

2. Ill management.
Men are miserable, if their education hath been so undisciplined, as to leave them unfurnished of skill to spend their time; but most miserable, if such misgovernment and unskillfulness make them fall into vicious company. Bp. Taylor.

3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.
There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them: thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment. Shakspeare.

TO MISGRAFF.* v. a. [mis and graff.]
To graft amiss.

The course of true love never did run smooth;
But either it was different in blood,
Or else misgrafted, in respect of years.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

TO MISGROUND.* v. a. [mis and ground.]
To found falsely.

Otherwise this misgrounded conceit shall pass with us as a gloss of Burdeaux, that mars the text. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 104.
From me no pulpit, no misgrounded law,
Nor scandal taken, shall this cross withdraw.
Donne, Poems, p. 325.

MISGUIDANCE. n. s. [mis and guidance.]
False direction.

The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-first of March for the finding out of Easter, which has caused the misguidance from the sun which we lie under in respect of Easter, and the moveable feasts. Holder on Time.

Whosoever deceives a man, makes him ruin himself; and by causing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgement, he causes an error in his choice, the misguidance of which must naturally engage him to his destruction.
South.

TO MISGUIDE. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect those which favour the other, is wilfully to misguide the understanding; and is so far from giving truth its true value, that it wholly debases it. Locke.

Misguided prince! no longer urge thy fate,
Nor tempt the hero to unequal war. Prior.

Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgement, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

MISHAP. n. s. [mis and hap.] Ill chance;
ill luck; calamity.

To tell you what miserable mishaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his cousin, I should too much fill your ears with strange horrors. Sidney.
Since we are thus far entered into the consideration of her mishaps, tell me, have there been any more such tempests wherein she hath thus wretchedly been wrecked. Spenser.

Sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
And master these mishaps with patient might.
Spenser.

Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps. Shakspeare.

It cannot be
But that success attends him: if mishap,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; since no place like this
Can fit his punishment, or your revenge.
Milton, P. L.

If the worst of all mishaps hath fallen,
Speak; for he could not die unlike himself.
Denham.

TO MISHAPPEN.* v. n. [mis and happen.]
To happen ill.

Affraid least to themselves the like mishappen might. Spenser, F. Q. i. iii. 20.

TO MISHEAR.* v. n. [mis and hear.] To hear imperfectly.

It is not so; thou hast misspoke, mishear'd:
Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again.
Shakspeare, K. John.

MR'SHMASH. n. s. A low word. A mingle or hotchpotch. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. It seems, however, not to have been so contemptible as is insinuated.
It is the Su. Goth misk-mask; Teut.
misch-masch, chaos; mischen, to mix.
Nor is our language without good examples of the word, though Dr. Johnson could find none.

Their language — [is] a mish-mash of Arabic and Portuguese. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 27.

I know the ingredients just that make them up
All to loose grains, the subtlest volatile atoms,
With the whole mish-mash of their composition.
Lee, Princess of Cleves.

TO MISINFERR. v. a. [mis and infer.] To infer wrong.

Nestorius teaching rightly, that God and man are distinct natures, did thereupon misinfer, that in Christ those natures can by no conjunction make one person. Hooker.

TO MISINFORM. v. a. [mis and inform.]
To deceive by false accounts.

Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had misinformed.
2 Mac. iii. 11.

By no means trust to your servants, who mis- lead you, or misinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourself. Bacon.

Bid her well beware,
Lest, by some fair-appearing good surpriz'd,
She dictate false; and misinform the will
To do what God expressly hath forbid.
Milton, P. L.

TO MISINFORM.* v. n. To make false information.

You misinform against him for concluding with the papists; you find it not in him.
Mountague, App. to Cæs. p. 256.

MISINFORMATION. n. s. [from misinform.]
False intelligence; false accounts.

Let not such be discouraged as deserve well,
by misinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery. Bacon.

The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting baseness, when backed with greatness, and set on by mis- information. South, Sermon.

MISINFORMER.* n. s. [from misinform.]
One who spreads false information.

I plainly told the lord archbishop of Canterbury, that rather than I would be obnoxious to those slanderous tongues of his misinformers, I would cast up my rochet.
Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

TO MISINSTRUCT.* v. a. [mis and in- struct.] To instruct improperly; to teach to a wrong purpose.

Touching them for whom we crave that mercy which is not to be obtained, let us not think that our Saviour did misinstruct his disciples, willing them to pray for the peace even of such as should be incapable of so great a blessing.
Hooker, Eccl. Pol. v. §. 49.

MISINSTRUCTION.* n. s. [mis and in- struction.] Instruction to an evil purpose.

They include the idolatries, and all other misarrangements, which they know not themselves guilty of, by reason of the blind misinstructions of their church. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 10.

MISINTERPELLIGENCE.* n. s. [mis and intelligence.]

1. Misunderstanding; disagreement.

He lamented the misintelligence he observed to be between their majesties.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, ii. 329.

2. Misinformation; false accounts.

To MISINTERPRET.* v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong sense, or wrong intention.

The gentle reader rests happy to hear the worthiest works misinterpreted, the clearest actions obscured, and the innocent life traduced.

B. Jonson.

After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted and misinterpreted.

Arbutnot on Coins.

MISINTERPRETABLE.* adj. [from misinterpret.] That may be misinterpreted.

I can as ill endure a suspicious and misinterpretable word as a fault.

Donne, Lett. in (1607.) to Lady M. Herbert.

MISINTERPRETATION.* n. s. [mis and interpretation.] Wrong explanation.

Their misinterpretation of the law, alluded unto, argues no less. By. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 2.

MISINTERPRETER.* n. s. [mis and interpreter.] One who explains to a wrong sense, or wrong intention.

Whom as a misinterpreter of Christ I openly protest against, and provoke him to the trial of this truth before all the world.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce, Ded.

To MISJOIN.* v. a. [mis and join.] To join unftly or improperly.

In Reason's absence mimic Fancy waxes To initiate her; but misjoining shapes, Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams; Ill-matching words, and deeds, long past, or late.

Milton, P. L.

Luther, more mistaking what he read, Misjoins the sacred body with the bread. Dryden.

To MISJUDGE.* v. n. [mis and judge.] To form false opinions; to judge ill.

You misjudge;

You see through love, and that deludes your sight: As, what is straight, seems crooked through the water. Dryden, All for Love.

By allowing himself in what is innocent, he breeds offence to his weak and misjudging neighbour. Aiturbury.

Insensate!

Too long misjudging have I thought thee wise, But sure relentless folly steals thy breast. Pope.

To MISJUDGE.* v. a. To mistake; to judge ill of.

Where we misjudge the matter, a miscarriage draws pity after it; but when we are transported by pride, our ruin lies at our own door.

L'Estrange.

MISJUDGEMENT.* n. s. [mis and judgement.] Unjust judgement; unjust determination.

His third reason, that the misjudgement in case of a pecuniary damage or banishment, may be afterwards capable of being reversed.

By. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Nobody will dare to censure that popular part of the tribunal, whose only restraint on misjudgement is the censure of the publick

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

To MISKEN.* v. a. [mis and ken.] To be ignorant of; to misunderstand; not to know. Used in some parts of the north of England.

MI'SKIN.* n. s. A little baggage. Obsole.

Now would I tune my miskins on this green.

Drayton, Shep. Garl. (1593.) p. 5.

To MISKINDLE.* v. a. [mis and kindle.] To inflame rashly; to animate to an ill purpose.

Such is the miskindled heat of some unruly spirits.

By. Hall, Rem. p. 70.

To MISKNOW.* v. a. [mis and know.] Not to know; to be ignorant of.

There is nothing in the world that they do more misknow than themselves.

Seasonable Sermon. (1644.) p. 39.

To MISLAY.* v. a. [mis and lay.] To lay in a wrong place.

Mean time my worthy wife our arms mislay'd, And from beneath my head my sword convey'd.

Dryden.

The fault is generally mislayd upon nature; and there is often a complaint of want of parts, when the fault lies in want of a due improvement.

Locke.

If the butler be the tell-tale, mislay a spoon, so as he may never find it. Swift, Rules to Servants.

MISLAY.* n. s. [from mislay.] One that puts in the wrong place.

The mislayer of a mere-stone is to blame: but it is the unjust judge that is the capital remover of land-marks, when he defineth amiss of lands and property.

Bacon, Essays.

To MISLE.* v. n. [from mist.] To rain in imperceptible drops, like a thick mist: properly mistle, Dr. Johnson says; but the Teut. mieselen, as well as misten, warrants this way of writing the word.

Youngh thou mourned hast,

Now ginnes to misled, hie we homeward fast.

Spenser.

The very small drops of a misling rain descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles.

Grew, Cosmol.

This cold precipitates the vapours either in dews, or, if the vapours more copiously ascend, they are condensed into misling, or into showers of small rain, falling in numerous, thick, small drops.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

In misling days, when I my thresher heard, With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd.

Gay, Pastorals.

MI'SLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Small, misty rain. In the Craven Dialect, mislin.

To MISLEAD.* v. a. preterite and part. passive, misled. [mis and lead.] To guide a wrong way; to betray to mischief or mistake.

Take, oh take those lips away,

That so sweetly were forsworn:

And those eyes, the break of day,

Lights that do mislead the morn.

Shakespeare.

Poor misled men: your states are yet worthy pity.

If you would hear, and change your savage minds, Leave to be mad.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Trust not servants who mislead or misinform you.

Bacon.

Oh thievish night, Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end, In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,

That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps

With everlasting oil, to give due light

To the misled and lonely traveller?

Milton, Comus.

What can they teach and not mislead;

Ignorant of themselves, of God much more?

Milton, P. R.

Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill, And recompence, as friends, the good misled; If mercy be a precept of thy will, Return that mercy on thy servant's head.

Dryden.

The imagination, which is of simple perception, doth never of itself, and directly, mislead us; yet it is the almost fatal means of our deception.

Glanville, Scepis.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, and scrutiny of each successive desire, whether the satisfaction of it does not interfere with our true happiness, and mislead us from it.

Locke.

'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill Appear in writing or in judging ill: But of the two less dangerous is th' offence To tire our patience, than mislead our sense.

Pope.

MISLEADER.* n. s. [from mislead.] One that leads to ill.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been, Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast, The tutor and the feeder of my riots; Till then I banish thee on pain of death, As I have done the rest of my misleaders.

Shakespeare.

They have disclaimed and abandoned those heretical phantasies touching our Saviour, wherein by their misleaders they had been anciently plunged.

Breuewood on Languages.

MISLEARNED.* adj. [mis and learned.] Not really or properly learned.

Such is this which you have here propounded on the behalf of your friend, whom it seems a mislearned advocate would fain bear up in a course altogether unjustifiable.

By. Hall, Cases of Consc. Add.

MI'SLETOE.* See MISTLETOE.

To MISLIKE.* v. a. [mis and like; Saxon miþlican.] To disapprove; to be not pleased with; to dislike.

It was hard to say, whether he more liked his doings, or misliked the effect of his doings.

Sidney.

Tertullian was not deceived in the place; but Aquinas, who misliked this opinion, followed a worse.

Ralegh.

Judge not the preacher, for he is thy judge:

If thou mislike him, thou conceiv'st his note.

Herbert.

To MISLIKE.* v. n. Not to be pleased with.

They made sport, and I laughed; they mispronounced, and I misliked.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymnaus.

MISLIKE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Disapprobation; dislike.

Setting your scorn and your mislike aside, Tell me some reason, why the lady Gray Should not become my wife. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Their angry gestures with mislike disclose,

How much his speech offends their noble ears.

Fairfax.

MISLIKE.* n. s. [from mislike.] One that disapproves.

Open flatterers of great men, privy mislikers of good men, fair speakers with smiling countenances.

Ascham.

MI'SLEN.* n. s. [See MASTLIN.] Mixed

corn; as, wheat and rye.

They commonly sow those lands with wheat,

mislen, and barley. Mortimer, Husb.

To MISLIVE.* v. n. [mis and live.] To live ill.

Should not thilke God, that gave him that good, Eke cherish his child, if in his ways he stood?

For if he mislive in leanness and lust,

Little boots all the wealth and the trust.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

The misliving Christian crucifies Christ again.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 16.

MISLU'CK.* n. s. [mis and luck.] Misfortune; bad luck.

Poor man! it was his misluck to marry that wicked wife.

Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gr. (1623), p. 301.

To MISMA'NAGE. v. a. [mis and manage.] To manage ill.

The debates of princes' councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism. Locke.

MISMANAGEMENT. n. s. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.

It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that differ. Locke.

The falls of favourites, projects of the great, Of old mismanagements, taxations new, All neither wholly false, nor wholly true. Pope.

To MISMA'RK. v. a. [mis and mark.] To mark with the wrong token.

Things are mismarked in contemplation and life, for want of application or integrity.

Collier on Human Reason.

To MISMA'TCH. v. a. [mis and match.] To match unsuitably.

Southern, Spart. Dame.

To MISMEASURE.* v. a. [mis and measure.] To measure incorrectly.

With aim mismeasure'd, and impetuous speed, Some darting strike their ardent wish far off.

Young, Night Th. 5.

To MISNA'ME. v. a. [mis and name.] To call by the wrong name.

They make one man's fancies, or perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them as such to their successors, who are bold to misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy, presumption. Boyle on Colours.

MISNO'MER.† n. s. [French.] In law, a wrong name; by which an indictment, or any other act, may be vacated.

The law does not favour advantages of misnomer any further than the strict rule of law requires. Viner's Abridg. of Law and Equity.

To MISOBSE'RVE. v. a. [mis and observe.] Not to observe accurately.

They understand it as early as they do language; and, if I misobserve not, they love to be treated as rational creatures sooner than is imagined. Locke on Education.

MISO'GAMIST. n. s. [μισος, and γάμος.] A marriage-hater.

MISO'GYNIST.* n. s. [μισος to hate, and γυνή, a woman.] A woman-hater.

Junius, at the first, little better than a misogynist, was afterwards so altered from himself, that he successively married four wives.

The hardest task is to persuade the erroneous obstinate misogynist, or woman-hater, that any discourse acknowledging their worth can be beyond poetry. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 322.

MISO'GYNY. n. s. [μισος, and γυνή, Greek.] Hatred of women.

MISOP'NION.* n. s. [mis and opinion.] Erroneous notion.

We are as apt as those, that see through a mist, to think them greater than they are: every fault is a crime, where misopinion is an heresy.

Bp. Hall, Peacemaker.

To MISO'RDER. v. a. [mis and order.] To conduct ill; to manage irregularly.

If the child miss either in forgetting a word, or misordering the sentence, I would not have the master frown. Ascham.

Yet few of them come to any great age, by reason of their misordered life when they were young. Ascham.

The time misorder'd doth in common sense Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form, To hold our safety up. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

MISO'RDER. n. s. [from the verb.] Irregularity; disorderly proceedings.

When news was brought to Richard the Second, that his uncles, who sought to reform the misorders of his counsellors, were assembled in a wood near unto the court, he merrily demanded of one Sir Hugh a Linne, who had been a good military man, but was then somewhat distraught of his wits, what he would advise him to do? Issue out, quoth Sir Hugh, and slay them every mother's son; and when thou hast so done, thou hast killed all the faithful friends thou hast in England. Camden, Remains.

MISO'RDERLY.† adj. [from misorder.] Irregular; unlawful.

His overmuch fearing of you drives him to seek some misorderly shift, to be helped by some other book, or to be prompted by some other scholar.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Their own unruly and misorderly affections. Hales, Rem. p. 83.

To MISPE'L. v. a. [mis and spell.] To spell wrong.

To MISPE'ND. v. a. preterite and part. passive, mispend. [mis and spend.]

1. To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, tendering visits, gathering and venting news. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Let him now endeavour to redeem what he hath mispend by employing more of that leisure in this duty for the future. Wh. Duty of Man.

First guilty conscience does the mirror bring, Then sharp remorse shoots out her angry sting; And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife, Upbraid the long mispend luxurious life. Dryden.

I this writer's want of sense arraign, Treat all his empty pages with disdain, And think a grave reply mispend and vain.

Blackmore.

He who has lived with the greatest care will find, upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem; but he who has mispend much has still a greater concern. Rogers.

Wise men retrieve, as far as they are able, every mispend or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them. Rogers.

2. To waste, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Now let the arched knife their thirsty limbs Dissolve, for the genial moisture due To apples, otherwise *mispend*s itself In barren twigs. Philips.

I suspect the excellency of those men's parts who are dissolute, and careless mispenders of their time. Norris.

MISPE'NSE.* n. s. [from mispend.] Waste; loss; ill employment.

Your riotous mispend had empaired your estate.

Bp. Hall, Epist. (1608.) D. 2. Ep. 10.

Since we find ourselves guilty of the sinful mispend of our good hours, let us, whiles we have space, obtain of ourselves to be careful of redeeming that precious time which we have lost.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 207.

To engage now in contest about them, may be reasonably deemed nothing more than a wilful mispend of our time, labour, and good humour, by vainly reciprocating the saw of endless contention. Barrow, vol. i. S. 29.

The mispend of our time, the wasting our talents, and the neglect of that immediate duty and worship we owe to Almighty God, are, I fear, matters which are seldom accounted for by us. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 178.

To MISPERTUA'DE* v. a. [mis and persuade.] To bring to a wrong notion.

Shall we give sentence of death inevitable against all those fathers of the Greek church, which, being mispersuaded, died in the error of free-will? Hooker, Disc. on Justification, p. 41.

So true we find it, by experience of all ages in the church of God, that the teacher's error is the people's trial, harder and heavier so much to bear, as he is in worth and regard greater that mispersuadeth them. Hooker, Eccl. Pol. v. § 62.

The world's misbelieving or mispersuaded magnificoes. Loe, Bl. of Br. Beauty, p. 39.

MISPERSUA'SION.† n. s. [mis and persuasion.] Wrong notion; false opinion.

They looked upon us as men in mispersuasion and error. Bp. Taylor, Epist. Pref. to his Συμβολον, (1657.)

Some mispersuasions concerning the Divine attributes tend to the corrupting men's manners. Decay of Ch. Piety.

To MISPLA'CE. v. a. [mis and place.] To put in a wrong place.

I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders, Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd.

Shakespeare.

What little arts govern the world! I need not An armed enemy or corrupted friend, When service but misplac'd, or love mistaken, Performs the work. Denham, Sophy.

Is a man betrayed by such agents as he employs? He misplaced his confidence, took hypocrisy for fidelity, and so relied upon the services of a pack of villains. South.

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity; we, who could no way foresee the effect! Atterbury, Serm.

To MISPO'INT. v. a. [mis and point.] To confuse sentences by wrong punctuation.

To MISPRI'NT.* v. a. [mis and print.] To print wrong.

Hale, H. P. C. p. ii. ch. 8.

MISPRI'NT.* n. s. [from the verb.] An error of the press.

To MISPRI'SE. v. a. Sometimes it signifies mistaken, from the French verb mesprendre; sometimes undervalued or disdained, from the French verb mepriser. Hammer. It is in both senses wholly obsolete.

1. To mistake. You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood; I am not guilty of Lysander's blood. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

2. To slight; to scorn; to despise. He's so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people who best know him, that I am altogether misprised.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Pluck indignation on thy head; By the misprising of a maid, too virtuous For the contempt of empire. Shakespeare.

MISPRISON. n. s. [from misprize.]

1. Scorn; contempt. Not in use.

Here take her hand,

Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift!

That doth in vile misprison shackle up
My love, and her desert. Shakespeare.

2. Mistake; misconception. Not in use.

Thou hast mistaken quite,

And laid thy love juice on some true love's sight;

Of thy misprision must perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true. Shakespeare.

We feel such or such a sentiment within us,
and herein is no cheat or misprison; it is truly so, and our sense concludes nothing of its rise.

Clanville, Scopsis.

3. [In common law.] It signifies neglect, negligence, or oversight. Misprison of treason is the concealment, or not disclosing, of known treason; for the which the offenders are to suffer imprisonment during the king's pleasure, lose their goods and the profits of their lands during their lives. Misprison of felony, is the letting any person, committed for treason or felony, or suspicion of either, to go before he be indicted. Cowel.

fortify, and intrench, by an added respect to their own opinions.

Bacon, on the Contriv. of the Church of Eng.

To MISPROFESS.* v. a. [miss and profess.]

To announce unjustly or falsely one's skill in any art or science, so as to invite employment.

Keep me back, O Lord, from them who mis-profess arts of healing the soul, or the body, by means not imprinted by Thee in the church, or not in nature for the body.

Donne, Devot. (1624,) p. 86.

To MISPRONOUNCE.* v. n. [mis and pronounce.] To speak inaccurately.

They made sport, and I laughed; they mispronounced, and I disliked; and, to make up the atticism, they were out, and I hissed.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

To MISPRONOUNCE.* v. a. To pronounce improperly.

The Greeks, who knew little of this people who lived a great way from the sea, might easily mis-pronounce their name. Patrick on Gen. x. 26.

To MISRECITE. v. a. [mis and recite.] To recite not according to the truth.

He misrecites the argument, and denies the consequence, which is clear.

Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

To MISRECKON. v. a. [mis and reckon.] To reckon wrong; to compute wrong.

Whoever finds a mistake in the sum total, must allow himself out, though after repeated trials he may not see in which article he has misreckoned.

Swift.

To MISRELATE. v. a. [mis and relate.]
To relate inaccurately or falsely.

To satisfy me that he misrelated not the experiment, he brought two or three small pipes of glass, which gave me the opportunity of trying it. Boyle.

MISRELATION. n. s. [from misrelate.]
False or inaccurate narrative.

My aim was only to press home those things in writing, which had been agitated between us by word of mouth; a course much to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being less subject to mistakes and misrelations, and wherein paradoxi-sms are more quickly detected. Bp. Bramhall.

To MISREMEMBER. v. a. [mis and remember.] To mistake by trusting to memory.

If I much misremember not, I had such a spirit from peas kept long enough to lose their verdure.

Boyle.

To MISREPORT. v. a. [mis and report.] To give a false account of; to give an account disadvantageous and false.

His doctrine was misreported, as though he had every where preached this, not only concerning the Gentiles, but also touching the Jews. Hooker.

A man that never yet

Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace. Shakspeare.

The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes the will often fasten on the worst side, lies in misreporting upon the various comparisons of these. Locke.

MISREPORT. n. s. [from the verb.] False account; false and malicious representation.

We defend him not,

Only desire to know his crime; 'tis possible

It may be some mistake or misreport,

Some false suggestion, or malicious scandal.

Denham.

As by flattery a man is usually brought to open his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction, and a slanderous misreport of persons, he is often brought to shut the same even to his best and truest friends. South, Sermon.

To MISREPRESENT. v. a. [mis and represent.]
To represent not as it is; to falsify to disadvantage; mis often signifies not only error, but malice or mischief.

See how he lies at random, carelessly diffus'd,—
In slavish habit, ill-fitted weeds
O'er-worn and soil'd;

Or do my eyes misrepresent?

Milton, S. A.

Two qualities necessary to a reader before his judgment should be allowed are, common honesty and common sense; and that no man could have misrepresented that paragraph, unless he were utterly destitute of one or both. Swift.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs of some facts, and so easy to forget the circumstances of others, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the public by curious and inquisitive heads, who proceed altogether upon con-jectures. Swift.

MISREPRESENTATION. n. s. [from misrepresent.]

1. The act of misrepresenting.

They have prevailed by misrepresentations, and other artifices, to make the successor look upon them as the only persons he can trust. Swift.

2. Account maliciously false.

Since I have shewn him his foul mistakes and injurious misrepresentations, it will become him publicly to own and retract them. Atterbury.

MISREPRESENT.* n. s. [from misrepresent.]
One who represents things not as they are.

An empty misrepresenter of our antiquities,
histories, and records.

Bp. Nicolson to Dr. Kennet, Ep. Corr. i. 262.

MISRULE. n. s. [mis and rule.] Tumult;
confusion; revel; unjust domination.

The wilde heads of the parishes, conventing together, chuse them a grand capitaine (of mischief) whom they innoble with the title of my lorde of misrule.

Stubbes, Anat. of Abuses, (1585,) fol. 92. b.

This lord of misrule in their comotations, or drunken meetings, was called "moderator."

Hakewill on Providence, p. 363.

In the portal plac'd, the heav'n-born maid,
Enormous riot and misrule survey'd. Pope.

And through his airy hall the loud misrule
Of driving tempest, is for ever heard. Thomson.

MISRU'LY.* adj. [from misrule.] Unruly; turbulent.

And curb the raunge of his misruly tongue.

Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

MISS. n. s. [contracted from mistress.
Bailey, and Dr. Johnson. — It may perhaps be a contraction of the Teut. meys-sen, i. e. meydsen, a girl.]

1. The term of honour to a young girl.

Dr. Johnson. — Miss, at the beginning of the last century, was appropriated to the daughters of gentlemen under the age of ten, or given opprobriously to young gentlewomen reproachable for the giddiness or irregularity of their conduct. See Notes on Steele's Ep.
Correspond. i. 92. Mistress was then the style of grown up unmarried ladies, though the mother was living; and, for a considerable part of the century, maintained its ground against the in-fantine term of miss.

Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are great impediments to the diversions of the servants. Swift.

2. A strumpet; a concubine; a whore; a prostitute.

All women would be of one piece,

The virtuous matron and the miss. Hudibras.

This gentle cock, for solace of his life,

Six misses had besides his lawful wife. Dryden.

To MISS. v. a. [missen, Dutch and Germ.]
Missed, preter. missid or mist, part.

1. Not to hit by the mind; to mistake.

To heaven their prayers

Flew up, nor miss'd the way. Milton, P. L.

Nor can I miss the way, so strongly drawn

By this new-felt attraction, and instinct.

Milton, P. L.

2. Not to hit by manual aim.

The life you boasted to your javelin given,
Prince, you have miss'd. Pope.

3. To fail of obtaining.

If she desired all things to have Orgalus,
Orgalus feared nothing but to miss Parthenia. Sidney.

So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that, which one unworthy may attain;
And die with grieving. Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.
Where shall a maid's distracted heart find rest,
If she can miss it in her lover's breast? Dryden.
When a man misses his great end, happiness,
he will acknowledge he judged not right. Locke.

4. To discover something to be unexpectedly wanting.

Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I missed him. Sidney.
In vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed.
1 Sam. xxv. 21.

5. To be without.

We cannot miss him; he does make our fire,
Fetch in our wood. Shakespeare, Tempest.

6. To omit.

He that is so tender of himself, that he can never find in his heart so much as to miss a meal, by way of punishment for his faults, shews he is not much fallen out with himself.
Whole Duty of Man.

She would never miss one day,
A walk so fine, a sight so gay. Prior.

7. To perceive want of.

My redoubt'd love and care,
May ever tend about thee to old age
With all things grateful cheer'd, and to supply'd,
That what by me thou hast lost thou least shalt miss.
Milton, S. A.

He who has a firm, sincere friend, may want all the rest without missing them. South.

To MISS† v. n.

1. To fly wide; not to hit.

Flying bullets now,
To execute his rage, appear too slow,
They miss or sweep but common souls away. Wallar.

2. Not to succeed.

The general root of superstition is, that men observe when things hit, and not when they miss; and commit to memory the one, and forget and pass over the other. Bacon.

3. To fail; to mistake.

Amongst the angels, a whole legione
Of wicked sprites did fall from happy blis;
What wonder then if one, of women all, did mis?
Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 2.

4. To be lost; to be wanting.

My lord,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
Thy shepherds we hurt not, neither was there ought missing unto them. 1 Sam. xxv. 7.
For a time caught up to God, as once
Moses was in the mount, and missing long,
And the great Thibite, who on fiery wheels
Rode up to heaven, yet once again to come.
Milton, P. R.

5. To miscarry; to fail; as by accident.

The invention all admir'd, and each, how he
To be the inventor miss'd, so easy it seem'd,
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton, P. I.

Gritus missing of the Moldavian fell upon Maylat. Knolles.

6. To fail to obtain, learn, or find: sometimes with of before the object.

The moral and relative perfections of the Deity are easy to be understood by us; upon the least reflection we cannot miss of them.
Atterbury, Serm.

Miss† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Loss; want.

I could have better spar'd a better man.
Oh, I should have a heavy miss of thee,
If I were much in love with vanity.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

If these papers have that evidence in them, there will be no great miss of those which are lost,
and my reader may be satisfied without them.
Locke.

2. Mistake; error. [missa, Gothick; mjr, Sax.]

O rakel hond, to do so foule a mis!
Chaucer, Mancip. Tale.
He did without any great miss in the hardest points of grammar. Ascham, Schoolmaster.
Amends for *mis*se he now will make.
Preston, Trag. of K. Cambises.

I found my miss, struck hands, and pray'd him tell
(To hold acquaintance still) where he did dwell.
Donne, Poems, p. 95.

3. Hurt; harm. Obsolete.

In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his *mis*se not mickle.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

MIS'SAL. n. s. [missale, Lat. missel, Fr.]
The mass book.

Their ill haviour garres men missay,
Both of their doctrine and their fay.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

2. To say wrong.

Diggon Dave, I bid her god day,
Or diggon her is, or I missay.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

We are not dwarfs, but of equal stature, if Vives missay not. Hakewill on Providence.

To MISSA'Y.* v. a.

1. To censure; to slander; to speak ill of.
Was never wight missaid of here.

Chaucer, Rom. R. v. 1260.

2. To utter amiss.

Pray for us there,
That what they have misdone,
Or missaid, we to that may not adhere.
Donne, Poems, p. 341.

MISSA'YING.* n. s. [mis and saying.] Improper expression; bad words.

It being the proper scope of this work in hand, not to rip up and relate the misdoings of his whole life, but to answer only and refute the mis-sayings of his book. Milton, Eicon. Pref.

To MISSE'EM. v. n. [mis and seem.]

1. To make false appearance.

Foul Duessa meet,
Who with her witchcraft and *mis*seeming sweet
Inveigled her to follow her desires unmeet.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. To misbecome. Obsolete both.

Never knight I saw in such *mis*seeming plight.
Spenser, F. Q.

MISSEL-BIRD.* n. s. A kind of thrush;

the misseldine thrush.

MISSELDINE.* n. s. Another name of the missetoe, or mistletoe. Phillips.

To MISSE'ND.* v. a. [mis and send.] To send amiss or incorrectly: as, a letter or parcel missent, i. e. not forwarded to the proper place.

To MISSE'RYE† v. a. [mis and serve.] To serve unfaithfully; to serve dishonestly.

You shall enquire whether the good statute be observed, whereby a man may have that he thinketh he hath, and not be abused or misserved
in that he buys.

Bacon, Charge at the Sessions of the Verge.
Great men, who misserved their country, were fined very highly. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To MISSHA'PE. v. a. part. misshapen and misshapen. [mis and shape.]

1. To shape ill; to form ill; to deform.

A rude misshapen, monstrous rablement.
Spenser, F. Q.
His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misformed shape, misshapen more,
Spenser, F. Q.

Whom then she does transform to monstrous
hues,
And horribly misshapes with ugly sights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron webs. Spenser, F. Q.
Let the misshapen trunk that bears this head
Be round impaled with a glorious crown.
Shakespeare.

Pride will have a fall: the beautiful trees go all to the wreck here, and only the misshapen and despicable dwarf is left standing. L'Estrange.
Pluto hates his own misshapen race,
Her sister furies fly her hideous face.
Dryden, Æn.

They make bold to destroy ill-formed and misshapen productions. Locke.
The Alps broken into so many steps and præ-cipes, form one of the most irregular, misshapen scenes in the world. Addison.

We ought not to believe that the banks of the ocean are really deformed, because they have not the form of a regular bulwark; nor that the mountains are misshapen, because they are not exact pyramids or cones. Bentley, Serm.
Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
Which but proportion'd to their site or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.

2. In Shakespeare, perhaps, it once signifies ill directed: as, to shape a course.

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flask,
I set on fire. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

MIS'SILE. adj. [missilis, Latin.] Thrown by the hand; striking at distance.

We bend the bow, or wing the missile dart.
Pope.

MIS'SION. n. s. [missio, Latin.]

1. Commission; the state of being sent by supreme authority.

Her son tracing the desert wild,
All his great work to come before him set,
How to begin, how to accomplish best,
His end of being on earth, and mission high.
Milton, P. R.

The divine authority of our mission, and the powers vested in us by the high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, are publicly disputed and denied. Atterbury.

2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion.

In these ships there should-be a mission of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new mission. Bacon, New Atlantis.

3. Dismission; discharge. Not in use.

In Cæsar's army, somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a mission or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted, but thought to wrench him to their other desires; whereupon with one cry they asked mission.
Bacon, Apophthegms.

4. Faction; party. Not in use.

Glorious deeds, in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. Shakespeare.

Missionary.† n. s. [missionaire, Fr. Dr. Missioner.] n. s. Johnson. — Our word at first was missioner; of which the earliest example, given by Dr. Johnson, is from Dryden. Dryden, however, adopted also the French form missionaire; and thus, in the original edition of the Hind and Panther, writes, "these the missionaires our zeal has made," 4to. 1687, p. 63. Soon afterwards missionary became the word.] One sent to propagate religion.

The missioners of France seek to establish this practice in all places where they teach.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654), p. 94. You mention the presbyterian missionary, who hath been persecuted for his religion. Swift.

I desire our young missionaries from the university to consider where they are, and not dress, and look, and move, like young officers.

Tatler, No. 270.

Like mighty missioner you come,
Ad pates infidelium.

Dryden, Ep. to Sir G. Etherege.

Missionive.† adj. [missionive, French.]

1. Such as is sent.

The king grants a licence under the great seal called a congé d'élire, to elect the person he has nominated by his letters missionive.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. Used at distance.

In vain with darts a distant war they try,
Short, and more short the missive weapons fly.

Dryden.

Ink is the great missive weapon in all battles of the learned.

Swift, Battle of the Books.

Missive. n. s. [French.]

1. A letter sent: it is retained in Scotland in that sense.

Great aids came in to him; partly upon missives, and partly voluntary from many parts.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. A messenger. Both obsolete.

Rioting in Alexandria, you

Did pocket up my letters; and with taunts

Did give my missive out of audience. Shakespeare.

Whiles I stood wrapt in the wonder of it, came missives from the king, who all-hailed me thane of Cawder.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To misspe'ak. v. a. [mis and speak.] To speak wrong.

Then as a mother which delights to hear
Her early child misspeak half-utter'd words.

Donne, Poems, p. 177.

To misspe'ak. v. n. To blunder in speaking.

It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard;
Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Mist.† n. s. [mift, Saxon; mist, Icel. caligo; mirtan, caligare, Saxon.]

1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.

Old Chaucer, like the morning star,

To us discovers day from far;

His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd,
Which our dark nation long involv'd. Denham.

And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply.

Roscommon.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain.

Grew.

But hovering mists around his brows are spread,
And night with sable shades involves his head.

Dryden.

A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below.

Locke.

2. Any thing that dims or darkens.

My people's eyes once blinded with such mists of suspicion, they are misled into the most desperate actions.

King Charles.

His passion cast a mist before his sense,
And either made or magnify'd th' offence.

Dryden.

To mist.† v. a. [mirtan, Saxon.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.

Lend me a looking-glass;

If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,

Why then she lives. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

An ineffectual laziness is the seminary both of vice and infamy; it clouds the metall'd mind, it mists the wit, and choaks up all the sciences.

Feltham, Res. ii. 49.

Mista'kable.† adj. [from mistake.] That may be mistaken; liable to be conceived wrong.

Places of Scripture explicable, or mistakable by the enthusiasts.

Hammond, Postscr. to his N. Test. § 32.

It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakable numbers.

Brown.

To mista'ke. v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.

These did apprehend a great affinity between their invocation of saints and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken for the other.

Stillingfleet.

This will make the reader very much mistake and misunderstand his meaning.

Locke.

Fancy passes for knowledge, and what is prettily said is mistaken for solid.

Locke.

Fools into the notion fall,

That vice or virtue there is none at all;

Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain,

'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain.

Pope.

To mista'ke. v. n. To err; not to judge right.

Seeing God found folly in his angels; men's judgements, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding, among friends.

Swift.

Mista'en. pret. and part. pass. of mistake for mistaken, and so retained in Scotland.

This dagger hath mista'en, for lo! the sheath

Lies empty on the back of Mountague,

The point missheathed in my daughter's bosom.

Shakespeare.

To be mista'ken. To err. [To mistake has a kind of reciprocal sense; I mistake, "je me trompe." I am mistaken, means I misconceive, I am in an error; more frequently than I am ill understood; but, my opinion is mistaken, means, my opinion is not rightly understood.]

The towns, neither of the one side nor the other, willingly opening their gates to strangers, nor strangers willingly entering, for fear of being mistaken.

Sidney.

England is so idly king'd:

— You are too much mistaken in this king:

Question, your grace, the late ambassadors,

How modest in exception, and withal

How terrible in constant resolution.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that stroke.

Waller.

Mista'ke. n. s. [from the verb.] Misconception; error.

He never shall find out fit mate; but such

As some misfortune brings him, or mistake.

Brown.

Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mistion, produce colour.

Boyle on Colours.

To MISTLE.* See To MISLE.

MISTLETO'E. n. s. [myrcelan, Sax. mistil, Danish, birdlime, and tan, a twig.] A plant.

The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a bason, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry, full of a glutinous substance, inclosing a plain heart-shaped seed; this plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, but will always grow upon trees; from whence the ancients accounted it a super-plaut, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without seed. The manner of its propagation is as follows: the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree; for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this viscous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth rind trees: whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities.

Miller.

If snowe do continue, sheepe hardly that fare
Crave mistle and ivie for them for to sparo.

Tusser.

A barren and detested vale you see it is:
The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss and baleful mistletoe. Shaksp.

Mistletoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazles, and rarely upon oaks; the mistletoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green winter and summer, and beareth a white glistening berry: and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth.

Bacon.

All your temples strow

With laurel green, and sacred mistletoe.

Gay, Trivia.

MISTLIKE. adj. [mist and like.] Resembling a mist.

Good Romeo, hide thyself.

— Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans,
Mistlike, infold me from the search of eyes.

3. To handle one without mittens. To use one roughly. A low phrase. Ainsworth.

MITTIMUS.† n. s. [Latin.] A warrant by which a justice commits an offender to prison.

Never was there a more close prisoner than my soul is for the time to my body; close, in respect to the essence of that spirit, which, since its first mittimus, never stirred out from this strait room.

Bp. Hall, Free Prisoner, § 7.

TO MIX.† v. a. [micjan, Saxon; mischen, Teut. and German; misceo, mixus, Lat.]

1. To unite to something else.

Ephraim hath mized himself among the people.

Hos. vii. 8.

2. To unite various ingredients into one mass.

A mixed multitude went up with them, and flocks and herds.

Exod. xii. 38.

He sent out of his mouth a blast of fire, and out of his lips a flaming breath, and out of his tongue he cast out sparks and tempests; and they were all mit together.

2 Esdras.

Air, and ye elements, the eldest birth

Of nature's womb, that in quaternion run

Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix

And nourish all things.

Milton, P. L.

3. To form of different substances or kinds.

I have chosen an argument, mixt of religious and civil considerations; and likewise mixt between contemplative and active.

Bacon, Holy War.

4. To join; to mingle; to confuse.

Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear; This is the English not the Turkish court.

Shakspeare.

She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent;

What choice to choose for delicacy best,

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix

Tastes, nor well join'd, inelegant, but bring

Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change.

Milton, P. L.

TO MIX.† v. n.

1. To be united into one mass, not by junction of surfaces, but by mutual intermixture of parts.

But is there yet no other way, besides

These painful passages, how we may come

To death, and mix with our connatural dust?

Milton, P. L.

If spirits embrace,

Total they mix, union of pure with pure

Desiring; or restrain'd conveyance need

As flesh to mix with flesh, or soul with soul.

Milton, P. L.

2. To be joined, in a general sense.

The evil soon,

Driven back, redounded as a flood on those

From whom it sprung, impossible to mix

With blessedness.

Milton, P. L.

MIXEN.† n. s. [mixen, Saxon; what is mixed together.] A dunghill; a lustral.

The sunne that shineth on the myzene.

Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

I thinke the clowne, that drives the mixen cart,

Hath better hap then princes, such as I:

No state of fortune casts him downe.

Mir, for Mag. p. 46.

That mixen of ill-contrived forgeries, which perhaps was made before Bede's time.

Bp. Lloyd, Hist. of Ch. Gov. in Engl. Pref.

MIXER.  n. s.* [from mix.] One who mixes; a mingler.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

MIXT.  part. of mix.* See TO MIX.

MIXTILINEAR.  adj.* [mixtus and linearis, Latin.] Consisting of a line, or lines, part straight, and part curved.

These three triangles are different from each other; the rectilinear CEc being less than the mixilinear CET, whose sides are the three increments above mentioned; and this still less than the triangle CET. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 34.

MIXTION. n. s. [mixtion, French; from mix.] Mixture; confusion of one thing with another.

Others perceiving this rule to fall short, have pieced it out by the mixture of vacuity among bodies, believing it is that which makes one rarer than another. Digby on Bodies.

They are not to be lightly past over as elementary or subterraneous mixtions. Brown.

MIXTLY. † [from mix.] With coalition of different parts into one.

Not to proceed precisely, or merely, according to the laws and customs either of England or Scotland; but mixtly, according to the instructions by your majesty to be set down, after the imitation and precedent of the council of the marches, here in England erected, upon the union of Wales. Bacon, Articles on the Union of Eng. and Scotland.

MIXTURE. † n. s. [mixture, old French; mixture, Latin.]

1. The act of mixing; the state of being mixed.

O happy mixture, wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as well as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us! Hooker.

Those liquors are expelled out of the body which, by their mixture, convert the aliment into an animal liquid. Arbuthnot.

I, by baleful furies led,
 With monstrous mixture stain'd my mother's bed. Pope.

2. A mass formed by mingled ingredients. Come via! — What if this mixture do not work at all? Shakspeare.

While we live in this world, where good and bad men are blended together, and where there is also a mixture of good and evil wisely distributed by God, to serve the ends of his providence. Atterbury, Sermon.

3. That which is added and mixed.

Neither can God himself be otherwise understood, than as a mind free and disentangled from all corporeal mixtures, perceiving and moving all things. Stillingfleet.

Cicero doubts whether it were possible for a community to exist, that had not a prevailing mixture of piety in its constitution. Addison, Freeholder.

MIZMAZE. † n. s. [A cant word, formed from maze by reduplication.] A maze; a labyrinth.

He hath walked us through the whole labyrinth and mizmaze of this life, shewing us the knowledge of using it well. Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1687), p. 69.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books, and the clue to lead them through the mizmaze of variety of opinions and authors to truth. Locke.

MIZZEN. n. s. [mezaen, Dutch.]

The mizzen is a mast in the stern or back part of a ship: in some large ships there are two such masts, that standing next the main mast is called the main mizzen, and the other near the poop the bonaventure mizzen: the length of a mizzen mast is half that of the main mast, or the same with that of the maintop mast from the quarterdeck, and the length of the mizzen topmast is half that. Bailey.

A commander at sea had his leg fractured by the fall of his mizzen topmast. Wiseman, Surgery.

To MIZZLE. * v. n. To rain small rain.

See To MISLE, and MEAZLING.

Soon as your oaken pipe begins to sound

Their ivory lutes lay by. Spenser.

With oxbows and oxyokes, with other things mo,

For oxten and horseteen in plough for to go. Tusser.

Mo. adv. Further; longer. Obsolete.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo

Of dumps so dull and heavy;

The frauds of men were ever so,

Since summer was first leafy. Shakspeare.

To MOAN. † v. a. [from mænan, Saxon, to grieve. Anciently written mane or mene; like the Saxon original.] To lament; to deplore.

Edward sore it ment. R. of Brunne, p. 255.

Ye floods, ye woods, ye echoes, moan,

My dear Columbo dead and gone. Prior.

To MOAN. † v. n. To grieve; to make lamentation. In the following passage from Shakspeare, the old copies read means, the same as moans. See the etymology of the verb active.

Thus she moans:

Asleep, my love?

What, dead, my dove? Shaks. Mids N. Dream.

The gen'rous band redressive search'd

Into the horrors of the gloomy jail,

Unpitied and unheard, where misery moans.

Thomson.

MOAN. n. s. [from the verb.] Lamentation; audible sorrow; grief expressed in words or cries.

I have disabled mine estate,

By shewing something a more swelling port,

Than my faint means would grant continuance;

Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd

From such a noble rate. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

The fresh stream ran by her, and murmur'd her moans:

The salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones. Shakspeare.

Sullen moans,

Hollow groans,

And cries of tortur'd ghosts. Pope, Ode St. Cecilia.

MO'ANFUL. * adj. [moan and full.] Lamentable; expressing sorrow; exciting sorrow.

Look upon all the sad moanful objects in the world, betwix whom all our compassion is wont to be divided. Hammond, Works, iv. 580.

Do not grudge, or make moanful complaint.

Barrow, Sermon on Acts, x. 42.

MO'ANFULLY. * adv. [from moanful.] With lamentation.

This our poets are ever moanfully singing.

Barrow on Content. (ed. 1685,) p. 135.

MOAT. n. s. [motte, French, a mound; mota, low Latin.] A canal of water round a house or castle for defence.

The castle I found of good strength, having a great moat round about it, the work of a noble gentleman, of whose unthriftiness he had bought it. Sidney.

The fortress thrice himself in person storm'd;
 Your valour bravely did th' assault sustain,
 And fill'd the moats and ditches with the slain. Dryden.

No walls were yet, nor fence, nor mote, nor mound,
 Nor drum was heard. Dryden, Ovid.

To MOAT. v. a. [motte, French, from the noun.] To surround with canals by way of defence.

I will presently to St. Luke's; there at the moated Grange resides this dejected Mariana.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

An arm of Lethe, with a gentle flow,
 The palace moats, and o'er the pebbles creeps,
 And with soft murmurs calls the coming sleeps. Dryden.

He sees he can hardly approach greatness, but, as a moated castle, he must first pass the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden.

MOB. † n. s. [contracted from mobile, Lat.

Mr. Malone believes the word mobile to have been first introduced into our language about 1690, and to have been soon abbreviated into mob. T. Brown, he says, in 1690, uses both the Latin word at length, and the abbreviation; and in the preface to Cleomenes, two years afterwards, Dryden uses mob with a kind of apology. Note on Dryden's Pref. to Don Sebastian. Mobile, however, had certainly been in use long before 1690, as the examples from South and L'Estrange prove. The rabble which attended the partisans of the earl of Shaftesbury, at the latter end of Charles the Second's reign, are said by Mr. Tollet to have been first called "mobile vulgus," and afterwards by contraction the mob; and ever since the word mob has become proper English.] The crowd; a tumultuous rout.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawner; a very monster in a Bartholomew-fair, for the mob to gaze at. Dryden.

Dreams are but interludes, which fancy makes, When monarch reason sleeps, this mimic wakes: Compounds a medley of disjointed things,

A court of coblers, and a mob of kings. Dryden.

A cluster of mob were making themselves merry with their betters. Addison, Freeholder.

MOB. † n. s. [from mobile. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the verb mob, of which Dr. Johnson has taken no notice in this sense.] A kind of female undress for the head.

Kitty repeated without book the eight best lines in the play: went in our mobs to the dumb man: told me my lover's name, &c.

Addison, Spect. 323.

The ordinary morning head-dress of ladies continued to be distinguished by the name of mob, to almost the end of the reign of George the Second.

Malone, Note on Hamlet.

In the counties of Essex and Middlesex, this morning cap has always been called a mob, and not a mob. Stevens, Note on Hamlet.

To MOB. * v. a. [adopted perhaps from mob, to dress carelessly; of which the etymology is uncertain.] To wrap up, as in a veil or cowl; hence the mob-cap of women.

Swarms of men that went gossiping up and down, telling odd stories to the people, as old wives and nurses do to children, having most of them chins as smooth as women's, and their faces mob'd in hoods and long coats like petticoats.

More on the Seven Churches. (1669.) Pref. b. 2.

To Mob. v. a. [from the noun.] To harass or overbear by tumult.

MO'BISH.† adj. [from mob.] Mean; done after the manner of the mob.

This mobbish act was thought an artifice of the abjurors in the council of state.

Kennet's Regist. (1728.) p. 52.

Mr. Fox treated the associations for prosecuting these libels, as tending to prevent the improvement of the human mind, and as a mobbish tyranny.

Burke, Obs. on the Cond. of the Minority. (1793.)

MO'BBY. n. s. An American drink made of potatoes.

MO'BLE. n. s. [mobile, Latin.] The populace; the rout; the mob.

Long experience has found it true of the unthinking mobile, that the closer they shut their eyes the wider they open their hands. South, Sermon.

The mobile are uneasy without a ruler, they are restless with one.

L'Estrange.

MO'BLE.* adj. [mobile, French.] Movable. Obsolete.

To treat of any star

Fyxt or else mobil. Skelton, Poems, p. 156.

MOBILITY. n. s. [mobilité, French; mobilitas, Latin.]

1. Mobility is the power of being moved.

Locke.

A rod or bar of iron, having stood long in a window, or elsewhere, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, or in any other kind of liquid substance, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of unquietude.

Watson on Education.

The present age hath attempted perpetual motions, whose revolutions might out-last the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

You tell, it is ingentive, active force, Mobility, or native power to move Words, which mean nothing.

Blackmore.

2. Nimbleness; activity.

The Romans had the advantage by the bulk of their ships, and the fleet of Antiochus in the swiftness and mobility of theirs, which served them in great stead in the flight.

Arbutnot.

3. [In cant language.] The populace.

She singled you out with her eye as commander in chief of the mobility.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

4. Fickleness; inconstancy. Ainsworth.

To MO'BLE.† v. a. [sometimes written mable, perhaps by a ludicrous allusion to the French je m'habille. Dr. Johnson. — Or from the provincial word mab; whence perhaps to mob, a verb hitherto overlooked.] † To wrap up, as in a hood.

But who, ah woe! hath seen the mobled queen, Run barefoot up and down. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The moon does mobble up herself.

Shirley, Gentleman of Venice.

MO'CHO-STONE. n. s. [from Mocha, therefore more properly Mocha-stone.]

Mocha-stones are related to the agat, of a clear horny grey, with declinations representing mosses, shrubs, and branches, black, brown, red, in the substance of the stone.

Woodward.

To MOCK.† v. a. [mocquer, French; mocio, Welsh; μακάω, μακάμαι, Greek.]

1. To deride; to laugh at; to ridicule.

All the regions
Do seemingly revolt; and who resist
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Many thousand widows

Shall this his mock, mock out of their dear husbands;

Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down.

Shakespeare.

We'll dishorn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor. Shakespeare.

I am as one mock'd of his neighbour; the just,
upright man is mock'd to scorn. Job, xii. 4.

2. To deride by imitation; to mimic in contempt.

I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance,
For mocking marriage with a dame of France.

Shakespeare.

3. To defeat; to elude.

My father is gone into his grave,
And with his spirit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raise out
Rotten opinion. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

4. To fool; to tantalize; to play on contemptuously.

He will not
Mock us with his blest sight, thence snatch him
hence,
Soon we shall see our hope return. Milton, P. R.

Why do I overlive?
Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain? Milton, P. L.

Heav'n's fuller influence mocks our dazzl'd sight,

Too great its brightness, and too strong its light.

Prior.

To Mock. v. n. To make contemptuous sport.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form.

Shakespeare.

A stallion horse is as a mocking friar; he neigheth under every one. Eccles. xxiii. 6.

When thou mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed? Job.

Mock. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Ridicule; act of contempt; leer; sneer; gibe; flirt.

Tell the pleasant prince this mock of his
Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Oh, 'tis the spight of hell, the fiend's arch mock,
To lip a wanton, and suppose her chaste. Shaks.

Fools make a mock at sin. Prov. xiv. 9.

What shall be the portion of those who have affronted God, derided his word, and made a mock of every thing that is sacred? Tillotson.

Colin makes mock at all her piteous smart,
A lass that Cicly hight, had won his heart. Gay.

2. Imitation; mimicry.

Now reach a strain, my lute,
Above her mock, or be for ever mute. Crashaw.

Mock. adj. False; counterfeit; not real.

The mock astrologer, El astrologo fingido.

Dryden.

That superiour greatness and mock majesty,
which is ascribed to the prince of fallen angels,
is admirably preserved. Spectator.

MOCK-PRIVET. } n. s. Plants. Ainsworth.

MOCK-WILLOW. }

MOCKABLE. adj. [from mock.] Exposed to derision.

Those that are good manners at the court, are as ridiculous in the country, as the behaviour of the country is most mockable at the court.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

MOCKAGE.* n. s. [from mock.] Mockery.

Not now in use.

Most commonly it is used in mockage.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 160. b.

A mere mockage, a counterfeit charm, to no purpose. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 721.

MO'CKEL.† adj. [The same with mickle. See MICKLE. This word is variously written mickle, michel, mochil, mochel, muckle. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson here cites an example from Spenser, in which the word is not mockel, but mochel. Of mochel I have never met with any instance.] Much; many.

MO'CKER. n. s. [from mock.]

1. One who mocks; a scorner; a scoffer; a derider.

Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are.

Shakespeare.

Let them have a care how they intrude upon so great and holy an ordinance, in which God is so seldom mocked but it is to the mockers' confusion.

South, Sermon.

2. A deceiver; an elusory impostor, MO'CKERY. n. s. [mocquerie, French.]

1. Derision; scorn; sportive insult.

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen,
The laughing-stock of fortune's mockeries,
Am the only daughter of a king and queen.

Spenser, F. Q.

Why should publick mockery in print be a better test of truth than severe railing sarcasms?

Watts.

Grace at meals is now generally so performed as to look more like a mockery upon devotion, than any solemn application of the mind unto God. Law.

2. Ridicule; contemptuous merriment.

A new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery; an art of contradiction by way of scorn, wherewith we were long since forewarned. Hooker.

3. Sport; subject of laughter.

What cannot be preserv'd when fortune takes,
Patience her injury a mockery makes.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Of the holy place they made a mockery.

2 Mac. viii. 17.

4. Vanity of attempt; delusory labour; vain effort.

It is as the air, invulnerable;
And our vain blows malicious mockery.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

5. Imitation; counterfeit appearance; vain show.

To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shaks.
What though no friends in sable weeds appear,
Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
And bear about the mockery of woe
To midnight dances. Pope, Miscel.

MO'CKING.* n. s. [from mock.] Scorn; derision; insult.

Therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries.

Ezek. xxii. 4.

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings.

Heb. xi. 36.

MO'CKING-BIRD. n. s. [mocking and bird.] An American bird, which imitates the note of other birds.

MO'CKING-STOCK.† n. s. [mocking and stock.] A but for merriment.

that perceive them.

Transl. of Bullinger's Sermon. (1537.) p. 579.

MO'CKINGLY.† adv. [from mock.] In contempt; petulantly; with insult; by mocking.

Huloet.

MO'DAL. adj. [modale, French; modalis, Latin.] Relating to the form or mode, not the essence,

When we speak of faculties of the soul, we assert not with the schools their real distinction from it, but only a modal diversity.

Glanville, Scepis.

MODALITY. n. s. [from modal.] Accidental difference; modal accident.

The motions of the mouth, by which the voice is discriminated, are the natural elements of speech; and the application of them in their several compositions, or words made of them, to signify things, or the modalities of things, and so to serve for communication of notions, is artificial. Holder.

MO'NDER.* n. s. [moer, Danish, a girl; modde, moddeken, Teut. the same. See MAUTHER.] A wench, or girl. Hu-luoet, and Sherwood. Yet used in some counties; as in Norfolk and Suffolk, according to Grose; and also applied, he says, to some female animals.

MODE.† n. s. [mode, French; modus, Lat.] This word seems to have been little used before the middle of the seventeenth century. For P. Heylin calls it, in 1656, new and uncouth.]

1. External variety; accidental discrimination; accident.

A mode is that which cannot subsist in and of itself, but is always esteemed as belonging to and subsisting by, the help of some substance, which, for that reason, is called its subject. Watts, Logic.

Few allow mode to be called a being in the same perfect sense as a substance is, and some modes have evidently more of real entity than others. Watts, Logic.

2. Gradation; degree.

What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme, The mole's dim curtain, and the linx's beam; Of smell, the headlong lioness between, And bound sagacious, on the tainted green. Pope.

3. Manner; method; form; fashion.

Our Saviour beheld
A table richly spread in regal mode,
With dishes pil'd. Milton, P. R.
The duty itself being resolved upon, the mode of doing it may easily be found.

Bp. Taylor, Guide to a Penitent.

4. State; quality.

My death
Changes the mode; for what in me was purchas'd,
Falls upon thee in a much fairer sort,
For thou the garland wear'st successively. Shakspeare.

5. Fashion; custom.

There are certain garbs and modes of speaking, which vary with the times, the fashion of our clothes being not more subject to alteration than that of our speech. Denham.

We are to prefer the blessings of Providence before the splendid curiosities of mode and imagination. L'Estrange.

They were invited from all parts; and the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age. Temple.

As we see on coins the different faces of persons, we see too their different habits and dresses, according to the mode that prevailed.

Addison, on Medals.

Though wrong the mode, comply; more sense is shewn

In wearing others' follies than your own. Young.
If faith itself has different dresses worn,
What wonder modes in wit should take their turn? Pope.

6. A kind of thin silk, worn by ladies.

MO'DEL. n. s. [modelle, French; modulus, Latin.]

1. A representation in little of something made or done.

I'll draw the form and model of our battle;
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small strength.

Shakspeare.

You have the models of several ancient temples, though the temples and the gods are perished.

Addison.

2. A copy to be imitated.

A fault it would be if some king should build his mansion-house by the model of Solomon's palace.

Hooker.

They cannot see sin in those means they use, with intent to reform to their models what they call religion.

King Charles.

3. A mould; any thing which shows or gives the shape of that which it incloses.

Nothing can we call our own but death;

And that small model of the barren earth,

Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

4. Standard; that by which any thing is measured.

As he who presumes steps into the throne of God, so he that despairs measures Providence by his own little contracted model.

South.

5. In Shakspeare it seems to have two unexampled senses. Something representative.

I have commended to his goodness

The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter.

Shakspeare.

6. Something small and diminutive; for module, a small measure: which, perhaps, is likewise the meaning of the example affixed to the third sense.

England! model to thy inward greatness,

Like little body with a mighty heart. Shakspeare.

To MO'DEL. v. a. [modeler, French.] To plan; to shape; to mould; to form; to delineate.

When they come to model heaven

And calculate the stars, how they will wield

The mighty frame.

Milton, P. L.

MO'DERATION.† n. s. [moderatio, Latin.]

1. Forbearance of extremity; the contrary temper to party violence; state of keeping a due mean betwixt extremes.

Was it the purpose of these churches, which abolished all popish ceremonies, to come back again to the middle point of evenness and moderation?

Hooker.

A zeal in things pertaining to God, according to knowledge, and yet duly tempered with candor and prudence, is the true notion of that much talked of, much misunderstood virtue, moderation.

Alterbury.

In moderation placing all my glory,

While totes call me whigs, and whigs a tory. Pope.

2. Calmness of mind; equanimity. [moderation, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Moderation is not derived from the word medium, but from modus; and that from the Hebrew madad, he measured; or middah, a rule or measure; and in the Greek is styled μέτρον, from μέτρον, a measure: whence it is evident, that moderation, properly so called, and in the moral sense of the word, belongs only to things in which we are subject to a vicious excess; or to act beyond that rule or measure, which Scripture, or religion, doth prescribe for the due regulation of our actions and passions; and it respects first and principally the government of our passions; whence the due government of them is by philosophers styled μετριοτης, the moderation of our passions. Whitby, Paraphr. on the N. Test. Phil. iv. 5.]

Let your moderation [in old translations, softness, modesty, patience, gentleness.] be known unto all men,

Equally inur'd

By moderation either state to bear,

Prosperous, or adverse.

Milton, P. L.

Though hard their fate, A cruise of water, and an ear of corn, Yet still they grudg'd that modicum. Dryden.

MODIFI'ABLE.† adj. [modifiable, Fr. Cotgrave.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.

It appears to be more difficult to conceive a distinct, visible image in the uniform, invariable, essence of God, than in variously modifiable matter; but the manner how I see either still escapes my comprehension. Locke.

MODI'FICABLE. adj. [from modify.] Diversifiable by various modes.

To MODI'FICATE.* v. a. [from modify.] To qualify.

The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever, not only to the modiflicated eternity of his mediatorship, so long as there shall be need of regal power to subdue the enemies of God's elect; but also to the complete eternity of the duration of his humanity, which for the future is co-eternal to his divinity.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

MODIFICATION. n. s. [modification, Fr.] The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of external qualities or mode.

The chief of all signs is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, the letters of the alphabet, formed by the motions of the mouth.

Holder.

The phenomena of colours in refracted or reflected light, are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impressed, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow.

Newton, Opticks.

If these powers of cogitation, volition and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows that they proceed from some cognitive substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit.

Bentley.

TO MODIFY. † v. a. [modifier, Fr.]

1. To change the external qualities or accidents of any thing; to shape.

Yet there is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words through the voluble motions of the organs that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it.

Holder.

The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fell upon the paper, did, without any confine of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with one uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges.

Newton, Opticks.

2. To soften; to moderate; to qualify.

A king after the rule is holde
To modifie, and to adressed,
His yeftes upon such largesse,

L'Estrange.

MODILLON. † n. s. [French; modiglione, Ital. modiolus, Lat.]

Modillons, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the Corinthian and composite orders, and serve to support the projecture of the larmier or drip: this part must be distinguished from the great model, which is the diameter of the pillar; for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillons, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabrick.

Harris.

The modillons or dentell make a noble show by their graceful projections.

Spectator.

The entablature, and all its parts and ornaments, architrave, frieze, cornice, triglyph, metopes, modillions, and the rest, have each an use.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

MODISH. † adj. [from mode.] The vulgar use of modish has, I suppose, disgraced it. It would not, now, be endured in polite conversation, much less in polite writing. Bp. Hurd.] Fashionable; formed according to the reigning custom.

For clothes, I leave them to the discretion of the modish, whether of our own or the French nation.

Phillips, Theatr. Poetarum, (1675.) Pref.

But you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs, and wanton dances grac'd.

Congreve, Juv.

Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city; the modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more virtuous than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous.

Addison, Spect.

MODISHLY. adv. [from modish.] Fashionably.

Young children should not be much perplexed about putting off their hats, and making legs modishly.

Each charm of modulated sound.

Anon.

MODULATION. † n. s. [from modulate; modulation, French.]

1. The act of forming any thing to certain proportion.

The more neere they approached to that temperance and subtle modulation, of the saide superiour bodies, the more perfect and commendable is their dauncing.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 65.

The number of the simple original minerals have not been rightly fixt: the matter of two or more kinds being mixed together, and by the different proportion and modulation of that matter variously diversified, have been reputed all different kinds.

Woodward.

The speech, as it is a sound resulting from the modulation of the air, has most affinity to the spirit, but, as it is uttered by the tongue, has immediate cognation with the body, and so is the fittest instrument to manage a commerce between the invisible powers of human souls clothed in flesh.

Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Sound modulated; harmony; melody.

Innumerable songsters, in the freshning shade,
Their modulations mix, mellifluous.

Thomson, Spring.

Touch with lightest moment of impulse,
His free will, to her own inclining left
In even scale. Milton, P. L.

He is a capable judge; can hear both sides with 5 H 2

an indifferent ear; is determined only by the moments of truth, and so retracts his past errors.

Norris.

3. An indivisible particle of time.

If I would go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Winds.

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment,
The very firstings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The imaginary reasoning of brutes is not a distinct reasoning, but performed in a physical moment.

Hale.

While I a moment name, a moment's past;
I'm nearer death in this verse than the last;
What then is to be done? Be wise with speed,
A foot at forty is a fool indeed.

Young.

Yet thus receiving and returning bliss
In this great moment, in this golden now,
When every trace of what, or when, or how,
Should from my soul by raging love be torn.

Prior.

One who lends money to others; one who raises money for others.

In all the corporations, all the open boroughs, indeed in every district of the kingdom, there is some leading man, some agitator, some wealthy merchant, or considerable manufacturer, some active attorney, some popular preacher, some moneylender, &c. who is followed by the whole flock. Burke, Sp. on the Durat. of Parliaments.

Mo'NEYLESS.† adj. [from money.] Wanting money; penniless.

Paltering the free and moneyless power of discipline with a carnal satisfaction by the purse.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

The strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents received out of lands in moneyless times. Swift.

Mo'NEYMATTER. n. s. [money and matter.]
Account of debtor and creditor.

What if you and I Nick should enquire how monymatters stand between us?

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Mo'NEYSKRIVENER. n. s. [money and scri- verer.] One who raises money for others.

Suppose a young unexperienced man in the hands of monyscriveners: such fellows are like your Wire-drawing mills, if they get hold of a man's finger, they will pull in his whole body at last. Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Mo'NEYSPINNER.* n. s. A small spider, vulgarly so called; and fancifully held to prognosticate the receipt of money, or good luck, to those on whom they are seen to crawl.

Mo'NEYSWORTH. n. s. [money and worth.]
Something valuable; something that will bring money.

There is either money or monysworth in all the controversies of life; for we live in a mercenary world, and it is the price of all things in it.

L'Estrange.

Mo'NEYWORT. n. s. A plant.

Mo'NGCORN.† n. s. [mang, Sax. and corn.]
Mixed corn; as, wheat and rye; mis-cellane, or maslin.

From off the mongcorn heap.

Bp. Hall, Sat. B. 5. S. 2.

Mo'NGER.† n. s. [mangepe, mongep, Sax.
a trader, from mangian, to trade.] A dealer; a seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity to express a seller of that commodity: as, a fish- monger; and sometimes a meddler in any thing: as, a whoremonger; a newsmonger.

Dr. Johnson.—Lye makes a similar remark, overpassing the use of monger by itself; which Wicliffe, I think, somewhere uses in the good sense of a trader, or merchant; and which Ben Jonson certainly employs in the contempuous meaning of a low trader.

Here was no subtle device to get a wench!

This Chanon has a brave pate of his own,
A shaven pate! and a right monger, y'faith!
This was his plot! B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

Do you know me? — Yes, excellent well, you are a fish-monger. Shakspeare.

The impatient states-monger
Could now contain himself no longer. Hudibras.

MO'NGREL.† adj. [as mongcorn, from man, Saxon, or mengen, to mix, Germ.] Of a mixed breed; commonly written mungrel for mangrel.

There is a mungrel dialect, composed of Italian and French, and some Spanish words are also in it; which they call Franco.

Hovell, Instruct. For Trav. (1642), p. 139.

This zealot

Is of a mongrel, divers kind,
Clerick before, and lay behind. Hudibras.

Ye mongrel work of heaven, with human shapes,
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mongrel mischievous. Dryden.

His friendship still to few confin'd,
Were ways of the middling kind;
No foals of rank, or mongrel breed,
Who fain wou'd pass for lords indeed.

Swift, Miscell.

MO'NGREL.* n. s. Any thing of mixed breed.

His two faculties of serving-man and solicitor should compound into one mongrel.

Base, grovelling, worthless wretches;
Mongrels in faction; poor faint-hearted traitors.

Addison.

MO'NIED.* Sec MONEYED.

MO'NIMENT.* n. s. [monimento, Ital. monumentum, or monumentum, Latin, from monéo.]

1. A memorial; a record.

That as a sacred symbole it may dwell
In her sonne's flesh, to mind revengement,
And be for all chaste dames an endless moniment.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. ii. 10.

2. A mark; a superscription; an image.

Some others were new driven, and distent
Into great ingoes, and to wedges square;
Some in round plates withouten moniment.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 5.

To MO'NISH.† v. a. [monéo, Latin; a contraction of admonish. Dr. Johnson. — It is not a contraction, but the Saxon verb monian, monegian; and is old in our language; probably in use before admonish. It was written also monest, as well as monish.] To warn; to counsel; to admonish.

For I you praise and eke moneste,
Nought to refuse our requeste.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 3579.

Now worthy women, in this balade short, —
Of charite I monishe and exhorte.

Chaucer, Compl. of Cress. 195.

Monish him gently, which shall make him both willing to amend, and glad to go forward in love.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Here are all degrees to be monished.

Homilies, Sermon. iii. Against Adultery.

MO'NISHER. n. s. [from monish.] An admonisher; a monitor.

MO'NISHMENT.* n. s. [from monish.] Admonishment; counsel given. Sherwood.

MONITION. n. s. [monitio, Latin; monition, Fr.]

1. Information; hint.

We have no visible monition of the returns of any other periods, such as we have of the day, by successive light and darkness. Holder on Time.

2. Instruction; document.

Unruly ambition is deaf, not only to the advice of friends, but to the counsels and monitions of reason itself. L'Estrange.

Then after sage monitions from his friends,
His talents to employ for nobler ends,
He turns to politics his dangerous wit. Swift.

MO'NITIVE.* adj. [monitus, Lat.] Admonitory; conveying useful instruction.
These evils are exemplary and monitive.

Barrow, vol. ii. S. 12.

MO'NITOR. n. s. [Latin.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty; one who gives useful hints. It is used of an upper scholar in a school commissioned by the master to look to the boys in his absence.

You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent: be but his scholar, and you are safe. Bacon.

It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have these notions also firm and untainted, to carry his monitor in his bosom, his law in his heart, and to have such a conscience as might be its own casuist.

South, Serm.

We can but divine who it is that speaks;
whether Persius himself or his friend and monitor,
or a third person. Dryden.

The pains that come from the necessities of nature, are monitors to us to beware of greater mischiefs. Locke.

MO'NITORY. adj. [monitoire, Fr. monitorius, Lat.] Conveying useful instruction;
giving admonition.

Losses, miscarriages, and disappointments, are monitory and instructive. L'Estrange.

He is so taken up still, in spite of the monitory hint in my essay, with particular men, that he neglects mankind. Pope.

MO'NITORY. n. s. Admonition; warning.
A king of Hungary took a bishop in battle,
and kept him prisoner; whereupon the pope writ a monitory to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church. Bacon.

MO'NITRESS.* n. s. [from monitor.] A female monitor; an instructress.

Thus far our pretty and ingenious monitress;
were I to say any thing after her, my case would be that of the tiresome actor. Student, ii. 367.

MONK.† n. s. [munck, Su. Goth. monéc, Saxon; monachus, Latin; μοναχός.] One of a religious community bound by vows to certain observances.

'Twould prove the verity of certain words,
Spoke by a holy monk. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
Abdemeleck, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a melancholy Mahometan monk.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The dronish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,

Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
And nestle in their ancient hives again. Rome.

Monks in some respects, agree with regulars, as in the substantial vows of religion; but in other respects monks and regulars differ; for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to so strict a rule of life as monks are. Ayliffe, Parerg.

MO'NKEY.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson considers the word as monikin, a little man. Pennant derives it from monea, a name which the Malayes give to a particular species of the animal among them. Monicchio for a monkey is old in the Italian language.]

1. An ape; a baboon; a jackanapes. An animal bearing some resemblance of man.

One of them shewed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey: Tubal, it was my turquoise; I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys. Shakspeare.

More new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, destroy their young ones by senseless fondness.

Locke on Education.

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine,

But apes and monkeys are the gods within.

Granville.

2. A word of contempt, or slight kindness.

This is the monkey's own giving out; she is persuaded I will marry her. Shakspeare, Othello.

Poor monkey! how wilt thou do for a father?

Shakspeare.

MO'NKERY.† n. s. [from monk.] The monastic life.

Heresy in Britaine ariseth of monkery.

Bale, Acts of Eng. Vol. P. i. fol. 19.

Monkeries then were as far distant from those of our days, as the moon is distant from the earth.

Harmor, Tr. of Beza, (1587), p. 316.

Vows of chastity, monkery, and a solitary life.

Burton, Anat. of Md. p. 657.

Neither do I meddle with their evangelical perfection of vows, nor the dangerous servitude of their rash and impotent votaries, nor the inconveniences of their monkery.

Bp. Hall.

MO'NKHOD. n. s. [monk and hood.] The character of a monk.

He had left off his monkhood too, and was no longer obliged to them. Atterbury.

MO'NKISH. adj. [from monk.] Monastick;
pertaining to monks; taught by monks.

Those public charities are a greater ornament to this city than all its wealth, and do more real honour to the reformed religion, than redounds to the church of Rome from all those monkish and superstitious foundations of which she vainly boasts. Atterbury, Sermon.

Rise, rise, Roscommon, see the Blenheim
muse,

The dull constraint of monkish rhyme refuse.

Smith.

MONKS-HOOD. n. s. [consolida regalis.] A plant. Ainsworth.

MONKS-RHUBARB. n. s. A species of dock:
its roots are used in medicine.

MONO'CEROS.* } n. s. [μόνος, single, and MONO'CEROT. } κέρας, horn, Gr.] The unicorn.

Jacob de Dondis, in his catalogue of simples, hath ambergreece, the bone in a stag's horn, monocerot's horn. Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 376.

MO'NOCHORD. n. s. [μόνος and χορδή.]

1. An instrument of one string: as, the trumpet marine. Harris.

2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of sounds:
the ancients made use of it to determine the proportion of sounds to one another. When the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unisons; but if as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diapentes; if they were as four to three, they called them fourths or diatessérons; if as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce major; but if as six to five, then they called it a demi-diton, or a tierce minor;

and, lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a demiton or dieze; the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord.

Harris.

MONO'CULAR. } adj. [μόνος and οculus.]
MONO'COULOUS. } One-eyed; having only one eye.

He was well served who, going to cut down an ancient white hawthorn tree, which, because she budded before others, might be an occasion of superstition, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes, and made him monocular.

Hovel.

Those of China repute the rest of the world monocular.

Glanville, Scaptis.

MONODY.† n. s. [μοναδία, Gr. monodie, Fr.]

A poem sung by one person, not in dialogue. Dr. Johnson. — Of this usage Dr. Johnson gives no example. Our old lexicography calls a monody, "a mournful song." Cockeram. This is the sense of the word among the ancients: a ditty sung by the person alone, to vent his grief. Among the French it obtained the distinction of "chant lugubre d'église, qui est toujours sur le même ton." Lacombe.

It is called a monody from a Greek word signifying a mournful or funeral song sung by a single person.

Bp. Newton, Note on Milton's Lycidas.

MONO'GAMIST.† n. s. [μόνος and γάμος; monogame, Fr.] One who disallows second marriages.

I maintained with Whiston, that it was unlawful for a priest of the church of England, after the death of his first wife, to take a second; or, to express it in one word, I valued myself upon being a strict monogamist.

Goldsmith, Vic. of Wakefield, ch. 2.

MONO'GAMY.† n. s. [monogamie, Fr. μόνος and γάμος, Gr.] Marriage of one wife.

If he had ever read the book following of monogamy, he might have found his Tertullian then monotonizing, to upbraid the true and catholic church with the usual practice and allowance of the second marriages of their bishops.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 106.

MONOGRAM.† n. s. [μόνος and γράμμα, Gr.; monogramme, Fr.]

1. A cypher, a character compounded of several letters.

It came

To be described by a monogram.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. A picture drawn in lines without colour.

A kind of first draught or ground colours only, and monogram of life. Hammond, Works, iv. 571.

MONOGRAMMAL.* adj. [from monogram.] Sketching in the manner of a monogram.

Though it be but as it were a monogrammal description, and a kind of rude draught as it were with a coal. Fotherby, Atheism. (1622), p. 355.

MONOLOGUE. n. s. [μόνος and λόγος; monologue, Fr.] A scene in which a person of the drama speaks by himself; a soliloquy.

He gives you an account of himself, and of his returning from the country, in monologue; to which unnatural way of narration Terence is subject in all his plays. Dryden.

MONO'MACHY.† n. s. [μονομαχία; μόνος, and μάχη, Gr. monomachie, old Fr.] A duel; a single combat.

In those ancient monomachies and combats they were searched, [that] they had no magical charms.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 54.

Abner invites his rival in honour to a tragical play, (as he terms it,) a monomachy of twelve single combatants on either part.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. D. 2. C. 2.

MONOME. n. s. [monome, Fr.] In algebra, a quantity that has but one denomination or name; as, a, b, aab, aabb.

Harris.

MONOPATHY.* n. s. [μόνος, and πάθεια, Gr.] Solitary sensibility; sole suffering.

By this Spanish proverb, every one calculateth his nativity, and sentenceth his own future fate, by crying at his birth; not coming only from the body's monopathy, or sole suffering by change of its warm quarters; but, according to some, from sympathy with the divining soul, that knoweth itself for a time banished from the Father of Spirits.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. (1654), p. 32.

MONOPETALOUS. adj. [monopetale, Fr. μόνος, and πέταλον.] It is used for such flowers as are formed out of one leaf, howsoever they may be seemingly cut into many small ones, and those fall off together. Quincy.

MONOPOLIST.† n. s. [monopoleur, Fr. Our own word was formerly monopoler. Cotgrave and Sherwood. Then monopolizer.] One who by engrossing or patent obtains the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

Joy is an import; Joy is an exchange;

Joy flies monopolists; it calls for two.

Young, Night Th. 2.

To MONO'POLIZE.† v. a. μόνος, and πωλέω, Gr.] monopolizer, French.] To engross, so as to have the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

As if this age had monopolized all goodness to itself.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 256.

He has such a prodigious trade, that if there is not some stop put, he will monopolize; nobody will sell a yard of drapery, or mercery ware, but himself.

Arbutnot.

MONO'POLIZER.* n. s. [from monopolize.] A monopolist.

Merchants have been prohibited to unlade their goods in such ports as were for their own advantage, and forced to bring them to those places which were most for the advantages of the monopolizers and projectors.

Remonstrance in 1642, Welwood's Mem. p. 298. There was in it the fraud of some old patentees and monopolizers in the trade of bookselling.

Milton, Areopagitica.

MONOPOLY. n. s. [μονοπωλία; monopole, French; μόνος and πωλέω.] The exclusive privilege of selling any thing.

If I had a monopoly on't they would have part on't.

Shakespeare.

How could he answer't, should the state think fit

To question a monopoly of it?

Cowley.

One of the most oppressive monopolies imaginable; all others can concern only something without us, but this fastens upon our nature, yea upon our reason.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Shakespeare rather write happily than knowingly and justly; and Jonson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, yet seemed to envy to posterity that knowledge, and to make a monopoly of his learning.

Dryden, Juv.

MONO'PROTE. n. s. [μόνος and πρῶτος.] A noun used only in some one oblique case.

Clarke, Lat. Gram.

MONOSTICH.† n. s. [μονόστιχον.] A composition of one verse.

The drugs and spices here so perfumed the place, that it made me since give the better credit to that monostich of an old poet, "Auras madentes Persicorum aromatum."

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 164.

MONOSYLLA'BICAL. adj. [from monosyllable.] Consisting of words of one syllable.

MONOSYLLABLE. n. s. [monosyllabe, French; μόνος and συλλαβή.] A word of only one syllable.

My name of Ptolemy!

It is so long it asks an hour to write it:

I'll change it into Jove or Mars!

Or any other civil monosyllable,

That will not tire my hand. Dryden, Cleom.

Poets, although not insensible how much our language was already overstocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses.

Swift.

Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy.

Pope.

MONOSYLLABLED. adj. [monosyllabe, Fr. from monosyllable.] Consisting of one syllable.

Nine taylor, if rightly spell'd,

Into one man are monosyllabled.

Cleveland.

MONOSTROPHICK.* adj. [μόνος and τροφή, Gr.] Free from the restraint of any particular metre.

The measure of verse used in the chorus is all sorts, called by the Greeks monostrophick.

Milton, Pref. to Samson Agonistes.

MONOTONE.* n. s. [μόνος and τῶνος, Greek.] Uniformity of sound; want of proper cadence in pronunciation.

A kind of chaunt that frequently varies very little from monotone.

Mason, on Church Musick, p. 95.

MONOTONICAL.* adj. [from monotony.] Having an unvaried sound; wanting variety in cadence.

We should not be lulled to sleep by the length of a monotonical declamation.

Ld. Chesterfield.

MONOTONOUS.* adj. [from monotony.] Wanting variety in cadence.

Every line was perhaps uniformly recited to the same monotonous modulation.

Watson, Hist. E. P. Emden, ii. a. 4.

The melodies, whether old or new, ought to be executed in a less monotonous, and consequently more intelligible, manner.

Mason, on Church Musick, p. 196.

MONOTONY. n. s. [μονοτονία; μόνος and τῶνος; monotonie, Fr.] Uniformity of sound; Want of variety in cadence.

I could object to the repetition of the same rhimes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony.

Pope, Letters.

MONSIEUR.† n. s. [French.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.

A Frenchman his companion;

An eminent monsieur, that it seems, much loves

A Gallian girl.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Nor shall we then need the monieurs of Paris to take our hopeful youth into their slight and prodigal custodies.

Milton on Education.

MONSOON. n. s. [monsoon, monsoon, Fr.]

Monsoons are shifting trade winds in the East Indian ocean, which blow periodically; some for a half year one way, others but for three months, and then shift and blow for six or three months directly contrary. Harris.

The monsoons and trade winds are constant and periodical, even to the thirtieth degree of latitude, all round the globe, and seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds. Ray.

MONSTER. n. s. [monstre, French; monstrum, Latin.]

1. Something out of the common order of nature.

Methinks heroick poesie till now,
Like some fantastick fairy land did show,
Gods, devils, nymphs, witches, and giants' race,
And all but man in man's chief work had place:
Then like some worthy knight, with sacred arms,
Doth drive the monsters thence, and end the charms. Cowley.

It ought to be determined whether monsters be really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive. Locke.

2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.

If she live long,
And, in the end, meet the whole course of death,
Women will all turn monsters. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

All human virtue, to its latest breath,
Finds envy never conquer'd but by death:
The great Alcides every labour past,
Had still this monster to subdue at last. Pope.

To Mo'NSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things. Not in use.

Her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I had rather have one scratch my head i' th' sun,
When the alarm were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakespeare, Coriol.

MONSTROUSITY. } n. s. [from monstrous.]
MONSTRUOUSITY. } The state of being monstrous, or out of the common order of the universe. Monstrosity is more analogous.

This is the monstrousity in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.
Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstrosity. Bacon.

We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstrosity in educations: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast. South, Serm.

By the same law monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage; witness the case of hermaphrodites. Arbutnot and Pope.

MONSTROUS.† adj. [monstreux, French; monstruosus, Latin.]

1. Deviating from the stated order of nature.

Nature there perverse,
Brought forth all monstrous, all prodigious things,
Hydras, and gorgons, and chimeras dire. Milton, P. L.

Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals. Locke.

2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.

Is it not monstrous that this player here
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his conceit,
That, from her working, all his visage wand'd? Shakespeare.

O monstrous! but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack. Shakespeare.

3. Irregular; enormous.

No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,

The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.

4. Shocking; hateful.

This was an invention given out by the Spaniards, to save the monstrous scorn their nation received. Bacon.

5. Full of monsters.

Where thou, perhaps, under the whelming tide,
Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world. Milton, Lycidas.

MONSTROUS. adv. Exceedingly; very much. A cant term.

Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a dram of each, turn into a mouldy substance, there residing a fair cloud in the bottom, and a monstrous thick oil on the top. Bacon.

She was easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.

Add, that the rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden.

MONSTROUSLY. adv. [from monstrous.]

1. In a manner out of the common order of nature; shockingly; terribly; horribly.

Tiberius was bad enough in his youth, but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age. South, Serm.

2. To a great or enormous degree.

He walks;
And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most monstrously to have. Shakespeare.

These truths with his example you disprove,
Who with his wife is monstrously in love. Dryden, Jew.

MONSTROUSNESS.† n. s. [from monstrous.] Enormity; irregular nature or behaviour.

See the monstrousness of man,
When he looks out in an ungrateful shape! Shakespeare.

O, how I hate the monstrousness of time!
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

MON'TANISM.* n. s. The tenets of Montanus, an ancient heretick, who, about the close of the second century, founded a sect; unjustly pretending to be a prophet; multiplying fasts; forbidding second marriages; condemning all care of the body; and declaring that philosophy, arts, and whatever savoured of polite learning, should be banished from the Christian church.

Tertullian, proclaiming even open war to the church, maintained montanism, wrote a book in defence of the new fast, and intitled the same, A treatise of fasting against the opinion of the carnal sort. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 72.

His [Tertullian's] montanism put no separation at all betwixt him and other Christians, save only in point of discipline, which he, according to the severity of his nature, would have to be most harsh and rigorous. Hanmer, View of Antiq. p. 119.

MON'TANIST.* n. s. A follower of Montanus.

The montanists held these additions to be supplements to the Gospel. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 72.

MON'TANISTICAL.* adj. Belonging to the heresy of the Montanists.

An emulation of the montanistical vaunt of virginity.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 247.
Containing in them divers of his wild, montanistical conceits. Hanmer, View of Antiq. p. 125.

To Mo'NTANIZE. v. n. To follow the opinions of Montanus.

Tertullian, together with such as were his followers, began to montanize; and, pretending to perfect the severity of Christian discipline, br ought in sundry unaccustomed days of fasting.

Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 72.

MONTA'NT. n. s. [French.] A term in fencing.

Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?
— To see thee fight, — to see thee pass thy punto,
thy stock; thy reverse, thy distance; thy montant. Shakespeare.

MONTE'RO. n. s. [Spanish.] A horseman's cap.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

MONTE'TH. n. s. [from the name of the inventor.] A vessel in which glasses are washed.

New things produce new words, and thus Month
Has by one vessel sav'd his name from death. King.

MONTH.† n. s. [monað, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Moon was formerly written mone; and month was written moneth.] It means the period in which that planet moneth, or completeth its orbit. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 417. — This observation is very ingenious, although there are no vestiges of a verb of this form in the Anglosaxon or any of the Gothic languages. Dr. Jamieson. — The Saxon monað, is from mona, the moon; and the Goth. menath, from mena, the same; μήνη, Greek. Wachter deduces the Goth. word for moon from mana, to warn, to admonish, to instruct; and Dr. Jamieson the Sax. mona from monian, the same. May we not then refer also to the Greek verb μηνύω, to indicate, to point out, to declare, whence perhaps μήνη, the moon, and μήνη, a month? If this be admitted, here is the verb to support Mr. Tooke's observation, though in other words, viz. a month meaneth the period in which that planet warns, instructs, and points out.] A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiack: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.

Till the expiration of your month,
Sojourn with my sister. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
From a month old even unto five years old. Lev. xviii. 6.

Months are not only lunar, and measured by the moon, but also solar, and terminated by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptic. Brown, Vulg. Err.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemn'd by fate
To daily death.

Dryden, Theo. and Hon.

MONTH'S mind.† n. s. Longing desire.
Dr. Johnson.—Dr. Johnson gives no account of the origin of this phrase. A month's mind, is the mind or remembrance days of former times, when persons directed, in their wills, that within a year, a month, or some specific time, after their death, a requiem for their souls should be performed, and some charity bestowed. They were called also mind days. Pegge, in his Anecdotes of the English Language, says that the phrase originated from the direction being "a declaration of the will and mind of the deceased." But the months' minds have been sometimes called memories, and sometimes monuments; and therefore clearly denote remembrance, not intention. They were a source of profit to the monks; and, from a knowledge of that, our ancestors at the Reformation perhaps retained the phrase, as a ludicrous mode of expressing any desire of gratifying their wishes.

Sekyng to make all men's goodes common unto them by tytle of tythes, offeringes, devocions, pylgrimages, absolucions, indulgences, bequestes, mortuaries, monthes-myndes, year-myndes, and the devil and all besydes.

Bale, Yet a Course at the Romish Foze, fol. 91. b.

Whether there are any months' minds and anniversaries.

Interrog. in 1552, Strype's Mem. of the Ref. ii. 354.

You have a month's mind to them. Shakspeare.

For if a trumpet sound or drum beat,

Who has not a month's mind to combat? Hudibras.

MONTHLY. adj. [from month.]

1. Continuing a month; performed in a month.

I would ask concerning the monthly revolutions of the moon about the earth, or the diurnal ones of the earth upon its own axis, whether these have been finite or infinite. Bentley.

2. Happening every month.

The youth of heavenly birth I view'd,
For whom our monthly victims are renew'd.
Dryden.

MONTHLY. adv. Once in a month.

If the one may very well monthly the other may as well even daily, be iterated. Hooker.

O swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,
That changes monthly in her circl'd orb;
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable?

Shakspeare.

MONTHOIR. n. s. [French.] In horsemanship, a stone as high as the stirrups, which Italian riding-masters mount their horses from, without putting their foot in the stirrup. Dict.

MONTHO'SS. n. s. An under gunner, or assistant to a gunner, engineer, or fire-master. Dict.

MONUMENT. n. s. [monument, French; monumentum, Latin.]

1. Any thing by which the memory of persons or things is preserved; a memorial.

In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Jasius. Raleigh.

He is become a notable monument of unprosperous disloyalty. King Charles.

VOL. II.

So many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
Or monument to ages; and thereon
Offer sweet-smelling gums. Milton, P. L.

Of ancient British art
A pleasing monument, not less admir'd
Than what from Attick or Etruscan hands Arose. Philips.

Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings. Pope to Swift.

2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.

On your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial. Shakspeare.

The flowers which in the circling valley grow,
Shall on his monument their odours throw. Sandys, Paraph.

In a heap of slain,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress
Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,
The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument. Dryden.

With thee on Raphael's monument I mourn,
Or ait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn. Pope, Miscell.

MONUMENTAL. adj. [from monument.]

1. Memorial; preserving memory.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaming beams, me, goddess, bring
To arch'd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
Of pine or monumental oak. Milton, II Pens.

The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The polish'd pillar different sculptures grace,
A work outlasting monumental brass. Pope.

2. Raised in honour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.

Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakspeare.
I'll not scar that whiter skin of her than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shakspeare, Othello.

Therefore if he needs must go,
And the fates will have it so,
Softly may he be posset
Of his monumental rest. Crashaw.

MONUMENTALLY.* adj. [from monumental.] In memorial.

This description of his house is in short the very same with an ancient justice of peace his hall; a very dangerous armoury to be touched, like Paul's scaffolds, monumentally standing, because none dare take them down.

Gayton on D. Quixote, (1654,) p. 2.

TO MOO.* See TO MUE.

MOOD.† n. s. [mode, French; modus, Lat.]

1. The form of an argument.
Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. their universal or particular affirmation or negation. Watts, Logick.

Aristotle reduced our loose reasonings to certain rules, and made them conclude in mode and figure. Baker on Learning.

2. Style of music.

They move
In perfect phalanx, to the Dorian mood
Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton, P. L.

Their sound
Little prevails, or rather seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint. Milton, S. A.

A bird,
Whom art had never taught cliffs, moods, or notes.
Ford, Lover's Melancholy.

3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin, and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood.

Clarke, Lat. Grammar.

We have observed, that all speech or discourse is a publishing or exhibiting some part of our soul, either a certain perception, or a certain volition. Hence then, according as we exhibit it either in a different part, or after a different manner, hence I say the variety of modes or moods.

Harris, Hermes, B. i. ch. 8.

4. [mod, Gothick; moð, Saxon; moed, Dutch; and generally in all Teutonic dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition.

The trembling ghosts, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and staring wide
With stony eyes. Spenser, F. Q.

The kingly beast upon her gazing stood,
With pity calm'd, down fell his angry mood. Spenser, F. Q.

Eyes unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspeare, Othello.
Clorinda chang'd to ruth her warlike mood,
Few silver drops her vermeil cheeks depaint. Fairfax.

Solyman, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Knolles

She was in fisting mood
For cutting corns, or letting blood. Hudibras.

These two kids to appease his angry mood,
I bear, of which the furies give him good. Dryden.

He now profuse of tears,
In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addison.

5. Angry; rage; heat of mind. [mod, Goth. rage. See MAÐ.]

At the last aslakid was his mood. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

A gentleman,
Whom, in my mood, I stabb'd unto the heart. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; yet in their mood they cast forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker.

MO'ODILY.* adv. [from moody.] Sadly; pensively. Cotgrave, & Sherwood.

MO'ODINESS.* n. s. [Sax. moðigneþe.] Indignation; vexation.

Such was the natural hatred of the sheep towards the dogs, and the implacable moodiness which they conceived to be hurried up and down, that they fell into an inward conceit of languor and despair; and so into flat disobedience, to abhor both their shepherds and the dogs, inasmuch that when they were to be milked, and shorn, they hid themselves in woods and deserts. Transl. of Boccacini (1626,) p. 179.

MO'ODY.† adj. [from mood, Goth. madags, angry; Sax. moðig.]

1. Angry; out of humour.

How now, moody?
What is't thou canst demand? Shakspeare, Tempest.

Chide him reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth;
But being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

According to Milton's description of the first couple, as soon as they had fallen, and the turbulent passions of anger, hatred, and jealousy, first entered their breast; Adam grew moody. Tatler, No. 217.

Every peevish, moody malecontent
 Shall set the senseless rabble in an uproar? Rome.
 2. Sad; pensive; melancholy. See also MOODILY.

Give me some music; music, moody food
 Of us that trade in love. Shakspeare, Ant. & Cleop.
 Sweet recreation barr'd, what dost ensue,
 But moody and dull melancholy?

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

3. Violent; furious; raging.

The malicious tyrants of the world, with their madd' moody magistrates and slaves.

Bale on the Revel. P. iii. (1550.) D. iii.

In his moody madness, without just proof, did he openly excommunicate him,

For, Acts and Mon. of Lord Colham.

If we be English deer, be then in blood,
 Not rascal-like, to fall down with a pinch;
 But rather moody-mad and desperate stags;
 Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

MOON.† n. s. [μῶν, Gr. mena, Gothic; mona, Saxon; mona, Icelandic; maane, Danish; mon, German; maen, Dutch.
 See the etymology of MONTU.]

1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cynthia or Phœbe.

The moon shines bright: 'twas such a night as
 this,

When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
 And they did make no noise. Shakspeare.

Diana hath her name from moisture, which is the property of the moon, being by nature cold and moist, and is feigned to be a goddess huntress. Peacham.

Beneath the mighty ocean's wealthy caves,
 Beneath the eternal fountain of all waves,
 Where their vast court the mother waters keep,
 And undisturb'd by moons, in silence sleep.

Cowley.

Ye moon and stars bear witness to the truth!

Dryden.

2. A month.

Since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
 Till now some nine moons wasted, they have us'd
 Their dearest action in the tented field.

Shakspeare, Othello.

3. [In fortification.] It is used in composition to denote a figure resembling a crescent: as, a half moon.

MOON-BEAM. n. s. [moon and beam.] Rays of lunar light.

The division and quivering, which please so much in music, have an agreement with the glittering of light, as the moon-beams playing upon a wave. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

On the water the moon-beams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver.

Dryden on Dram. Poesy.

MOON-CALF. n. s. [moon and calf.]

1. A monster; a false conception; supposed perhaps anciently to be produced by the influence of the moon.

How can'st thou be the siege of this moon-calf? Shakspeare.

2. A dolt; a stupid fellow.

The potion works not on the part design'd,
 But turns his brain, and stupefies his mind;
 The dotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden, Jew.

MOONED.* adj. [from moon.]

1. Resembling the new moon.

While thus he spake, the angelick squadron
 bright

Turn'd fiery red, sharpening in mooned horns
 Their phalanx. Milton, P. L.

2. Having the title and character of the moon.

Peor and Baalim
 Forsake their temples dim,

With that twice batter'd god of Palestine,
 And mooned Ashtaroth,
 Heaven's queen and mother both
 Now sits not girt with tapers' holy shine.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

MO'NET.* n. s. [from moon.] A little

See whom and what this providence protects.

Dryden, Brian. Rediviva.

MOONFE'RN. n. s. [hemionitis.] A plant.

Ainsworth.

MOON-FISH. n. s.

Moon-fish is so called, because the tail fin is shaped like a half moon, by which, and his odd trussed shape, he is sufficiently distinguished. Grew, Mus.

MO'ONISH.* adj. [from moon.] Like the moon; variable as the moon; flighty.

At which time would I, being but a moonish
 youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking. Shakspeare, As you like it.

He tells you of a deluge and wonderful fraction that hath been in that world, [the moon,] much like the same which he had represented unto us of our world; with several other such rare moonish inventions.

Bp. H. Croft, Anim. on Burnet's The. (1685.) Pref.

MO'ONLESS.† adj. [from moon.] Not enlightened by the moon.

His angry eyne look all so glaring bright,
 Like the hunted badger in a moonless night,
 Or like a painted staring Saracen.

Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
 This Palamon from prison took his flight.

Dryden, Pal. and Arc.

MO'ONLIGHT. n. s. [moon and light.] The light afforded by the moon.

Their bishop and his clergy, being departed from them by moonlight, to choose in his room any other bishop, had been altogether impossible.

Hooker.

Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
 With feigning voice, verses of feigning love.

Shakspeare.

MO'ONLIGHT. adj. Illuminated by the moon.

If you will patiently dance in our round,
 And see our moonlight revels, go with us. Shakspeare.
 What beck'ning ghost along the moonlight shade
 Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade?

Pope.

MO'ONLING.* n. s. [from moon.] A simplet.

I have a husband, and a two-legg'd one;
 But such a moonling, as no wit of man,
 Or roses can redeem from being an ass.

B. Jonson, Dev. and Ass.

MOON-SEED. n. s. [menispermum, Lat.]

The moon-seed hath a rosaceous flower: the point is divided into three parts at the top, and afterward becomes the fruit or berry, in which is included, one flat seed, which is, when ripe, hollowed like the appearance of the moon.

Miller.

MO'ONSHINE. n. s. [moon and shine.]

1. The lustre of the moon.

Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
 Till candles, and starlight, and moonshine be out.

Shakspeare.

I, by the moonshine, to the windows went:
 And, ere I was aware, sigh'd to myself.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. [In burlesque.] A month.

I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
 Lag of a brother. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

MO'ONSHINE. } adj. [moon and shine.] Il-MO'ONSHINY. } luminated by the moon:

both seem a popular corruption of moonshining.

Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
 You moonshine revellers, and shades of night.

 But soon the miscreant moony host
 Before the victor-cross shall fly. Fenton.

MOOR.† n. s. [moer, Teut. and Icel.
 mud, clay; maer, Swed. rotten earth.]

1. A marsh; a fen; a bog; a tract of low and watry grounds.

Let the marsh of Elsham Bruges tell,
 What colour were their waters that same day,
 And all the moor 'twixt Elversham and Dell.

Spenser, F. Q.

While in her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor, it chanced that a London merchant passing by saw her, and liked her, begged her of her poor parents, and carried her to his home.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

In the great level near Thorny, several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor.

Hale.

2. A heath; a common, or waste land.
 [moor, Sax. ericetum; moor, Icel. terra arida, inculta, et inutilis.] Brockett's
 North Country Words.

3. [Maurus, Latin; μαυρος, Greek, niger;
 more, Fr.] A negro; a blackamoor.

I shall answer that better than you can the getting up of the negro's belly; the moor is with child by you. Shakspeare.

To Moor. v. a. [moer, French.] To fasten by anchors or otherwise.

Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood
Dashed 'n the shallows of the moving sand,
And in mid ocean left them moor'd at hand.

Dryden.
To Moor. v. n. To be fixed by anchors; to be stationed.

Neas gain'd Cajeta's bay :
At length on oozy ground his gallies moor,
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore.

Dryden.
My vessel, driv'n by a strong gust of wind,
Moored in a Chian creek.
Addison, Ov.

Otis Sacra, (1648), p. 162.

Mo'ORCOCK.† n. s. [from moor and cock.] The male of the moorhen.

Grieved him to lurk the lakes beside,
Where coots in rushy dingles hide,
And moorcocks shun the day.

Shenstone, Ode to Sir R. Lyttleton.

Mo'ORGAME.* n. s. [from moor and game.] Red game; grouse.

A tract of land, so thinly inhabited, must have much wild fowl; and I scarcely remember to have seen a dinner without them. The moorgame is every where to be had.

Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

Mo'ORHEN. n. s. [from moor and hen.] A fowl that feeds in the fens, without web feet.

Water-fowls, as sea-gulls and moorhens, when they flock and fly together from the sea towards the shores, foreshew rain and wind.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Mo'ORISH.† adj. [from moor.]

1. Fenny; marshy; watry.

Misty, foggy air; such as comes from fens, moorish grounds, lakes, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 81.

No, Cæsar; they be pathless moorish minds,
That, being once made rotten with the dung
Of damned riches, ever after sink
Beneath the steps of any villainy.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

In the great level near Thorny, several oaks and firs have lain there till covered by the inundation of the fresh and salt waters, and moorish earth exaggerated upon them.

Hale.

Along the moorish fens

Fairfax.

In Essex, moory-land is thought the most proper.

Morimer.

MOOSE.† n. s. The large American deer; the biggest of the species of deer.

Are you still of opinion, that the American moose and European elk are the same creature?

White's Selborne, p. 80.

To MOOT.† v. a. [from mocian, mot, gemot, meeting together, Sax. or perhaps, as it is a law term, from mot, French. Dr. Johnson. — It is certainly from the Sax. mot, gemot, a meeting together; mocian, to treat of, as well as to meet together; the Gothick nations, as Dr. Jamieson observes, being accustomed to meet for the purpose of discussing public concerns. Cowel, in his Law Dictionary, gives the Saxon etymon, but takes no notice of the needless Fr.] To plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the inns of court at appointed times.

I mean the pleading used in court and chancery called moots, where first a case is appointed to be moot by certain young men, containing some doubtful controversy.

Sir T. Egot, Gov. fol. 48.

A bad habit to moot cases on the supposed ruin of the constitution.

Burke on the Discontents in 1770.

To Moor.* v. n. To argue or plead upon a supposed cause in law.

There is a difference between mooting and pleading; between fencing and fighting.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Moot.* n. s. [from the verb.] Case to be disputed; point to be argued.

Orators have their declamations; lawyers have their moots. Bacon, Consid. on the Ch. of England.

But to end this moot: the law of Moses is manifest.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

Moot case or point. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topic of disputation.

In this moot case your judgement to refuse,
Is present death.

Dryden, Juv.

Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moot point, who understands nothing of our laws?

Locke on Education.

Let us drop both our pretences; for I believe it is a moot point, whether I am more likely to make a master Bull, or you a master Strutt.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

MOOT-HALL.* n. s. [from mot-huj, moð-heal, Moot-house.] Sax.] Council-chamber; hall of judgement; town-hall. See MOTE.

Wicliffe, Acts, xxiii.

Mo'OTING.* n. s. [from moot.] The exercise of pleading a mock cause.

By that he hath heard one mooting, and seen two plays, he [an Inns-of-Court man] thinks as basely of the University, as a young sophister doth of the Grammar-school.

Overbury, Charact. sign. K. 4.

Mo'OTED. adj. Plucked up by the root.

Ainsworth.

Mo'OTER. n. s. [from moot.] A disputer of moot points.

MOP.† n. s. [moppa, Welsh; mappa, Latin.]

1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool; fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.

Such is that sprinkling which some careless queen

Flirts on you from her mop, but not so clean.

You fly, invoke the gods; then turning, stop
To rail; she singing still whirls on her mop.

Swift.

2. [Perhaps corrupted from mock. Dr. Johnson. — Mock and mop were certainly used indifferently. Shakspeare has both mock and mow, and mop and mow. See the edit. of Spenser, 1805. vol. 7. p. 30. But the Su. Goth. mopa, illudere, deludere, may possibly have given rise to our word.] A wry mouth or grin made in contempt.

Each one tripping on his toe
Will be here with mop and mow.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

To Mop. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with a mop.

To Mop.† v. n. [from mock, or from the Su. Goth. mopa, illudere.] To make wry mouths or grin in contempt.

Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbiadine, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Mohu, of murder; and Filbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since possesses chamber-maids.

Shakspeare.

Marke but his countenance; see how he mops and how he moves, and how he strains his looks.

Rich, Faults, and nothing but Faults, (1606,) p. 7.

An ass fell a mopping and braying at a lion.

L'Estrange.

To MOPE.† v. n. [Of this word I cannot find a probable etymology. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius thinks it to be in "mopa, deludere, pro stulto habere, Chron. Rythm. p. 288;" and Ihre also notices the affinity between the Su. Goth. and our word.] To be stupid; to drowse; to be in a constant day-dream; to be spiritless, unactive, and inattentive; to be stupid and delirious.

What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers.

Shakspeare.

Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Ev'n in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping thither.

Shakspeare, Tempest

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
Demoniac phrensy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness.

Milton, P. L.

The busy craftsman and o'erlabour'd hind,
Forget the travel of the day in sleep;
Care only wakes, and moping pensiveness;
With meagre discontented looks they sit,
And watch the wasting of the midnight taper.

Rome.

To MOPE.† v. a. To make spiritless; to deprive of natural powers.

Many men are undone by this means, moped, and so dejected, that they are never to be recovered.

They say there are charms in herbs, said he, and so threw a handful of grass; which was so ridiculous, that the young thief took the old man to be moped.

L'Estrange.

It is doubtless a great disgrace to our religion to imagine, as too many superstitious Christians do, that it is an enemy to mirth and cheerfulness, and a severe extractor of pensive looks and solemn faces; that men are never serious enough till they are moped into statues, and cloistered from all society but that of their own melancholy thoughts.

Scott, Christian Life, P. i. ch. 4.

Severity breaks the mind; and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke on Education.

MOPE.* n. s. [from the verb.] One who is moped; a spiritless and inattentive person.

They have made, by their humouring or gulling, "ex stulto insanum," a mope or a noddy; and all to make themselves merry.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 149.

MOPE-EYED.† adj. Blind of one eye, Dr. Johnson says, on the authority of Ainsworth, without any example. It means rather short-sighted, purblind, μωπῶν, Gr. See MYOPY.

He pieth his simplicity, and returneth him for answer, that, if he be not mope-eyed, he may find the procession of the divine persons in his creed.

Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, (1658,) p. 191.

MO'PISH.* adj. [from mope.] Spiritless; inattentive; dejected.

They generally sit down under crosses and afflictions, are exposed to contempt and shame, traduced as a sort of mopish and unsociable creatures.

Killingbeck, Serm. p. 348.

MO'PISHNESS.* n. s. [from mopish.] Dejection; inactivity.

The recesses of the cloyster! the seats of mopishness, superstition, and bigotry.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 2.

He became very melancholy, and at length fell into a kind of mopishness of fatuity.

Hist. R. S. iv. 501.

MO'PET. } n. s. [perhaps from mop.] A MO'PSEY. } puppet made of rags, as a mop is made; a fondling name for a girl.

Our sovereign lady : made for a queen ? With a globe in one hand, and a sceptre in 'other ? A very pretty moppet ! Dryden, Span. Prior.

MO'PSICAL.* adj. That cannot see well; mope-eyed. Coles, Dict. 1685. Mr. Moor, in his Suffolk Words, 1823, defines it low-spirited, drooping, moping. In the following example it appears to have the meaning, from mope, of stupid, delirious.

Others of more airy and elevated fancies are altogether in millenary dreams, religious phantasms, &c. not caring much how they break any moral precept of law or gospel, &c. until they come to such a sovereignty, as may be able to govern and oppress others, their mopish humours being never satisfied, but in fancying themselves as kings and reigning with Christ.

Bp. Gauden, Hierap. (1653,) Pref. sign. b.

MO'PUS. n. s. [A cant word from mope.] A drone; a dreamer.

I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes But a rabble of tenants. Swift, Miscell.

MOR'AL. adj. [moral, French; moralis, Latin.]

1. Relating to the practice of men towards each other, as it may be virtuous or criminal; good or bad.

Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker.

Laws and ordinances positive he distinguisheth from the laws of the two tables, which were moral. Hooker.

In moral actions divine law helpeth exceedingly the law of reason to guide life, but in supernatural it alone guideth. Hooker.

Now, brandish'd weapons glitt'ring in their hands,

Mankind is broken loose from moral bands ; No rights of hospitality remain, The guest, by him who harbour'd him, is slain. Dryden.

2. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land,

With plumed helm thy slay'r begins his threats, Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and criest. Shakespeare.

3. Popular; customary; such as is known or admitted in the general business of life.

Physical and mathematical certainty may be stiled infallible; and moral certainty may properly be stiled indubitable. Wilkens.

We have found, with a moral certainty, the seat of the Mosaical abyss. Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

Mathematical things are capable of the strictest demonstration; conclusions in natural philosophy are capable of proof by an induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson, Serm.

A moral universality, is when the predicate agrees to the greatest part of the particulars which are contained under the universal subject. Watts, Logick.

MOR'AL. n. s.

1. Morality; practice or doctrine of the duties of life: this is rather a French than English sense.

Their moral and economy, Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.

2. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction; the accommodation of a fable to form the morals.

— Benedictus ? why benedictus ? you have some moral in this benedictus.

— Moral ! No, by my troth I have no moral meaning ; I meant plain holy thistle. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew.

The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the ground-work of his instruction; this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

I found a moral first, and then studied for a fable, but could do nothing that pleased me. Swift to Gay.

To MOR'AL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To moralize; to make moral reflections.

Not in use.

When I did hear The motley fool thus moral on the time, My lungs began to crow like chanticleer, That fools should be so deep contemplative. Shaks.

MOR'ALER.* n. s. [from moral.] A moralizer.† Not in use.

Come, you are too severe a moraler. Shakespeare, Othello.

MOR'ALIST.† n. s. [moraliste, Fr.]

1. One who teaches the duties of life.

I have often heard my truly noble and most dear nephew, Sir Edmund Bacon, say, out of his exquisite contemplations and philosophical practice, that Nature surely, if she be well studied, is the best moralist, and hath much good counsel hidden in her bosom. Wotton on Education.

The advice given by a great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his passions; and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Addison.

2. A mere moral man.

The love (in the moralist of virtue, but in the Christian) of God himself.

Hammond, Works, iv. 504.

How severely, though blindly, do they judge of men's hearts ! Such a man is profane, another is carnal, and a meer moralist. South, Serm. vii. 286.

MOR'ALITY.† n. s. [moralité, Fr. from moral.]

1. The doctrine of the duties of life; ethics.

The system of morality, to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift, Miscell.

A necessity of sinning is as impossible in morality, as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature. Baker on Learning.

2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The morality of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South, Serm.

3. An old kind of drama; an allegorical play, in which the virtues and vices were personified. [moralités, old Fr.]

The moralities indicate drawings of the dramatic art; they contain some rudiments of a plot, and even attempt to delineate characters, and to paint manners. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 242.

Even after the people had been accustomed to tragedies and comedies, moralities still kept their ground : one of them, entitled The New Custom, was printed so late as 1573 : at length they assumed the name of Masques.

Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Orig. of the Eng. Stage. This [Hick-Scorner], and every morality I have seen, conclude with a solemn prayer. Ibid.

MORALIZATION.* n. s. [from moralize.] Explanation in a moral sense.

It is the more commendable, and also commendous, if the players have read the moralization of the chess, and when they play do think upon it. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 81. b.

Annexed to the fable is a moralization of twice the length in the octave stanza. Almost every narrative was antiently supposed or made to be allegorical, and to contain a moral meaning. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 417.

To MORALIZE.† v. a. [moraliser, Fr.]

1. To make moral. This primary meaning is overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

Good and bad stars moralize not our actions. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 7.

The goodness of these actions is never to be estimated merely by the degree of enthusiastic heat and ardor that is in them, but by such other laws and circumstances as moralize human actions, Cudworth, Serm. p. 93.

Those laws and circumstances which do moralize human actions, and render them reasonable, and holy, and good.

Scott's Works, (ed. 1718,) ii. 129.

2. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.

He 'as left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. — I pray thee moralize them. Shakespeare, Tarn. of the Shrew.

Did he not moralize this spectacle ? — O yes, into a thousand similes. Shakespeare.

This fable is moralized in a common proverb. L'Estrange.

3. In Spenser it seems to mean, to furnish with manners or examples.

Fierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize my song. Spenser, F. Q.

4. In Prior, who imitates the foregoing line, it has a sense not easily discovered, if indeed it has any sense.

High as their trumpets tune his lyre he strung,
And with his prince's arms he moraliz'd his song.
Prior.

To Mo'RALIZE.† v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

When my friend was alone with me there, Isaac,
said he, I know you come abroad only to moralize, and make observations. Tatter, No. 170.

Mo'RALIZER.† n. s. [from moralize; Fr. moraliseur.] One who moralizes.

Sherwood.

Mo'RALLY. adv. [from moral.]

1. In the ethical sense.

By good, good morally so called, bonum honestum, ought chiefly to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the bonum utile or jucundum, hardly come into any account here.

South, Serm.

Because this, of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of preparation, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural.

Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally.

Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgement made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard.

L' Estrange.

I am from the nature of the things themselves morally certain, and cannot make any doubt of it, but that a mind free from passion and prejudice is more fit to pass a true judgement than such a one as is byassed by affections and interests.

Wilkins.

The concurring accounts of many such witnesses render it morally, or, as we might speak, absolutely impossible that these things should be false.

Atterbury, Serm.

Mo'RA'LS. n. s. [without a singular.] The practice of the duties of life; behaviour with respect to others.

Some, as corrupt in their morals as vice could make them, have yet been solicitous to have their children soberly, virtuously, and piously brought up.

South, Serm.

Learn then what morals critics ought to shew:
'Tis not enough wit, art, and learning join;
In all you speak, let truth and candour shine.

Pope.

MORA'SS.† n. s. [morais, French. Dr. Johnson.—Rather the Goth. marisatus; whence moras, Su. stagnum.] See MARSH. Our word was, in 1656, reckoned by P. Heylin new and uncouth.] Fen; bog; moor.

Landscapes point out the fairest and most fruitful spots, as well as the rocks, and wildernesses, and morasses of the country.

Watts on the Mind.

Nor the deep morass
Refuse, but through the shaking wilderness
Pick your nice way.

Thomson, Autumn.

MORA'SSY.* adj. [from morass.] Moorish; marshy; fenny.

The wind, by which they are brought on, generally comes from a morassy country.

Bryant on the Plagues of Egypt, P. III.

The sides and top are covered with morassy earth.

Pennant.

MORA'VIAN.* n. s. One of a religious sect of Moravian and Bohemian brethren, which was founded in the fifteenth century. In modern times, one of the united brethren, who are followers of Count Zinzendorf, a German nobleman; called also Herrnhuters. The gross fanaticism of these persons, in some opinions and practices, has been warmly asserted; as have also their quiet demeanour, and their undaunted courage in communicating the light of revealed religion to the most remote and uncivilized parts of the world.

The Moravians who retired to Herrnhut, and who are the most inconsiderable part of the inhabitants of that village, have nothing common with the ancient Bohemian and Moravian brethren.

Rimius, Narr. of the Herrnhuters, (1753,) p. 14.

A conformity has been shewn between Moravians and Papists.

Bp. Livingston, Morav. Compared, (1755,) p. 177.

MORA'VIAN.* adj. Denoting, or belonging to, the sect of Moravians.

I thought it would answer the same purpose, should I consult the writings of the Moravian leaders.

Rimius, Narrative, &c. Pref. p. 6.

Mo'R'RID. n. s. [morbidus, Lat.] Diseased; in a state contrary to health.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet there are diseases consistent with the common functions of life.

Arbuthnot.

Mo'R'BIDNESS. n. s. [from morbid.] State of being diseased.

MORBI'FICAL.† } adj. [morbus and facio,
MORBI'FICK. } Latin; morbifique, Fr.]

Causing diseases.

Some strange morbidical distemper of the air.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. (1654,) p. 326.

Nothing but the removal of the feverish and morbid matter within can carry off the distemper.

South, Serm., vi. 311.

The air appearing so malicious in this morbidical conspiracy, exacts a more particular regard; wherefore initiate consumptives must change their air.

Harvey on Consumptions.

This disease is cured by the critical resolution, concoction, and evacuation of the morbid matter.

Arbuthnot.

MORBO'SE. adj. [morbosus, Lat.] Proceeding from disease; not healthy.

Malphighi, under galls, comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours and excrescences of plants.

Ray on Creation.

MORBO'SITY. n. s. [from morbosus, Lat.] Diseased state. A word not in use.

The inference is fair, from the organ to the action, that they have eyes, therefore some sight was designed, if we except the casual impediments or morbosities in individuals.

Brown.

MORDA'CIOUS.† adj. [mordax, Lat.] Biting; apt to bite.

Many of these [composts] are not only sensibly hot, but mordacious and burning.

Evelyn's Earth.

MORDA'CIOUSLY.* adv. [from mordacious.] Bitingly; sarcastically.

Buchanan, a learned though violent Scot, has mordaciously taunted this tradition.

Waterhouse on Fortescue, p. 201.

MORDA'CITY.† n. s. [mordacitus, Lat. mordacitè, Fr. from mordax, Lat.] Biting quality.

It is to be enquired, whether there be any menstruum to dissolve any metal that is not fretting or corroding, and openeth the body by sympathy, and not by mordacity, or violent penetration.

Bacon.

Its [the serpent's] rancorous venom, its keen mordacity.

Barrow, Works, i. 46.

Mo'RDICANCY.* n. s. [from mordicant.] Biting quality.

The mordicancy thus allayed, be sure to make the mortar clean.

Evelyn, Act. § 57.

Mo'RDICANT. adj. [mordeo, Lat. mordicant, Fr.] Biting; acrid.

He presumes, that the mordicant quality of bodies must proceed from a fiery ingredient; whereas the light and inflammable parts must be driven away by that time the fire has reduced the body to ashes.

Boyle.

MORDICA'TION. n. s. [from mordicant.] The act of corroding or biting.

Another cause is mordication of the orifices, especially of the mesenteric veins; as any thing that is sharp and biting doth provoke the part to expel, and mustard provoketh sneezing.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MORE.† adj. [mape, Saxon; the comparative of some or great. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Tooke views the Sax. mope, a heap, as the radical word; supposing the Sax. ma, Engl. mo, to be the positive, Sax. mape, Engl. more, the comparative, and Sax. mærc, Engl. most, the superlative. But not to say that mope does not seem to have been used to denote quantity in general, or applied to persons, the hypothesis labours under several considerable difficulties. The first is, that mo never occurs in Saxon, but always ma; which has been corruptly changed in later times into mo, like many other words originally written with a. But besides this, the Sax. ma is as really a comparative as mare, both being used adverbially in the sense of plus, magis. As an adjective, mare properly denotes superiority in size, or in quality, major; ma, superiority in number, as plures. This word, even as changed into mo, has been always used in the same manner. Dr. Jamieson, in V. MA.]

1. In greater quantity; in greater degree. Wrong not that wrong with more contempt.

Shakspeare.

These kind of knaves in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends
Than twenty silky ducking officers.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Their riches were more than that they might dwell together.

Gen. xxxvi. 7.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour.

Erod. v. 9.

Then crown my joys, or cure my pain;
Give me more love, or more disdain.

Carew.

2. In greater number. [The comparative of some or many.]

He had so many languages in store,
That only fame shall speak of him in more.

Cowley.

3. Greater. Now out of use.

Of India the more and the less. Mandeville.
Both more and less have given him the revolt.

Shakspeare.

The more part advised to depart. Acts, xxvi. 12.

4. Added to some former number.

One more citizen to sybil give.
I'm tir'd of rhyming, and would fain give o'er,
But Montague demands one labour more.

Addison.

Great Dryden's friends before,
With open arms receiv'd one poet more.

Pope.

MORE. adv.

1. To a greater degree.

He loved Rachel more than Leah.

Gen. xxix. 30.

The spirits of animate bodies are all, in some degree, more or less kindled. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some were of opinion, that feeling more and more in himself the weight of time, he was not unwilling to bestow upon another some part of the pains.

Watson.

The more the kindled combat rises higher, The more with fury burns the blazing fire.

Dryden, Æn.

As the blood passeth through narrower channel, the redness disappears more and more.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

The more God has blessed any man with estate or quality, just so much less in proportion is the care he takes in the education of his children.

Swift, Miscell.

2. The particle that forms the comparative degree.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,

To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the sound man. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

May you long live a happy instrument for your king and country: happy here, and more happy hereafter.

Bacon.

The advantages of learning are more lasting than those of arms. Collier on Pride.

3. Again; a second time.

Little did I think I should ever have business of this kind on my hands more.

Tatler.

4. Longer; yet continuing: with the negative particle.

Cassius is no more! Oh, setting sun!

As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night,

So in his red blood Cassius' day is set. Shaks.

MORE. n. s. [A kind of comparative from some or much.]

1. A greater quantity; a greater degree. Perhaps some of the examples which are adduced under the adverb, with the before more, should be placed here; but I rather think the more to be adverbial.

Were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands;

And my more having would be as a sauce

To make me hunger more. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

An heroic poem requires some great action of war; and as much or more of the active virtue than the suffering.

Dryden.

The Lord do so, and much more, to Jonathan.

1 Sam.

From hence the greatest part of ill descends, When lust of getting more will have no end.

Dryden.

They that would have more and more can never have enough; no, not if a miracle should interpose to gratify their avarice.

L'Estrange.

A mariner having let down a large portion of his sounding line, he reaches no bottom, whereby he knows the depth to be so many fathoms and more; but how much that more is, he hath no distinct notion.

Locke.

2. Greater thing; other thing.

They, who so state a question, do no more but separate the parts of it one from another, and lay them so in their due order.

Locke.

3. Second time; longer time.

They steer'd their course to the same quiet shore, Not parted long, and now to part no more. Pope.

4. It is doubtful whether the word, in this use, be a noun or adverb.

The dove returned not again unto him any more.

Gen. viii.

Pr'ythee be satisfy'd; he shall be aided,

Or I'll no more be king. Dryden, Cleom.

Delia, the queen of love, let all deplore!

Delia, the queen of beauty, is now no more. Walsh.

To *MORE. To make more. Obsolete.

What he will make more, he moreth.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

MORE. n. s.* [Saxon mop, a mountain.]

1. A hill. North. Hence the Staffordshire morelands or morlands. See MORELAND.

2. A root. [Saxon mopan, baccæ, semina-Sommer.] Used in Gloucestershire; as a moring-axe is for an axe to grub up the roots of trees. Grose.

"Tenne thousand *more*s of sundry scent and hew." Spens. F. Q. vi. vii. 10. In Hughes's edition 'tis spelt more. We use the word *more*s in the west of England for roots, &c.

Upton, Note on Spenser.

MORE'EN. n. s.* A kind of stuff used for curtains and bed-hangings.

MORE'L. n. s.* [morille, French.]

1. A kind of mushroom, as Cotgrave describes it; or rather a kind of fungus, the external part of which is cellular, and resembles a honey-comb. It is a great delicacy at the table, when eaten fresh, and is also preserved and dried for culinary purposes. Gay has well described this vegetable by the title of spungy.

Spungy *more*ls in strong ragousts are found, And in the soup the slimy snail is drown'd.

Gay, Trivia.

2. A kind of cherry. [μαύρος, Greek, black. Littleton.]

*More*l is a black cherry, fit for the conservatory before it be thorough ripe, but it is bitter eaten raw. Mortimer.

MO'RELAND. n. s. [mopland, Saxon; mop, a mountain, and land.] A mountainous or hilly country: a tract of Staffordshire is called the Morlands, from being hilly.

MO'RENESS. n. s.* [from more.] Greatness, Obsolete. See the third sense of the adjective more.

Moreness of Christ's vicars is not measured by worldly moreness.

Wicliffe, Lett. in Lewis's Life of W. p. 284.

MOREO'VER. adv. [more and over.] Beyond what has been mentioned; besides; likewise; also; over and above.

He did boid me dear

Above this world; adding thereto, moreover, That he would wed me, or else die my lover.

Shakespeare.

Moreover by them is thy servant warned.

Psal. xix. 11.

MORE'SK. adj.* [moresque, French, from Maurus, Latin.] Done after the manner of the Moors; a term applied to a kind of antique carving and painting; "moresk work, feuillage moresque." See Cotgrave in V. MORESQUE. It is oftener written morisco.

They trim it with paint after the morisco manner. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 129.

A piece of as good Morisco work as any I had yet seen. Swinburne, Trav. L. 31.

MO'RLAY. n. s.* A deadly weapon. Ainsworth. Glaive and morte, French, and glay môhr, Erse, a two-handed broadsword, which some centuries ago was the Highlander's weapon.

A trusty morglay in a rusty sheath.

Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 15.

To MORI'GERATE. v. n.* [morigero, Latin, from *more*s and gero; morigerare, Ital.] To do as one is commanded; to obey. This pedantick word is in the old vocabulary of Cockeram, and was probably in use. Bacon, we see, considered morigeration as a serviceable word. And Dr. Johnson thought fit to give morigerous, though without any authority; which, however, is in the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor in 1656.

MORIGERATION. n. s.* [morigeratio, Lat.] Obedience; obsequiousness.

Not that I can tax or condemn the morigeration or application of learned men to men in fortune.

Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 1.

Courtesy and morigeration will gain mighty upon them. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 59.

MORI'GEROUS. adj.* [moriger, Lat.] Obedient; obsequious; civil. Bullokar.

MO'RION. n. s. [French.] A helmet; armour for the head; a casque.

For all his majesty's ships a proportion of swords, targets, morions, and cuirass of proof should be allowed. Ralegh.

Polish'd steel that cast the view aside, And crested morions with their plummy pride.

Dryden.

MORI'SCO. n. s.* [morisco, Spanish, mo-MO'RISK.] risque, old French.]

1. The Moorish language.

He, leaping in first of all, set hand to his falchion, and said in morisco, Let none of you that are here stir.—The Moors, hearing their master say so, were marvelously amazed.

Shelton, D. Quixote, iv. 14.

2. A dance after the manner of the Moors, often written morris, but sometimes more properly morisc. Morisco, morisk, morisc, seems an easy deduction; though *more*s is also an old word for Moorish.

To this purpose were taken up at Rome these foreign exercises of vaulting and dancing the moriske. Hakewill on Providence, p. 365.

The lady and her companions, attended with musick and a morisco-dance of men.

Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 149.

3. A dancer of the morris or moorish-dance.

I have seen him

Caper upright like a wild morisco, Shaking the bloody darts, as he his bells.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

Your wit skips a morisco.

Marston, What you will, (1607.)

MORI'SCO. adj.* Applied to carving and painting. See MORES.

MO'RKIN. n. s.* [Dr. Johnson cites this word from Bailey, without etymology or example. The word is old; and agrees with the Swedish murken, rotten, from murkna, to rot.] A wild beast, dead through sickness or mischance.

Not a wild beast alone, but a sheep, deer,—Some sorry morkin that unbidden dies.

By. Hall, Sat.

MO'RLING. n. s.* [mort, French.] Wool MO'RTLING. } plucked from a dead sheep.

Ainsworth.

MORMO. n. s.* [μή μορμω.] Bugbear; false terror.

The belief of a judgement day is no panick fear, or melancholy dream: 'tis no trick of politicians, or mormo of priests to fright fools and keep the world in awe, but a truth as certain and undoubted as the oracles of truth can make it.

Glanville, Serm. p. 306.

All the rest is phlegmatically passed over with a "stimul, id quod, &c." as only the mormos and bugbears of a frightened rabble.

Warburton on Prodigies, p. 80.

MORN.† n. s. [Goth. maurgins; Icel. morgen, myrgen; Sax. mopgen, mepgen, mepen, mepne, mapne, mopne. Mr. H. Tooke derives this substantive from the Goth. merjan, Sax. meppan, myppan, to spread abroad, to dissipate, to scatter; "morrow therefore and morn (the former being the past tense of myppan, with the addition of the participial termination en) have both the same meaning, viz. dissipated, dispersed. And whenever either of those words is used by us, clouds or darkness are understood; whose dispersion, or the time when they are dispersed, it expresses. Div. of Purl. ii. 214. Dr. Jamieson views the Gothick maurgins as allied to the verb maurgjan, to shorten; as the dawn of morning shortens the reign of darkness, or cuts off the night. The term is used by Ulph. St. Mark, xiii. 20. he adds, expressly with respect to time: "gamurgida thans dagans," he hath shortened the days: the days referred to are those of darkness in a figurative sense. Mr. Tooke's is the more natural deduction. And thus the Latin mane has been traced to the Greek μαριν, clear, which is from the verb μαρναι, to rarify, to make clear. I may further observe the concurrent sentiment of our great poet, in the morning hymn of Adam and Eve:

"If the night

"Have gather'd aught of evil, or
"conceal'd,

"Disperse it, as now light dispels the
"dark."]

The first part of the day; the morning. Morn is not used but by the poets.

The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat,
Awake the god of day. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Can you forget your golden beds,
Where you might sleep beyond the morn. Lee.
Friendship shall still thy evening feasts adorn,
And blooming peace shall ever bless thy morn. Prior.

MORNING.† n. s. [mopgen, Saxon, but our morning seems rather to come from morn. Dr. Johnson.—Myppenbe is the regular present participle of myppan; for which we had formerly morewende. The present participial termination ende is, in modern English, always converted to ing. Hence morewing, morwing, and by an easy corruption morning. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 215. See MORN.] The first part of the day, from the first appearance of light to the end of the first fourth part of the sun's daily course.

One master Brook hath sent you worship a morning's draught of sack.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

By the second hour in the morning
Desire the earl to see me. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Morning by morning shall it pass over.

Isa. xxviii. 19.

What shall become of us before night, who are weary so early in the morning?

Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

The morning is the proper part of the day for study. Dryden.

Every morning sees her early at her prayers,
she rejoices in the beginning of every day, because it begins all her pious rules of holy living, and brings the fresh pleasures of repeating them.

Law.

MORNING. adj. Being in the early part of the day.

She looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakspeare.

Your goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. Hos. vi. 5.

Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light.

1 Sam. xiv. 36.

The twining jessamine and blushing rose,
With lavish grace their morning scents disclose.

Prior.

All the night they stem the liquid way,
And end their voyage with the morning ray.

Pope, Odys.

MORNING-GOWN. n. s. A loose gown worn before one is formally dressed.

Seeing a great many in rich morning gowns, he was amazed to find that persons of quality were up so early. Addison.

MORNING-STAR. n. s. The planet Venus when she shines in the morning.

Bright as doth the morning-star appear,
Out of the East, with flaming locks bedight,
To tell the dawning day is drawing near.

Spenser, F. Q.

MOROCCO.* n. s. A fine sort of leather, of various colours; the preparation of which is said to have been borrowed from the kingdom of Morocco. The word is sometimes written like the French term, marroquin.

MOROSE.† adj. [morosus, Latin. Dr. Johnson.—This word is not of great age in our language. Dr. Johnson has found no earlier usage of it than that in the example from Addison. I find it nearly in the Latin form, morosous, in 1616; and in 1662, morose; employed by the authors for ungovernable.]

1. Ungovernable; licentious. Not now in use.

Daily experience either often relapses, or morosous desires.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 201.
In this commandment are forbidden all that feeds this sin, [adultery,] or are incentives to it; as luxurious diet; inflaming wines; an idle life; morose thoughts, that dwell in the fancy with delight.

Bp. Nicholson, Expos. of the Catech. (1662,) p. 123.

2. Sour of temper: peevish; sullen.

Without these precautions, the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows sullen and morose, the woman impatient.

Addison, Spect.

Some have deserved censure for a morose and affected taciturnity, and others have made speeches, though they had nothing to say.

Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

MOROSELV. adv. [from morose.] Sourly; peevishly.

Too many are as morosely positive in their age, as they were childishly so in their youth.

Gov. of the Tongue.

MORO'SENESS. n. s. [from morose.] Sourness; peevishness.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness mingle with our serious frame of mind. Nelson.

Learn good humour, never to oppose without just reason; abate some degrees of pride and moroseness. Watts.

MORO'SITY.† n. s. [morosité, Fr. Cotgrave; morositas, Latin; from morose.] Moroseness; sourness; peevishness.

Why then be sad,

But entertain no morosity, brothers, other Than a joint burthen laid upon us. Shakespeare

This morosity and sullenness is far from being imitable and laudable.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1653,) p. 294.

Some morosities

We must expect, since jealousy belongs To age, of scorn, and tender sense of wrongs.

Denham.

The pride of this man, and the popularity of that; the levity of one, and the morosity of another. Clarendon.

Is not a morosity and singularity in such things often made a veil and cover of licentiousness in greater things? Sprot, Serm. (1677,) p. 16.

MORPHEW.† n. s. [morpheé, French; morpheæ, low Lat. morpheæ, Ital.] A scurf on the face.

We shall then see the shameful wrinkles and foul morpheus of our soul.

Bp. Hall, Fall of Pride.

To MORPHEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with scurf.

And sullen rags bewray his morpheu'd skin.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 5.

The face that was fair, is now distorted and morpheu'd. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

MORRIS.† } n. s. [that is moorish or MORRIS-DANCE. } morisco-dance.]

1. A dance in which bells are gingled, or staves or swords clashed, which was learned by the Moors, and was probably a kind of Pyrrhick or military dance.

The queen stood in some doubt of a Spanish invasion, though it proved but a morris-dance upon our waves. Wotton.

One in his catalogue of a feigned library, sets down this title of a book. The morris-dance of heretics. Bacon.

The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove, Now to the moon in wavering morrice move.

Milton, Comus.

I took delight in pieces that shewed a country village, morrice-dancing, and peasants together by the ears. Peachment.

The vulgar sort [of Persians] delight in morrice-dancing. Str T. Herbert, Trav. p. 304.

The dithyrambus was a kind of extatic morice-dance. Stillingfleet, Orig. Sac. ii. 4.

Four reapers danced a morrice to oaten pipes.

Spectator.

2. Nine mens' MORRIS. A kind of play with nine holes in the ground. It is called also merils, and five-penny morris. The game is played with stones in England, but in France with pawns or men made on purpose, called merelles, which Mr. Tollet thinks "to have been originally black, and therefore so termed; as we call a black cherry a morello, and a small black cherry a merry; perhaps from Maurus, a moor, or rather from morum, a mulberry."

The folds stand empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fattened with the murrein flock;
The nine mews' morrice is filled up with mud.

Shakespeare, Midw. N. Dream.

Nine mews' morrice is a game still played by the shepherds, cowkeepers, &c. in the midland counties, as follows: A figure (of squares, one within another,) is made on the ground by cutting out the turf; and two persons take each nine stones, which they place by turns in the angles, and afterwards move alternately, as at chess or draughts. He who can play three in a straight line may then take off any one of his adversary's, where he pleases, till one, having lost all his men, loses the game. Alchorne, Note on Shakespeare.

MO'RRIS-DANCER. n. s. [morris and dance.] One who dances à la moresca, the moorish dance.

There went about the country a set of moorish-dancers, composed of ten men, who danced a maid Marian and a tabor and pipe. Temple.

MO'RRIS-PIKE.* n. s. [morris and pique.] A Moorish pike; a formidable weapon used by the Moors.

He that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than a moorish-pike.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

The English mariners laid about them with brown bills, halberts, and moorish-pikes.
Reynard, Deliv. of cert. Christians from the Turks.

MO'RRIS.† n. s. [See the etymon of MORN.] The original meaning of mor-row seems to have been morning, which being often referred to on the preceding day, was understood in time to signify the whole day next following.]

1. The morning; the primary meaning.

Upon a morow tide. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.
Thou when appeared the third morrow bright
Upon the waves to spread her trembling light,
An hideous roling far away they heard.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 2.
She's white as morrow's milk, or flakes new blown
Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 7.

The pale rose her colour lost renews
With the fresh dross fall'n from the silver morrow.
Fairfax, Tass. xx. 129.

I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
To have't with saying, good morrow.
Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. The day after the present day.

Thou
Canst pluck night from me but not lend a morrow.
Shakespeare, Exod. ix. 6.

The Lord did that thing on the morrow.
Peace, good reader, do not weep,
Peace, the lovers are asleep;
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And the eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with the light,
Whose days shall never sleep in night. Crashaw.
To morrow you will live, you always cry,
In what far country doth this morrow live?
That 'tis so mighty long e'er it arrive:
Beyond the Indies does this morrow live?
'Tis so far fetch'd this morrow, that I fear
'Twill be both very old and very dear.
To morrow will I live, the fool does say,
To day itself's too late, the wise liv'd yesterday.

Cowley.

3. To MORROW. [This is an idiom of the same kind, supposing morrow to mean originally morning: as to night: to day.]
On the day after this current day.

To morrow comes; 'tis noon; 'tis night;

This day like all the former flies;

Yet on he runs to seek delight

To morrow, till to night he dies. Prior.

4. To morrow is sometimes, I think, improperly used as a noun.

Our yesterday's to morrow now is gone,
And still a new to morrow does come on.
We by to morrows draw out all our store,
Till the exhausted well can yield no more.

Cowley.

To morrow is the time when all is to be rectified.

Spectator.

MORSE. n. s. [phoca.] A sea-horse.

That which is commonly called a sea-horse is properly called a morse, and makes not out that shape. Brown.

It seems to have been a tusk of the morse or waltron, called by some the sea-horse.

Woodward on Fossils.

MO'RSSEL.† n. s. [morcellus, low Lat. from morsus. Dr. Johnson.—We have the word from the ancient French morsel or morcel.]

1. A piece fit for the mouth; a mouthful.

Yet can'st thou to a morsel of this feast,

Having fully din'd before. Shakespeare, Coriol.

And me his parent would full soon devour
For want of other prey, but knows that I Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane.

Milton, P. L.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South, Sermon.

He boils the flesh,

And lays the mangled morsels in a dish. Dryden.

A wretch is prisoner made,

Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the ravenous foe

In morsels cut to make it farther go. Tate, Jew.

A letter to the keeper of the lion requested that it may be the first morsel put into his mouth.

Addison.

2. A piece; a meal.

On these herbs, and fruits and flowers,
Feed first; on each beast next, and fish and fowl,
No homely morsels! Milton, P. L.

A dog crossing a river with a morsel of flesh in his mouth, saw, as he thought, another dog under the water, upon the very same adventure.

L'Estrange.

3. A small quantity. Not proper.

Of the morsels of native and pure gold, he had seen some weighed many pounds. Boyle.

MO'RSURE. n. s. [morsure, French; morsura, Latin. The act of biting.

MORT.† n. s. [morte, French.]

1. A tune sounded at the death of the game.

To be making practis'd smiles,
As in a looking-glass, and to sigh, as 'twere
The mort o' the deer; oh, that is entertainment
My bosom likes not. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

2. [Morgt, Icelandic.] A great quantity. Not in elegant use, but preserved colloquially in many parts.

3. A salmon in the third year of its growth, so called by fishermen in some parts of England.

MORTAL. adj. [mortalis, Lat. mortel, Fr.]

1. Subject to death; doomed sometime to die.

Nature does require

Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I her frail son amongst my brethren mortal
Must give my attendance to. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.

1 Cor. xv. 53.

Heavenly powers, where shall we find such love!
Which of ye will be mortal to redeem
Man's mortal crime, and just, the unjust to save?

Milton, P. L.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress'd; inevitably thou shalt die;
From that day mortal: and this happy state
Shalt lose. Milton, P. L.

2. Deadly; destructive; procuring death.

Come all you spirits

That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of cruelty. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The mortalest poisons practised by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man. Bacon.

The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world and all our woe.

Milton, P. L.

Some circumstances have been great discouragers of trade, and others are absolutely mortal to it. Temple.

Hope not, base man! unquestion'd hence to go,
For I am Palamon, thy mortal foe. Dryden.

3. Bringing death.

Save in the hand of one disposing power,
Or in the natal or the mortal hour.

Pope, Ess. on Man.

4. Inferring divine condemnation; not venial.

Though every sin of itself be mortal, yet all are not equally mortal; but some more, some less.

Perkins.

5. Human; belonging to man.

They met me in the day of success; and I have learned by the perfected report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Macbeth

Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath

To time and mortal custom. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The voice of God

To mortal ear is dreadful; they beseech,
That Moses might report to them his will,
And terror space. Milton, P. L.

Success, the mark no mortal wit,
Or surest hand, can always hit. Butler.

No one enjoyment but is liable to be lost by ten thousand accidents, out of all mortal power to prevent.

South, Sermon.

6. Extreme; violent. A low word.

The birds were in a mortal apprehension of the beetles, till the sparrow reasoned them into understanding. L'Estrange.

The nymph grew pale, and in a mortal fright,
Spent with the labour of so long a flight;
And now despairing, cast a mournful look Upon the streams. Dryden.

MORTAL. n. s.

1. Man; human being.

Warn poor mortals left behind. Tickell.

2. This is often used in ludicrous language.

I can behold no mortal now,
For what's an eye without a brow? Prior.

MORTALITY. n. s. [from mortal.]

1. Subjection to death; state of a being subject to death.

When I saw her die,
I then did think on your mortality. Carew.

I point out mistakes in life and religion, that we might guard against the springs of error, guilt, and sorrow, which surround us in every state of mortality. Watts, Logick.

2. Death.

I beg mortality

Rather than life preserv'd with infamy. Shakspeare.
Gladly would I meet

Mortality my sentence. Milton, P. L.

3. Power of destruction.

Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

4. Frequency of death.

The rise of keeping those accounts, first began in the year 1592, being a time of great mortality.

Granville.

5. Human nature.

A single vision so transports them, that it makes up the happiness of their lives; mortality cannot bear it often.

Dryden.

Take these tears, mortality's relief,

And till we share your joys, forgive our grief.

Pope.

To MORTALIZE.* v. a. [from mortal.]

To make mortal.

We know you're flesh and blood as well as men, And, when we will, can mortalize and make you so again.

A. Brome.

MORTALLY. adv. [from mortal.]

1. Irrecoverably; to death.

In the battle of Landen you were not only dangerously, but in all appearance mortally wounded.

Dryden.

2. Extremely; to extremity. A low ludicrous word.

Adrian mortally envied poets, painters, and artificers, in works wherein he had a vein to excel.

Bacon, Essays.

Know all, who would pretend to my good grace, I mortally dislike a damning face.

Granville.

MORTAR.* n. s. [morcepe, Saxon; mortarium, Latin; mortier, French.]

1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.

Except you could Bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war.

Bacon.

The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the comminution of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar.

Ray on Creation.

2. A short wide cannon, out of which bombs are thrown.

Those arms, which for nine centuries had brav'd The wrath of time, on antique stone engrav'd, Now torn by mortars stand yet undefac'd

On nobler trophies by thy valour rais'd.

Granville.

MORTAR. n. s. [morter, Dutch; mortier, French.] Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mixed up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick. Wolfius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, so as to foul the water it is washed in: he also finds fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and die before they use it; therefore he advises, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be used.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

They had brick for stone, and slime for mortar.

Gen. xi. 3.

Lime hot out of the kiln mixed soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other.

Mortimer.

MORTER.* n. s. [mortier, Fr. Cotgrave.]

A lamp or light; a chamber-lamp.

An act may pass for public registries of land, by which all purchasers or mortgages may be secured of all monies they lay out.

Temple, Miscel.

MORTGAGER. n. s. [from mortgage.] One that gives a mortgage.

MORTIFEROUS. adj. [mortifer, Latin.]

Fatal; deadly; destructive.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from so dead, so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

These murmurings, like a mortiferous herb, are poisonous, even in their first spring.

Gou. of the Tongue.

MORTIFICATION. n. s. [mortification, Fr.; from mortify.]

1. The state of corrupting, or losing the vital qualities; gangrene.

It appeareth in the gangrene, or mortification of flesh, either by opiates, or intense colds.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

My griefs ferment and rage, Nor less than wounds immedicable, Rankle and fester, and gangrene, To black mortification.

Milton, S. A.

2. Destruction of active qualities.

Inquire what gives impediment to union or restitution, which is called mortification; as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine.

Bacon.

3. The act of subduing the body by hardships and macerations.

A diet of some fish is more rich and alkaliescent than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. Humiliation; subjection of the passions.

The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable.

Tillotson.

You see no real mortification, or self-denial, no eminent charity, no profound humility, no heavenly affection, no true contempt of the world, no Christian weakness, no sincere zeal, or eminent piety, in the common lives of Christians.

Law.

5. Vexation; trouble.

It is one of the vexatious mortifications of a studious man, to have his thoughts disordered by a tedious visit.

L'Estrange.

We had the mortification to lose the sight of Munich, Augsburg, and Ratisbon.

Addison on Italy.

MORTIFIEDNESS.* n. s. [from mortified.]

This makes him careful of every temper of his heart, give alms to all that he hath, watch, and fast, and mortify, and live according to the strictest rules of temperance, meekness, and humanity. Law.

MORTISE. n. s. [mortaise, mortoise, French.] A hole cut into wood that another piece may be put into it, and form a joint.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise. Shakespeare, Othello.

Under one skin are parts variously mingled,
some with cavities, as mortises to receive, others with tenons to fit cavities. Ray.

To MORTISE. v. a.

1. To cut with a mortise; to join with a mortise.

'Tis a massy wheel,
To whose huge spoke ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoin'd. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
The walls of spiders' legs are made,
Well mortis'd and finely laid. Drayton, Nymphid.

2. It seems in the following passage improperly used.

The one half of the ship being finished, and by help of a screw launched into the water, the other half was joined by great brass nails mortised with lead. Arbutnot on Coins.

MORTMAIN. † n. s. [morte and main, Fr.] Such a state of possession as makes it unalienable; whence it is said to be in a dead hand, in a hand that cannot shift away the property.

It were meet that some small portion of lands were allotted since no more mortmains are to be looked for. Spenser.

Either to enliven the pallid deadness of it, [the face,] and to redeem it from mortmain; or to pair and match the unequal cheeks to each other.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 62.

Lands in mortmain are a dead weight upon commerce. Warburton, Sermon. 31.

MORTPAY. n. s. [mort and pay.] Dead pay; payment not made.

This parliament was merely a parliament of war, with some statutes conducing thereunto; as the severe punishing of mortpayes, and keeping back of soldiers' wages. Bacon.

MORTRESS. n. s. [from mortier de sagesse, French. Skinner.] A dish of meat of various kinds beaten together.

A mortress made with the brawn of capons, stamped, strained, and mingled with like quantity of almond butter, is excellent to nourish the weak. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MORTUARY. † n. s. [mortuaire, French; mortuarium, Latin.]

1. A burial-place. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson, or any of our lexicographers. See also the adjective mortuary.

Look on thy full table as a mortuary of the dispeopled elements; where their slain are huddled up. Whitlock, Memoirs of the Eng. (1654), p. 36.

2. A gift left by a man at his death to his parish church, for the recompence of his personal tithes and offerings not duly paid in his life-time. Harris. — Mortuaries are a kind of ecclesiastical heriots, being a customary gift claimed by and due to the minister in very many parishes on the death of his parishioners. They seem to have been originally, like lay heriots, only a voluntary bequest to the church. Blackstone.

MORTUARY.  adj.* [mortuaire, French.] Belonging to the burial of the dead.

Near the pyramids and mortuary caves.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 323.

MOSAICAL. † adj. [mosaïque, French; MOSA'ICK.] supposed to be corrupted from musæus, Latin. Dr. Johnson. —

Mosaic work, the opus musivum of the Latins; Gr. Barb. μῦσα, tessella variè picturata; whence μῦσῆιον, musaicum, mosaicum. V. Meursii Gloss.] Mosaic is a kind of painting in small pebbles, cockles, and shells of sundry colours; and of late days likewise with pieces of glass figured at pleasure; an ornament in truth, of much beauty, and long life, but of most use in pavements and floorings. Wotton, Architecture.

The trees were to them [the flowers] a pavilion, and they to the trees a mosaic floor.

Sidney, Arcad. b. 1.

Each beauteous flower,
Iris all hues, roses, and jessamin,
Rear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and wrought

Milton, P. L.

The most remarkable remnant of it is a very beautiful mosaic pavement, the finest I have ever seen in marble; the parts are so well joined together, that the whole piece looks like a continued picture. Addison on Italy.

MOSAICAL.  adj.* Denoting the writings MOSA'ICK. } or law of Moses.

For his acquaintance with the Mosaic learning, as it is more credible in itself, so I have also better proof. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 188.

The Mosaic sacrifices were types (and by both the dispensations of the Law and Gospel declared to be so) of the great vicarious sacrifice of the cross. Warburton, Div. Reg. ix. 2.

MOSCHATEL. n. s. [moschatellina, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

MOSKERED.  adj.* [maschel, mascher, Teut. macula, labes. Our word is also masked in the Craven Dialect. Grose gives this northern word in the form of moskered.] Rotten; decayed.

The teeth stand thin, or loose, or moskered at the root. Granger on Eccles. (1621), p. 320.

MOSQUE. † n. s. [mosquée, French; moschit, Turkish. Dr. Johnson. — From the Arab. masgiad, a place of worship.] A Mahometan temple.

The very Turks have their moschs or places to pray in. Hallywell, Acc. of Farnalism, (1673), p. 46.

In this mosque we saw several large incense-pots, candlesticks for altars, and other church-furniture, being the spoils of Christian churches at the taking of Cyprus. Maundrel, Trav. p. 14.

MOSS. † n. s. [muscus, Latin; meof, Sax.; mossa, Su. Goth. muscus. Spegel.]

1. A plant.

Though moss was formerly supposed to be only an excrescence produced from the earth and trees, yet it is no less a perfect plant than those of greater magnitude, having roots, flowers, and seeds, yet cannot be propagated from seeds by any art: the botanists distinguish it into many species: it chiefly flourishes in cold countries, and in the winter season, and is many times very injurious to fruit trees: the only remedy in such cases is to cut down part of the trees, and plough up the ground between those left remaining; and in the spring, in moist weather, you should with an iron instrument scrape off the moss. Miller.

Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees; but it may be better sorted as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.

Houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining ozers fenc'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.

Such mosses as grow upon walls, roofs of houses, and other high places, have seeds that when shaken out of their vessels, appear like vapour or smoke. Ray on the Creation.

2. A morass, or boggy place. [mossa, Su. Goth. mussa, low Latin.] Still used in the north of England.

In many of the mosses of the West Riding of Yorkshire are often dug up birch-trees.

Evelyn, 1 ch. xvii. § 2.

The justices of Northumberland and Cumberland may make order in sessions for charging the respective counties for securing the same against the moss-troopers; that is, thieves and robbers, who, after having committed offences in the borders, do escape through the wastes and mosses.

Stat. 13 & 14 Ch. II. c. 22.

To Moss. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with moss.

An oak whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Will these moss'd trees,
That have out-liv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out?

Shakespeare, Timon.

MOSS-GROWN.  adj.* Covered or overgrown with moss.

The moss-grown domes with spiry turrets crown'd. Pope, Eloisa to Abelard.

The rude and moss-grown beech

O'er-canopies the glade. Gray, Ode 1.

MOSSENESS. n. s. [from mossy.] The state of being covered or overgrown with moss.

The herbs withered at the top, sheweth the earth to be very cold, and so doth the mossiness of trees. Bacon.

MOSSEY. adj. [from moss.] Overgrown with moss; covered with moss.

Old trees are more mossy far than young; for that the sap is not so frank as to rise all to the boughs, but tieth by the way, and putteth out moss. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

About the mossy brooks and springs,
And all inferior beauteous things. Conway.

The mossy fountains and the sylvan shades
Delight no more. Pope, Messiah.

MOST. adj. the superlative of more. [mært, Saxon; meest, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Tooke has charged Junius with saying untruly that most is formed from the positive mæpe, having mæppe as the comparative, and mæpært, by contraction mært, as the superlative. But candour required that this singularity in the Saxon should have been mentioned, that mæpe is used as a positive, magnus, and a comparative, major; while mæpært is the superlative. It does not appear, indeed, that this is the origin of mært, which occurs in the simple form of maists, M. Goth. from the comparative maiza. Dr. Jamieson in V. MA.

And thus Serenius deduces most; M. Goth. maiza, maists; Icel. meire, moire, moist, most, major, maximus.]

1. Consisting of the greatest number; consisting of the greatest quantity.

office or character of a mother.

Thou shalt see the blessed mother-maid
Exalted more for being good,
Than for her interest of motherhood. Dorrie.

Mo'THERING.* adj. To go a mothering, is to visit parents on Midlent Sunday;
a custom derived, as Cowel informs us,
from persons, in the times of popery,
visiting their mother-church on that day,
and making their offerings at the high altar. The custom is yet retained in some places, and is also known by the name of midlenting.

I'll to thee a sinnell bring,
'Gainst thou go'st a mothering;
So that, when she blesteth thee,
Half that blessing thou'll give me.

Herrick, Hesperides, p. 278.

Mo'THERLESS. adj. [from mother.] Destitute of a mother; orphan of a mother.

I might shew you my children, whom the rigour of your justice would make complete orphans,

Mo'TION.† n. s. [motion, French; motio,
Lat.]

1. The act of changing place: opposed to rest.

Immediate are the acts of God, more swift
Than time or motion. Milton, P. L.

The sedentary Earth,
Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
Her end without least motion. Milton, P. L.

2. That part of philosophy which considers bodies as acting on each other; to which belong the laws of motion.

3. Animal life and action.
Devoid of sense and motion. Milton, P. L.

The soul
O'er ministerial members does preside,
To all their various provinces divide,
Each member move, and every motion guide.
Blackmore.

4. Manner of moving the body; port;
gait.

Speaking or mute, all comeliness and grace
Attend thee, and each word, each motion form.
Milton, P. L.

Virtue too, as well as vice, is clad
In flesh and blood so well, that Plato had Beheld, what his high fancy once embrac'd
Virtue with colours, speech and motion grac'd.
Waller.

5. Change of posture; action.
By quick instinctive motion up I sprung.

Encourag'd thus she brought her younglings
nigh,
Watching the motions of her patron's eye. Dryden.

6. Military march, or remove.
See the guards,

By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect
Their motion. Milton, P. L.

7. Agitation; intestine action.
My womb

Prodigious motion felt, and rueful throes.
Milton, P. L.

Cease, cease thou foaming ocean,
For what's thy troubled motion
To that within my breast?

8. Direction; tendency.
In our proper motion we ascend. Milton, P. L.

9. Impulse communicated.
Whether that motion, vitality and operation, were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God. Raleigh.

Carnality within raises all the combustion without: this is the great wheel to which the clock owes its motion. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Love awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool.

Dryden.

10. Tendency of the mind; thought impressed.

Let a good man obey every good motion rising in his heart, knowing that every such motion proceeds from God. South.

11. Proposal made.

What would you wish me?
— Your father and my uncle have made motions;
if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his dole. Shakspeare.

If our queen and this young prince agree,
I'll join my younger daughter, and my joy,
To him forthwith, in holy wedlock bands.
— Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion.

Shakspeare.

12. [In old language.] A puppet show;
a puppet, and in a sense of contempt.

He compassed a motion of the prodigal son, and married a tinker's wife, within a mile where my land and living lies. Shakspeare.

I would dance at may-poles, and make syllabubs; as a country-gentlewoman, keep a good house, and come up to term to see motions.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

If he be that motion, that you tell me of,
And make no more noise, I shall entertain him.

Beaumont and Fl. Rule a Wife.

This travelling motion has been abroad in quest of strange fashions. Marmion, Antiquary.

To Mo'TION.† v. a. [from the noun.] To propose.

I want friends to motion such a matter.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 576.

Sir, the thing
(But that I would not seem to counsel you)
I should have motion'd to you at the first.

B. Jonson, Fox.

Thou, that, after the impetuous rage of five bloody mundations, — when we were quite breathless of thy free grace, didst motion peace and terms of covenant with us.

Milton, Of Reform. B. 2.

To Mo'TION.* v. n. To advise; to make proposal; to offer plans.

Well hast thou motion'd, well thy thoughts
employ'd,

How we might best fulfil the work which here
God hath assign'd us. Milton, P. L.

Mo'TIONER.* n. s. [from motion.] A mover. Not in use. Cotgrave.

Mo'TIONLESS. adj. [from motion.] Wanting motion; being without motion.

We cannot free the lady that sits here,
In stony fetters fixt, and motionless. Milton, Comus.
Ha! Do I dream? Is this my hop'd success?
I grow a statue, stiff and motionless.

Dryden, Aureng.

Should our globe have had a greater share
Of this strong force, by which the parts cohere;
Things had been bound by such a pow'ful chain,
That all would fix'd and motionless remain.

Blackmore.

Mo'TIVE. adj. [motivus, Lat.]

1. Causing motion; having moment.
Shall every motive argument used in such kind of conferences be made a rule for others still to conclude the like by, concerning all things of like nature, when as probable inducements may lead them to the contrary?

Hooker.

2. Having the power to move; having power to change place; having power to pass foremost to motion.

The nerves serve for the conveyance of the motive faculty from the brain; the ligatures for the strengthening of them, that they may not flag in motion. Wilkins.

We ask you whence does motive vigour flow? Blackmore.

That fancy is easily disproved from the motive power of souls embodied, and the gradual increase of men and animals. Bentley.

MOTIVE.† n. s. [old Fr. motive, cause.]

1. That which determines the choice; that which incites the action.

Hereof we have no commandment, either in nature or Scripture, which doth exact them at our hands; yet those motives there are in both, which draw most effectually our minds unto them. Hooker.

Why in that rawness left you wife and children, Those precious motives, those strong knots of love, Without leave-taking. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

What can be a stronger motive to a firm trust on our Maker, than the giving us his Son to suffer for us? Addison.

The motive for continuing in the same state is only the present satisfaction in it; the motive to change is always some uneasiness. Locke.

2. Mover. Not in use.

Heaven brought me up to be my daughter's dower;

As it hath faded her to be my motive And helper to a husband. Shakespeare, All's Well.

Her wanton spirits look out At every joint, and motive of her body. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

MOTLEY.† adj. [supposed to be corrupted from medley; perhaps from mothlike, coloured, spotted or variegated like a garden-moth. Dr. Johnson. — But we are to remember that medley was anciently applied in the present sense of mixed colour; which renders the corruption of motley more probable. See MOTLEY. Lydgate has "floures of sundry motles," i. e. colours.] Mingled of various colours.

They that come to see a fellow I, a long motley coat, guarded with yellow, Will be deceiv'd. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

TO MOVE. v. n.

1. To be in a state of changing place; not to be at rest.

Whether heaven move or earth
Imports not, if thou reckon right. Milton, P. L.
The senses represent the earth as immovable;
for though it do move in itself, it rests to us who are carried with it. Glanville.

2. To have a particular direction of passage.

The sun
Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat.

Milton, P. L.

3. To go from one place to another.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say a moving grove. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

On the green bank I sat and listen'd long,
Nor till her lay was ended could I move.

But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove. Dryd.
This saying, that God is the place of spirits, being literal, makes us conceive that spirits move up and down, and have their distances and intervals in God, as bodies have in space. Locke.

When we are come to the utmost extremity of body, what is there that can put a stop, and satisfy the mind, that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.

Any thing that moves round about in a circle in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move, but seems to be a perfect entire circle of that matter. Locke.

The goddess moves

To visit Paphos, and her blooming groves. Pope, Odys.

4. To have vital action.

In him we live, move, and have our being.

Acts, xvii. 28.

Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you. Gen.

up, nor moved for him, he was full of indignation.

Esth. v. 9.

MOVE. n. s. The act of moving, commonly used at chess.

I saw two angels play'd the mate;
With man, alas! no otherwise it proves,
An unseen hand makes all their moves. Cowley.

MOVELESS. adj. Unmoved; not to be put out of the place.

The lungs, though untouched, will remain moveless as to any expansion or contraction of their substance. Boyle.

The Grecian phalanx, moveless as a tow'r,
On all sides batter'd, yet resists his pow'r.

Pope, Ælud.

MOVEMENT. n. s. [mouvement, French.]

1. Manner of moving.

What farther relieves descriptions of battles, is the art of introducing pathetic circumstances about the heroes, which raise a different movement in the mind, compassion and pity.

Pope, Ess. on Homer.

Under workmen are expert enough at making a single wheel in a clock, but are utterly ignorant how to adjust the several parts, or regulate the movement. Swift.

2. Motion.

Could he whose laws the rolling planets bind,
Describe or fix one movement of the mind? Pope.

MOV'ENT. adj. [movens, Lat.] Moving.

If it be in some part movent, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

MOV'ENT. n. s. [movens, Lat.] That which moves another.

That there is a motion which makes the vicissitudes of day and night, sense may assure us;
but whether the sun or earth be the common movent, cannot be determined but by a further appeal. Glanville, Scepis.

MOV'ER. n. s. [from move.]

1. The person or thing that gives motion.

O thou eternal mover of the heavens,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch! Shaksp.
The strength of a spring were better assisted by the labour of some intelligent mover, as the heavenly orbs are supposed to be turned.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

2. Something that moves, or stands not still.

You as the soul, as the first mover, you
Vigour and life on every part bestow. Waller.
So orbs from the first mover motion take,
Yet each their proper revolutions make. Dryden.

3. A proposer.

See here these movers, that do prize their honours

At a crack'd drachm; cushions, leaden spoons,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

If any question be moved concerning the doctrine of the church of England expressed in the thirty-nine articles, give not the least ear to the movers thereof. Bacon.

MOUGH.* n. s. [Saxon, moðe.] A MOUGHT.† adj. moth.

Your cloths ben eten of moughts
Wicliffe, St. James, v.

Ne mough after bite it.
P. Ploughman, fol. 67. b.

MOUGHT.† Used for might. Obsolete.

Dr. Johnson. — It is the pret. of the old verb mowe, now converted into may.

Godfrido this both heard, and saw, and knew,
Yet nould with death them chastise, though he mought. Fairfax, Tass. xiii. 70.

MOV'ING.* n. s. [from move.] Motive;
impulse.

Represent the first movings of the heart towards any forbidden object, as unlawful in themselves, and destructive in their consequence.

South, Serm. v. 162.

The pretext of piety is but like the hand of a clock, set indeed more conspicuously, but directed wholly by the secret movings of carnality within. Decay of Chr. Piety.

MOV'ING. participial adj. [from move.]

Pathetic; touching; adapted to affect the passions.

Great Jupiter,

The moving prayer of Æacus did grant,
And into men and women turn'd the ant.

Blackmore.

MOV'INGLY. adj. [from moving.] Pathetically; in such a manner as to seize
the passions.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker.

I would have had them write more movingly.

Shakespeare.

His air, his voice, his looks, and honest soul,
Speak all so movingly in his behalf,
I dare not trust myself to hear him talk.

Addison, Cato.

MOV'INGNESS.* n. s. [from moving.]

Power to affect the passions.

There is a strange movingness, and, if the epithet be not too bold, a kind of heavenly magick to be found in some passages of the Scripture, which is to be found no where else.

Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 242.

MOULD.† n. s. [moegel, Swedish. Dr.

Johnson. — From mouiller, Fr. to wet or moisten; mouillé, anglicised, becoming mouilled, mouill'd, mould. Mr. H. Tooke.

— Skinner had proposed a similar derivation; softness, he says, being the occasion of mould. Menage derives mouiller from the Lat. molliare, to soften.]

1. A kind of concretion on the top or outside of things kept motionless and damp; now discovered by microscopes to be perfect plants.

All moulds are inceptions of putrefaction, as the moulds of pies and flesh, which moulds turn into worms. Bacon.

Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but may be better sorted as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.

Another special affinity is between plants and mould, or putrefaction: for all putrefaction; if it dissolve not in aerefaction, will, in the end, issue into plants. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The malt made in summer is apt to contract mould. Mortimer.

A hermit, who has been shut up in his cell in a college, has contracted a sort of mould and rust upon his soul, and all his airs have awkwardness in them. Watts.

2. M. Goth. muld; Icel. mold; Saxou, molb. Earth; soil; ground in which any thing grows.

Those moulds that are of a bright chesnut or hazelly colour are accounted the best; next to that, the dark grey and russet moulds are accounted best; the light and dark ash-colour are reckoned the worst, such as are usually found on common or heathy ground: the clear tawny is by no means to be approved, but that of a yellowish colour is reckoned the worst of all; this is commonly found in wild and waste parts of the country, and for the most part produces nothing but goss, furz, and fern. All good lands after rain, or breaking up by the spade, will emit a good smell; that being always the best that is neither too unctuous or too lean, but such as will easily dissolve; of a just consistence between sand and clay. Miller.

Though worms devour me, though I turn to mould,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold.

Sandys, Paraph.

The black earth, every where obvious on the surface of the ground, we call mould. Woodward.

3. Matter of which any thing is made.

When the world began,

One common mass compos'd the mould of man.

Dryden.

Nature form'd me of her softest mould,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my weak sex.

Addison, Cato.

4. [Span. molde; Fr. moule.] The matrix in which any thing is cast; in which any thing receives its form.

If the liturgies of all the ancient churches be compared, it may be perceived they had all one original mould. Hooker.

A dangerous precedent were left for the casting of prayers into certain poetical moulds. Hooker.
 French churches all cast according unto that mould which Calvin had made. Hooker.
 My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
 Wherein this trunk was fram'd. Shaksp. Coriol.
 You may have fruit in more accurate figures, according as you make the moulds.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The liquid ore he drain'd
 Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
 First his own tools: then what might else be wrought
 We may hope for new heavens and a new earth, more pure and perfect than the former; as if this was a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross and coarse parts, and then cast the mass again into a new and better mould. Burnet.
 Sure our souls were near allied, and thine
 Cast in the same poetick mould with mine. Dryden.

Here in fit moulds to Indian nations known,
 Are cast the several kinds of precious stone.
Blackmore.

5. Cast; form.

No mates for you
 Unless you were of gentler, milder mould.
Shakspere,
 William earl of Pembroke was a man of another mould, and making, being the most universally beloved of any man of that age, and having a great office, he made the court itself better esteemed, and more revered in the country.
Clarendon.

Nor virtue, wit, nor beauty, could
 Preserve from death's hand this their heavenly mould.
Carew.

Learn
 What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
 Or substance, how endu'd, and what their power,
 And where their weakness. Milton, P. L.
 So must the writer, whose productions should Take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould.
Waller.

From their main-top joyful news they hear
 Of ships, which by their mould bring new supplies.
Dryden.

Hans Carvel, impotent and old,
 Married a lass of London mould. Prior.

6. The suture or contexture of the skull.

It is used in a sense a little strained by Shakspere.

New honours come upon him,
 Like our strange garments cleave not to their mould,
 But with the end of use. Shakspere, Macbeth.

8. A spot: as, an iron-mould. [Goth. malō, rust; Saxon, mal, a spot.] More correctly, and anciently, mole.

Thy best cote, Hankin,
 Hath many moles and spots.
P. Ploughman, fol. 65.

To MOULD.† v. n. [from the noun. Dr. Johnson.—Saxon. Mr. Tyrwhitt.—Certainly allied to molen, vetus Fland. cariem contrahere. Kilian. The same with meluwen, Teut. to be worm-eaten, from meluwe, a little worm; whence multen, Su. rotten, putrified. But see the deduction from the Fr. mouiller, by Mr. Tooke; and it must be observed, our word was at first written moule, and mowle.] To contract concreted matter; to gather mould; to rot; to breed worms; to putrify.
 Let us not moulten thus in idleness.
Chaucer, Man of Lawes Prol.

For feare of worme-eatyng, mowlynge, or stynking. Bale, Acts of Eng. Vol. P. ii. sign. O. 1.
 When the host reserved beginneth to mould or putrefie, and should ingender wormes, then an other substance succedeth it.
Abp. Cranmer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 400.
 Pureness cannot moule, nor sweetness cannot be sour.
Abp. Cranmer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 401.

In wounds, in waves, in wars she wants to dwell,
 And will be found with peril and with pain;
 Ne can the man that moulds in idle cell
 Unto her happy mansion attain. Spenser, F. Q.
 There be some houses wherein sweet meats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than in others. Bacon.

To MOULD.† v. a. To cover with mould; to corrupt by mould.

Shall never chest belyen it, ne mough after byte it. P. Ploughman, Fis. fol. 71.
 The gylt of man with rust of synne ymoulded. Lydgate, Lye of our Lady, B. 2.
 Sour wyne, and moulded bread.
Abp. Cranmer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 299.
 Very coarse, hoary, moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon their spears, railing against Ferdinand, who made no better provision.
Kwelles, Hist. of the Turks.

To MOULD.† v. a. [mouler, French.]
 1. To form; to shape; to model.

I feel
 Of what coarse metal ye are moulded.
Shakspere, Hen. VIII.
 Here is the cap your worship did bespeak;
 Why this was moulded on a poringer,
 A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd. Shakspere.
 The king had taken such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a master-piece, and to mould him platonically to his own idea.
Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

Did I request thee, Maker, from my clay
 To mould me new?
 He forgeth and mouldeth metals, and builds houses. Hale.

By education we may mould the minds and manners of youth into what shape we please, and give them the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

Then rose the seed of chaos, and of night,
 Of dull and vernal a new world to mould,
 And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold.

A faction in England, under the name of puritan, moulded up their new schemes of religion with republican principles in government. Swift.

For you alone he stole
 The fire that forms a manly soul;
 Then, to complete it every way,
 He moulded it with female clay. Swift, Miscell.
 Fabellus would never learn any moral lessons till they were moulded into the form of some fiction or fable like those of Æsop. Watts.

2. To knead: as, to mould bread. Ainsworth.

MO'ULDALE. adj. [from mould.] That may be moulded.

The differences of figurate and not figurate, mouldable and not mouldable, are plebeian notions. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MO'ULDER.† n. s. [from mould.] One who moulds.

We are against those unthinking, overbearing people, who, in these odd times, under that pretence, [freedom of thought,] set up for reformers, and new moulders of the constitution.
Bp. Berkeley, Disc. Addr. to Magistrates.

To MO'ULDER. v. n. [from mould.] To be turned to dust; to perish in dust; to be diminished; to wear or waste away.

If he had sat still, the enemies army would have mouldered to nothing, and been exposed to any advantage he would take. Clarendon.

Whatsoever moulders, or is wasted away, is carried into the lower grounds, and nothing brought back again. Burnet.

Those farmed stones despoiled of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time decay, wear, and moulder away, and are frequently found defaced, and broken to pieces.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.
 To them by smiling Jove 'twas given,
 Great William's glories to recal,
 When statues moulder, and when arches fall.

Prior.
 Finding his congregation moulder every Sunday, and hearing what was the occasion of it, he resolved to give his parish a little Latin in his turn.

Addison, Spect.
 To MO'ULDER. v. a. [from mould.] To turn to dust; to crumble.

The natural histories of Switzerland talk of the fall of those rocks when their foundations have been moldered with age, or rent by an earthquake. Addison on Italy.

With nodding arches, broken temples spread,
 The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead;
 Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age,
 Some hostile fury. Pope.

MO'ULDINESS. n. s. [from mouldy.] The state of being mouldy.

Flesh, fish, and plants, after a mouldiness, rottenness, or corrupting, will fall to breed worms. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MO'ULDING. n. s. [from 'mould.] Ornamental cavities in wood or stone.

Hollow mouldings are required in the work. Mozon.

MO'ULDWARP. n. s. [mols, and peoppan, Saxon. This is, I believe, the proper and original name of the talpa: a mould-warp is a creature that turns mould. The word is still retained, though sometimes pronounced mouldy-warp.] A mole; a small animal that throws up the earth.

Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
 Whose base effect through cowardly distrust
 Of his own wings, dare not to heaven fly,
 But like a mouldwarp in the earth doth lie.

Spenser.
 While they play the mouldwarps, unsavoury
 damps distemper their heads with annoyance only for the present.

Carew.
 With gins we betray the vermin of the earth,
 namely, the ficht and the mouldwarp.

Walton, Angler.

MO'ULDY. adj. [from mould.] Overgrown with concretions.

Is thy name mouldy?
 —Yea.
 —'Tis the more time thou wert used.
 —Ha, ha, ha; most excellent. Things that are mouldy lack use. Well said, Sir John.

Shakspere, Hen. IV.

The marble looks white, as being exposed to the winds and salt sea-vapours, that by continually fretting it preserve it from that mouldy colour which others contract. Addison.

To MOULT.† v. n. [muyten, Teut. Thus our own word at first was mout or mowt; from muto, Latin, to change. "To mowten as fowls, plumeo." Prompt. Parv.] To shed or change the feathers; to lose feathers.

Some birds upon moulting turn colour, as Robin-red-breasts, after their moulting, grow to be red again by degrees. Bacon.

Time shall mould away his wings,
 Ere he shall discover

In the wide world world again
 Such a constant lover. Suckling.

The widow'd turtle hangs her modling wings,
And to the woods in mournful murmur sings.
Garth.

MOUN.* May; must. See MOWE.
TO MOUNCH.* } v. a. [mouch, to eat much.
TO MAUNCH. } Ainsworth. This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the obtunded action of toothless gums on a hard crust, or any thing eatable: it seems to be a corruption of the French word manger. Macbean, and Dr. Johnson. — It may be from the French macher, or mascher, to chew; obvious at least in mouch, as this word was also written; and as it is yet in some places pronounced. Or from the Su. Goth. mumsa, ægrè cibum masticare. But perhaps they are all to be referred to the Latin, mando, to eat. See MOUTh.] To chew; to masticate.

Some of them would mouche their meate alone.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. i. 915.

A sailor's wife had chesnuts in her lap,

And mouncht, and mouncht, and mouncht.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

MOUND.* n. s. [mubnian, Saxon, to defend. Dr. Johnson. — Goth. mund; Sæth. mynd, tutela; Icel. mynda, tueri; mund, manus. Serenius.] Any thing raised to fortify or defend: usually a bank of earth and stone.

His broad branches, laden with rich fee,
Did stretch themselves without the utmost bound
Of this great garden, compass'd with a mound.

Spenser, F. Q.

The sea's a thief whose liquid surge resolves
The mounds into salt tears.

Shakespeare, Tim. of Athens.

God had thrown

That mountain as his garden mound, high rais'd.

Milton, P. L.

Such as broke through all mounds of law, such as laughed at the sword of vengeance which divine justice brandished in their faces.

South, Serm.

Nor cold shall hinder me with horns and hounds
To thrid the thickets, or to leap the mounds.

Dryden.

The state of Milan is like a vast garden surrounded by a noble mound-work of rocks and mountains.

Addison.

TO MOUND.* v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify with a mound.

We will sweep the curled vallies,
Brush the banks that mound our alleys;
We will muster nature's dainties.

Dryden, Muses Elysium, (1630.)

A spacious city stood with firmest walls
Sure mounded.

Philips, Cider, B. i.

MOUNT.* n. s. [mount, Saxon; mont, Fr.; mons, Latin.] a hill.

1. A mountain; a hill.

Jacob offered sacrifice upon the mount.

Gen. xxxi. 54.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of snow.

Dryden.

2. An artificial hill raised in a garden or other place.

He might see what mounts they had in short time cast, and what a number there was of warlike soldiers.

Knolles.

3. A publick treasure, a bank. Now obsolete.

These examples confirmed me in a resolution to spend my time wholly in writing; and to put forth that poor talent God hath given me, not to particular exchanges, but to banks or mounts of perpetuity, which will not break.

Bacon.

TO MOUNT.* v. n. [monter, French.]

1. To rise on high.

Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high? Job, iii. 27.
I'll strive with troubled thoughts to take a nap,
Lest leaden slumber poise me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory.

Shakespeare.

A base ignoble mind,
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

Shakespeare.

The fire of trees and houses mounts on high,
And meets half-way new fires that show'r from sky.

Cowley.

If the liturgy should be offered to them, it would kindle jealousy, and as the first range of that ladder which should serve to mount over all their customs.

Clarendon.

Ambitious meteors set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun, not considering, that they have no more time allowed them in their mounting than the single revolution of a day; and that when the light goes from them they are of necessity to fall.

Dryden.

2. To tower; to be built up to great elevation.

Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish.

Job, xx. 6.

Bring then these blessings to a strict account,
Make fair deductions, see to what they mount.

Pope.

TO MOUNT.* v. a.

1. To raise aloft; to lift on high.

The fire that mounts the liquor till it runs o'er,
Seeming to augment, wastes it. Shakespeare.
What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye.

Shakespeare.

The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by.

Raleigh.

2. To ascend; to climb.

Shall we mount again the rural throne,
And rule the country kingdoms once our own?

Dryden.

3. To place on horseback; to furnish with horses.

Three hundred horses in high stables fed,
Of these he chose the fairest and the best,
To mount the Trojan troop.

Dryden, Æn.

Clear reason, acting in conjunction with a well-disciplined, but strong and vigorous fancy, seldom fail to attain their end: fancy without reason, is like a horse without a rider; and reason without fancy is not well mounted.

Grew, Cos. Sac.

4. To embellish with ornaments.

5. TO MOUNT guard. To do duty and watch at any particular post.

Is not "statio" properly a military term, signifying a soldier's being upon his duty, or (as we now say in England) mounting the guard?

Harris on the 53 Ch. of Isaiah, (2d ed. 1739,) p. 225.

6. TO MOUNT a cannon. To set a piece on its wooden frame for the more easy carriage and management in firing it.

MO'UNTAIN. n. s. [montaigne, French.]

1. A large hill; a vast protuberance of the earth.

And by his false worship such power he did gain,
As kept him o' the mountain, and us on the plain.

Raleigh.

The ark no more now floats, but seems on ground,
Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd.

Milton, P. L.

From Acmion's hands a rolling stone there came,
So large, it half deserv'd a mountain's name.

Dryden.

2. Any thing proverbially huge.

I had been drowned; a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man, and what should I have been when I had been swelled? I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Shakespeare.

She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe,
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body.

Shakspe.

MO'UNTAIN. adj. [montanus, Latin.] Found on the mountains; pertaining to the mountains; growing on the mountains.

Now for our mountain sport, up to yond hill,
Your legs are young.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n.

Shakespeare.

MOUNTAINE'ER.* n. s. [from mountain.
MO'UNTAINER.] This word is certainly written mountainer, as well as mountaineer, though Dr. Johnson notices only the latter. Nor has Bentley written it mountaineer, as Dr. Johnson exhibits the word in the example from his Sermons;
but mountainer. Mountainer also is in the old dictionary of Sherwood.]

1. An inhabitant of the mountains.
Amternian troops, of mighty fame,
And mountaineers that from Severus came.

Dryden, Æn.

A few mountaineers may escape, enough to continue human race; and yet being illiterate rusticks (as mountaineers always are) they can preserve no memoirs of former times.

Bentley, Serm. (ed. 1724,) p. 108.

2. A savage; a free booter; a rustick.
Yield, rustick mountaineer, Shakspe. Cymbeline.

Through all Turkie, especially in places desert, there are many mountaineers, or outlaws, like the wild Irish, who live upon spoil.

Blunt, Voyage into the Levant, (1650,) p. 24.

MO'UNTAINER. n. s. [from mountain.] A hillock; a small mount. Elegant, but not in use.
Her breasts sweetly rose up like two fair mountainets in the pleasant vale of Tempe.

Sidney.

MO'UNTAINOUS. adj. [from mountain.]
1. Hilly; full of mountains.
The ascent of the land from the sea to the foot of the mountains, and the height of the mountains from the bottom to the top, are to be computed, when you measure the height of a mountain, or of a mountainous land, in respect of the sea.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. Large as mountains; huge; bulky.
What custom wills in all things, should we do't,
Mountainous error would be too highly heapt
For truth to o'erpeer.

Shakespeare.

On earth, in air, amidst the seas and skies,
Mountainous heaps of wonders rise;
Whose towering strength will ne'er submit
To reason's batteries, or the mines of wit.

Prior.

3. Inhabiting mountains.
In destructions by deluge and earthquake, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant and mountainous people, that can give no account of the time past.

1. The act of cutting with a scythe.

It was the latter growth after the king's mov-

ings.

Amos, vii. 1.

2. Grimace; mockery.

Some Smithfield ruffian takes up some new mouwing with the mouth, some wrenching with the shoulder, some fresh, new oath, that will run round

in the mouth.

Ascham.

3. Ability.

Without whiche movwing the wretched wyl

shoulde languishe without effecte.

Chaucer, Boeth. iv. pr. 4.

Mo'XA. n. s. An Indian moss, used in the cure of the gout by burning it on the part aggrieved.

Temple.

MOYLE. n. s. A mule; an animal generated between the horse and the ass.

Ordinary husbandmen should quit breeding of horses, and betake themselves to moyles; a beast which will fare hardly, live very long, draw indif-ferently well, carry great burthens, and hath also a pace swift and easy enough.

Carew.

'Twould tempt a moyle to fury.

May.

MUCH.† adj. [Su. Goth. myeken, great, much; Icel. miok, mikit, much. Hence the Span. mucho, as well as our much.

Dr. Jamieson in V. MYCHE, the Scottish form of much. We had formerly the substantive mickel, apparently in the sense of magnitude, size; "of one michel and might." Vis. of P. Pl. fol. 89.

b. See Mr. Tyrwhitt's Gloss. in V.

MOKE.]

1. Large in quantity; long in time: opposed to little.

Thou shalt carry much seed out, and shalt gather but little in; for the locust shall consume it.

Deut. xxiv. 38.

I am well served, to take so much pains for one resolved to make away with himself.

L'Estrange.

You were pressed for the sea-service, and got off with much ado.

Swift, Dir. to Servants.

2. Many in number: opposed to few.

Let us know,

If't will tie up thy discontented sword,

And carry back to Sicily much tall youth,

That else must perish here.

Shaks. Ant. & Cleop.

MUCH. adv.

1. In a great degree; by far: before some word of comparison.

Isaac, thou art much mightier than we.

Gen. xxi. 16.

Excellent speech becometh not a fool, much less do lying lips a prince.

Prov. xxi. 17.

We have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?

Heb. xii. 9.

If they escaped not who refused him that spoke on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven.

Heb. xii. 25.

Full of doubt I stand,

Whether I should repent me now of sin

By me done or occasioned, or rejoice

Much more, that much more good thereof shall spring.

Milton, P. L.

Patron or intercessor none appear'd,

Much less that durst upon his own head draw

The deadly forfeiture.

Milton, P. L.

2. To a certain degree.

He charged them that they should tell no man:

but the more he charged them, so much the more

a great deal they published it.

St. Mark, vii. 36.

There is, said Michael, if thou well observe,

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught.

Milton, P. L.

3. To a great degree.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong

Life much, bent rather how I may be quit

Fairest and easiest of this cumbrous charge.

Milton, P. L.

So spake, so wish'd much humbled Eve, but fate

Subscrib'd not.

Milton, P. L.

Somewhat aw'd, I shook with holy fear,

Yet not so much but that I noted well

Who did the most in song and dance excel.

Dryden.

To thee thy much-afflicted mother flies,

And on thy succour and thy faith relies.

Dryden.

Your much-lov'd fleet shall soon

Besiege the petty monarchs of the land.

Dryden.

If his rules of reason be not better than his rules for health, he is not like to be much follow'd.

Baker on Learning.

Oh much experienc'd man!

Pope, Odys.

Sad from my natal hour my days have ran,

A much afflicted, much enduring man.

Pope, Odys.

4. Often, or long.

You pine, you languish, love to be alone,

Think much, speak little, and in speaking, sigh.

Dryden.

Homer shall last, like Alexander, long,

As much recorded, and as often sung.

Granville.

5. Nearly.

All left the world much as they found it, ever unquiet, subject to changes and revolutions.

Temple.

MUCH. n. s.

1. A great deal; multitude in number; abundance in quantity: opposed to a little.

They gathered against Moses and Aaron, and said, Ye take too much upon you.

Numb. xvi. 3.

Nor grudge I thee the much the Grecians give,
Nor murr'ning take the little I receive.

Dryden, Iliad.

They have much of the poetry of Mécænas, but little of his liberality. Dryden, Pref. to All for Love.

The fate of love is such,

That still it sees too little or too much. Dryden.

Much suffering heroes next their honours claim;
Those of less noisy and less guilty fame,
Fair virtue's silent train. Pope, Temple of Fame.

2. More than enough; a heavy service or burthen.

Thou think'st it much to tread the ooze

Of the salt deep. Shakspeare, Tempest.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies.

Milton, P. L.

This gracious act the ladies all approve,
Who thought it much a man should die for love,
And with their mistress join'd in close debate.

Dryden.

3. Any assignable quantity or degree.

The waters covered the chariots and horsemen;
there remained not so much as one. Ezod, xiv. 28.

We will cut wood out of Lebanon as much as thou shalt need. 2 Chron. ii. 16.

The matter of the universe was created before the flood; and if any more was created, then there must be as much annihilated to make room for it. Burnet, Theory.

Who is there of whom we can with any rational assurance, or perhaps so much as likelihood, affirm, here is a man whose nature is renewed, whose heart is changed. South.

4. An uncommon thing; something strange.

It was much that one that was so great a lover of peace should be happy in war.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing all that long duration which had past before that time.

Tillotson.

5. To make MUCH of. To treat with regard; to fondle; to pamper.

Though he knew his discourse was to entertain him from a more straight parley, yet he durst not but kiss his rod, and gladly make much of that entertainment which she allotted unto him. Sidney.

The king understanding of their adventure, suddenly falls to take a pride in making much of them, extolling them with infinite praises. Sidney.

When thou camest first,

Thou stroak'd'st, and mad'st much of me; and would'st give me

Water with berries in't. Shakspeare, Tempest.

- MUCH* at one. Nearly of equal value; of equal influence.

Then prayers are vain as curses, much at one
In a slave's mouth, against a monarch's power.

Dryden.

- MUCH* is often used in a kind of composition with participles both active and passive: when it is joined with a passive,
as much loved, it seems to be an adverb;
when it is joined with an active, as much enduring, it may be more properly considered as a noun.

- MU'CHEL*, adj. for muckle or mickle. [mýcel,
Saxon.] Much.

He had in arms abroad won muchel fame,
And fill'd far lands with glory of his might.

Spenser, F. Q.

- MU'CHNESS*, * n. s. [from much.] Quantity.
It is sometimes, in low language, used for quality: "much of a muchness,"
i. e. much of the same kind.

This sluggish humour is condemned long ago for a misspender of time. And surely it is not alone very dangerous, in regard to the quantity and muchness of time which it filcheth; but also in regard of the quality and goodness: for it ordinarily feeds gluttonously on the very fat of time; it eats the very flower of the day; and consumes the first fruits of our hours, even the morning season.

Whateley, Redemption of Time, (1634), p. 20.

- MU'CHWHAT*. adv. [much and what.]
Nearly.

The motion being conveyed from the brain of man to the fancy of another, it is there received;
and the same kind of strings being moved, and muchwhat after the same manner as in the first imaginant. Glauville, Scypis.

The bigness of her body and bill, as likewise the form of them, is muchwhat as follows.

More, Ant. against Atheism.

If we will disbelieve every thing, because we cannot know all things, we shall do muchwhat as wisely as he who would not use his legs because he had no wings to fly. Locke.

Unless he can prove celibatum a man or a woman, this Latin will be muchwhat the same with a solecism. Atterbury.

- MU'CID*. adj. [mucidus, Latin; mucre, Fr.]

Slimy; slimy.

- MU'CIDNESS*, n. s. [from mucid.] Sliminess; mustiness. Ainsworth.

- MUCILAGE*, n. s. [mucilage, French.]

A slimy or viscous mass; a body with moisture sufficient to hold it together.

Dissolution of gum tragacanth, and oil of sweet almonds, do commingle, the oil remaining on the top till they be stirred, and make the mucilage
somewhat more liquid. Bacon.

Your alaternus seed move with a broom, that the seeds clog not together, unless you will separate it from the mucilage, for then you must a little bruise it wet. Evelyn.

Both the ingredients improve one another; for the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation.

Ray on Creation.

- MUCILAGINOUS*. adj. [mucilagineus, Fr.
from mucilage.] Slimy; viscous; soft with some degree of tenacity.

There is a twofold liquor prepared for the inunction and lubrication of the heads or ends of the bones; an oily one, furnished by the marrow;
and a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glands
seated in the articulations. Ray on Creation.

There is a sort of magnetism in all, not muci- aginous but resinous gums, even in common rosin.

Grew, Cosmol. Sac.

- MUCILAGINOUS glands.*

Mucilaginous glands are of two sorts:
some are small, and in a manner miliary glands; the other sort are conglomerated, or many glandules collected and planted one upon another. Quincy.

- MUCILAGINOUSNESS*, n. s. [from mucila- ginous.] Sliminess; viscosity.

- MUCK*. † n. s. [meox, Saxon; mock, Su.
Goth. finus.]

1. Dung for manure of grounds.

Hale out thy mucke, and plow out thy ground.

Tusser.

It is usual to help the ground with muck, and likewise to recomfort with muck put to the roots;
but to water it with muck water, which is like to be more forcible, is not practised.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The swine may see the pearl, which yet he values but with the ordinary muck.

Glauville, Apology.

There are, who
Rich foreign mold on their ill-natur'd land
Induce laborious, and with fattening muck
Besmear the roots. Phillips.

Morning insects that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

2. Any thing low, mean, and filthy, Dr.
Johnson says, citing only the example from Spenser. The word may be rather intended simply for a heap, from the Saxon, mucg.

Reward of worldly muck doth foully blend,
And low abase the high heroic spirit

Spenser, F. Q.

Your gathering sires so long heap muck together,
That their kind sons, to rid them of their care,

Wish them in heaven. Beaum. & Fl. Span. Curate.

A huge mass of treasure — the fatal muck

We quarrell'd for. Beaum. & Fl. Sea-Voyage.

3. To run a Muck, signifies, I know not from what derivation, to run madly, and attack all that we meet. Dr. Johnson.
— Tavernier says, certain Java lords,
on a particular occasion, called the English traitors, and drawing their poisoned daggers cried a mocca upon the English!
killing a great number of them, before they had time to put themselves in a posture of defence. Voyages, vol. ii. p.
202. Again he tells us, that a Banta-mois, newly come from Mecca, was upon the design of moqua; that is, in their language, when the rascality of the Mahometans return from Mecca, they presently take their axe in their hand, which is a kind of poniard, the blade whereof is half poisoned, with which they run through the streets, and kill all those which are not of the Mahometan law, till they be killed themselves.
Ibid. p. 199. Rev. Mr. Pegge, Gent. Mag.
vol. xxxviii. p. 283. — The inhabitants of the islands to the eastward of Bengal, such as Sumatra, Burneo, Banco, and the coast of Malay, are very famous for cock-fighting, in which they carry gaming to a much greater excess than the customs of Europe can admit. They stake first their property; and when by repeated losses all their money and effects are gone, they stake their wives and children. If fortune still frowns, so that nothing is left, the losing gamester begins to chew or eat what is called bang, which I imagine to be the same as opium; when it begins to operate, he disfigures himself and furnishes himself with such weapons as he can get, the more deadly, the fitter for his purpose;
and the effect of the opium increasing,
he at length becomes mad. This madness is of the furious kind; and when it it seizes him, he rushes forth, and kills whatever comes in his way, whether man or beast, friend or foe; and commits every outrage which may be expected from a man in such circumstances. This is what the Indians call a-muck. Gent. Mag. vol. xl. p. 564. —
A-mocca, or a-muck, (for so the word should be written,) is used in the Malay language, adverbially, as one word, and signifies, if we may so write, killingly.
"He runs a-muck, i. e. he runs with a savage intent to kill whomsoever he meets." Malone, Dryden's Prose-Works, Add. and Emend. p. 155.]

Frontless and satire-proof he scow's the streets,
And runs an Indian muck at all he meets.

Dryden.

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
To run a muck, and tilt at all I meet. Pope, Hor.
MUCK.* adj. Moist; wet; Lincolnshire.
Grose.

TO MUCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with muck; to dung.

Why garden plot lately well trenched and muck
Would now be twifalowed. Tusser.

MUCKENDER.† n. s. [mouchoir, French; mocadero, Spanish; muccinum, low Lat. Dr. Johnson. — It is, in some places, called muckinger; and in Barret's old dictionary mucketer. The root is the Lat. mucus; old French mouc, whence moucadou, an old word for mouchoir.] A handkerchief.

Be of good comfort; take my muckinder,
And dry thine eyes. B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

For thy dull fancy a muckender is fit,
To wipe the slabbings of thy snotty wit. Dorset.

TO MUCKER.† v. a. [from muck, a heap; muck, Sax. mucchiare, Ital. to heap up; mucka, Icel.] To hoard up; to get or save meanly; a word used by Chaucer, and still retained in conversation.

That gold, and that money, shineth, and yeveth better renowe to them that dispenden it, than to thilke folk that muckeren it.

Chaucer, Boeth. ii. pr. 5.

Pense that he can muckre and ketche.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 1381.

MUCKERER.† n. s. [from mucker.] One that muckers; a miser; a niggard.

Avarice maketh alwaies muckers to be hated.

Chaucer, Boeth. ii. pr. 5.

MUCKHEAP.† n. s. [muck and heap.] A dunghill.

A very midden or muckheap of all the grossest errors and heresies of the Roman church.

Favour, Antiq. Triumph. over Novelty, (1619), p. 518.

MUCKHILL.† n. s. [muck and hill.] A dunghill.

Old Euclo — as he went from home, seeing a crow strut upon the muck-hill, returned in all haste, taking it for an ill sign his money was dugged up.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 116.

Hitherto amongst you I have liv'd,
Like an unsavoury muck-hill to myself.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

MUCKINGER.† See MUCKENDER.

MUCKMIDEN.* n. s. [muck and midden.] A dunghill. Used in the north of England. See MIDDEN.

MUCKINESS. n. s. [from mucky.] Nastiness; filth.

MUCKLE. adj. [mycel, Saxon.] Much.

MUCKSWEAT. n. s. [muck and sweat; in this low word, muck signifies wet, moist.] Profuse sweat.

MUCKWORM. n. s. [muck and worm.]

1. A worm that lives in dung.

2. A miser; a curmudgeon.

Worms suit all conditions;

Misers are muckworms, silkworms beaus,

And death-watches physicians. Swift, Miscel.

MUCKY. adj. [from muck.] Nasty; filthy.

Mucky filth his branching arms annoys,

And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave

acclays. Spenser, F. Q.

MUCOUS. adj. [mucosus, Latin.] Slimy; viscous.

The salamander being cold in the fourth, and moist in the third degree, and having also a mucous humidity above and under the skin, may a while endure the flame. Brown.

About these the nerves and other vessels make a fine web, covered over with a mucous substance, to moisten these papillæ pyramidales.

Cheyne, Philos. Principles.

MUCOUSNESS. n. s. [from mucous.] Slime; viscosity.

MUCRO. n. s. [Latin.] A point.

The mucro, or point of the heart, inclineth unto the left, by this position it giving way unto the ascension of the midriff. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MUCRONATED. adj. [mucro, Lat.] Narrowed to a sharp point.

Gems are here shot into cubes consisting of six sides, and mucronated or terminating in a point.

Woodward.

MUCULENT. adj. [from mucus, Lat.] Viscous; slimy. Dict.

MUCUS. n. s. [Latin.] It is more properly used for that which flows from the papillary processes through the os cribriforme into the nostrils; but it is also used for any slimy liquor or moisture, as that which daubs over and guards the bowels and all the chief passages in the body; and it is separated by the mucilaginous glands.

Quincy.

In the action of chewing, the mucus mixeth with the aliment: the mucus is an humour different from the spittle, and the great quantity of air which it contains helps to dissolve the aliment.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

MUD.† n. s. [moder, German; modd, Sax. Goth. cœnum.] The slime and uliginous matter at the bottom of still water.

The purest spring is not so free from mud.

As I am clear from treason. Shakespeare, Hen. VI. Water in mud doth putrefy, as not able to preserve itself. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The channel was dried up, and the fish left dead and sticking in the mud. L'Estrange.

The force of the fluid will separate the smallest particles, so as to leave vacant interstices, which will be again filled up by particles carried on by the succeeding fluid, as a bank by the mud of the current, which must be reduced to that figure which gives least resistance to the current.

Arbuthnot.

A fountain in a darksome wood,
Nor stain'd with falling leaves nor rising mud.

Addison.

TO MUD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bury in the slime or mud.

I wish

Myself were mudded in that oozy bed,
Where my son lies. Shakespeare, Tempest.

2. To make turbid; to pollute with dirt; to dash with dirt; to foul by stirring up the sediment.

I shall not stir in the waters which have been already mudded by so many contentious enquiries. Glanville, Sccepis.

MUDDILY. adv. [from muddy.] Turbidly; with foul mixture.

Lucilius writ not only loosely and muddily, with little art, and much less care, but also in a time which was not yet sufficiently purged from barbarism. Dryden.

MUDDINESS. n. s. [from muddy.] Turbidity; foulness caused by mud, dregs, or sediment.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber: the season of the year, the muddiness of the stream, with the many green trees hanging over it, put me in mind of the delightful image that Virgil has given when Æneas took the first view of it. Addison on Italy.

Turn the bottle upside down; by this means you will not lose one drop, and the froth will conceal the muddiness. Swift, Direct. to Servants.

TO MUDDL. v. a. [from mud.]

1. To make turbid; to foul; to make muddy.

The neighbourhood told him, he did ill to muddle the water and spoil the drink.

L'Estrange.

Yet let the goddess smile or frown,
Bread we shall eat, or white or brown;
And in a cottage, or a court,
Drink fine champagne, or muddled port. Prior.

2. To make half drunk; to cloud or stupefy.

I was for five years often drunk, always muddled; they carried me from tavern to tavern.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Epicurus seems to have had his brains so muddled and confounded, that he scarce ever kept in the right way, though the main maxim of his philosophy was to trust to his senses, and follow his nose. Bentley, Serm.

TO MUDDL.* v. n. To contract filth; to be in a dirty or confused state.

He never muddles in the dirt. Swift.

His summum bonum is muddling in parchments, Greville.

MUDDL.* n. s. [from the verb.] A confused or turbid state: a vulgar expression.

MUDDY. adj. [from mud.]

1. Turbid; foul with mud.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shakespeare.

Her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Carry it among the whistlers in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames. Shakespeare.

Who can a pure and crystal current bring
From such a muddy and polluted spring?

Sonnets, Paraph.

I strove in vain the infected blood to cure,
Streams will run muddy where the spring's impure. Roscommon.

Till by the fury of the storm full blown,
The muddy bottom o'er the clouds is thrown.

Dryden.

Out of the true fountains of science painters and staturaries are bound to draw, without amusing themselves with dipping in streams which are often muddy, at least troubled; I mean the manner of their masters, after whom they creep.

Dryden.

2. Impure; dark; gross.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,

But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims;
Such harmony is in immortal sounds;
But whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it.

Shakespeare.

If you chuse, for the composition of such ointment, such ingredients as do make the spirits a little more gross or muddy, thereby the imagination will fix the better. Bacon.

3. Soiled with mud.

His passengers

Expos'd in muddy weeds, upon the miry shore. Dryden.

4. Dark; not bright.

The black

A more inferior station seeks,
Leaving the fiery red behind,
And mingles in her muddy cheeks. Swift, Miscell.

5. Cloudy in mind; dull;

Do'st think I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Yet, I,

A dull and muddy mettle rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant in my cause,
And can say nothing. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

To MUDDY. v. a. [from mud.] To make muddy; to cloud; to disturb.

The people muddied,

Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers. Shakespeare.

Excess, either with an apoplexy, knocks a man on the head; or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water-shop, burns him down to the ground; or if it flames not out, charks him to a coal; muddies the best wit, and makes it only to flutter and froth high. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

MUDDY-HEADED. * adj. [muddy and head.] Having a cloudy understanding.

Many boys are muddy-headed, till they be clarified with age; and such afterwards prove the best. Fuller, Holy State, p. 100.

MU'DUCKER. n. s. [mud and suck.] A sea fowl.

In all water-fowl, their legs and feet correspond to that way of life; and in mudsuckers, two of the toes are somewhat joined, that they may not easily sink. Derham.

MU'DWALL. n. s. [mud and wall.]

1. A wall built without mortar, by throwing up mud and suffering it to dry.

If conscience contract rust or soil, a man may as well expect to see his face in a mudwall, as that such a conscience should give him a true report of his condition. South.

2. [Aposticon.] A bird so called.

Ainsworth.

MU'DWALLED. adj. [mud and wall.] Having a mud-wall.

As folks from mudwall'd tenement
Bring landlords pepper corn for rent;
Present a turkey, or a hen,

To those might better spare them ten. Prior.

To MUE.† v. a. [muer, Fr.]

1. To moult; to change feathers; to change. See To MEW.

Their nakedness with sackcloth let them hide,
And mue the vestments of their silken pride.

Quarles, Hist. of Jonah, (1620), H. 3.

2. To low as a cow; usually pronounced moo, though mue should seem to be the orthography. [muir, old French; muhen, Germ.; mugio, Lat.]

MUFF. n. s. [muff, Swedish.] A soft cover for the hands in winter.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough,

This a gantlet, that a muff. Cleveland.

What! no more favours, not a ribbon more,

Not fan, not muff? Suckling.

The lady of the spotted muff began. Dryden.

A child that stands in the dark upon his mother's muff, says he stands upon something, he knows not what. Locke.

MUFFIN. * n. s. A kind of light cake.

To MUFFLE.† v. a. [from mouffle, French; a winter glove. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the old French mufler, "la partie inférieure de la tête de quelques animaux." Lacombe. "Muffle, snout or muzzle." Cotgrave. The original meaning is to conceal part of the face; not to cover from the weather, as Dr. Johnson has given it; nor is there any occasion for his second distinction of to blindfold; most of the examples under which belong to the first.]

1. To conceal part or the whole of the face; "to muffle the mouth." Barret.

Alas that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his ill.

Shakespeare.

We've caught the woodcock, and will keep him muffled. Shakespeare, All's Well.

Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the fore-runner of death: when the malefactor comes once to be muffled, and the fatal cloth drawn over his eyes, we know that he is not far from his execution. South.

Bright Lucifer

That night his heavenly form obscur'd with tears;
And since he was forbid to leave the skies,
He muffled with a cloud his mournful eyes.

Dryden.

His muffled feature speaks him a recluse,
His ruins prove him a religious house.

Cleveland.

You must be muffled up like ladies. Dryden.

The face lies muffled up within the garment.

Addison.

2. To wrap; to cover.

Balbutius muffled in his sable cloke,
Like an old druid from his hollow oak. Young.

3. To conceal; to involve; to wrap up.

This is one of the strongest examples of a personation that ever was: although the king's manner of shewing things by pieces, and by dark lights, hath so muffled it, that it hath left it almost as a mystery. Bacon, Hen. VII.

No muffling clouds, nor shades infernal, can
From his inquiry hide offending man.

Sandys. Paraph.

Our understandings lie grovelling in this lower region, muffled up in mists and darkness.

Glanville, Scepis.

The thoughts of kings are like religious groves,
The walks of muffled gods.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

One, muffled up in the infallibility of his sect, will not enter into a debate with a person that will question any of those things which to him are sacred.

Locke.

They were in former ages muffled up in darkness and superstition. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

To MU'FFLE.† v. n. [maffelen, moffelen, Dutch. The true word is muffle; which is still in use. See To MAFFLE.] To speak inwardly; to speak without clear and distinct articulation.

The freedom or apertness and vigour of pronouncing, as in the Bocca Romana, and giving somewhat more of aspiration; and the closeness and muffling, and laziness of speaking, render the sound of speech different. Holder.

MU'FFLER.† n. s. [from muffle.]

1. A cover for the face.

Fortune is painted with a muffer before her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is blind.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Mr. Hales has found out the best expedients for preventing immediate suffocation from tainted air, by breathing through muffers, which imbibe these vapours. Arbuthnot on Air.

2. A part of a woman's dress, by which the face was partially, or almost wholly, covered; a kind of mask.

There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffer, and a handkerchief, and so escape.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

The goddess Angerona was with a muffer upon her mouth placed upon the altar of Volupia, to represent, that those persons who bear their sicknesses and sorrows without murmur, shall certainly pass from sorrow to pleasure.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 4. ch. 3.

The Lord will take away your tinkling ornaments, chains, bracelets, and muffers. Isa. iii. 19.

MU'FTI.† n. s. [a Turkish word.] The high priest of the Mahometans.

The Indians have their brachmans, the Turks their muffs. Featley, Dippers Dipt, p. 130.

I tell thee, mufsi,

Good fasting is devout, and thou our head,
Hast a religious ruddy countenance. Dryden.

MUG.† n. s. [Skinner derives it from muygl, Welsh, warm; implying that our mug is a cup for warming drink.

The word is of no great age in our language; and is not enumerated among the many quaint appellations of pots and glasses which are to be found in Heywood's Drunkard Opened, 1635. It is a word coined perhaps in sport. In Young's Description of Drunkenness, 1617, it is said, "I have seen a company amongst the very woods and forrests drinking for a muggle. Sixe determined to trye their strengths who could drinke most glasses for the muggle. The first drinks a glasse of a pint, the second two, the next three, and so every one multiplieth till the last taketh six." sign. E. 4. b. What this muggle means I know not; and therefore am unable to pronounce mug as connected with it.] A cup to drink in.

Ah Bowzybee, why didst thou stay so long?
The mugs were large, the drink was wondrous strong. Gay.

MUGGARD. * adj. Sullen; displeased. Exmore dialect. Grose. Probably a corruption of mugger, as used in hugger-mugger; morcher, Dan. darkness.

MUGGY.† } adj. [corrupted from mucka,
MU'GGISH. } for damp.]

1. Moist; damp; mouldy.

Cover with muggy straw to keep it moist.

Mortimer.

2. Thick; close; misty. [from moky, which see.]

MUGGLETO'NIAN. * n. s. One of a sect of enthusiasts formed about the year 1657 by Lodowick Muggleton, a journeyman taylor, who set up for a prophet.

The Seekers, a sect in those times, renounced all ordinances; and so did the sect of the Muggletonians. Grey, Notes on Hudibras.

MUGHOUSE.† n. s. [mug and house.] An ale house; a low house of entertainment.

He has the confidence to say that there is a mug-house near Long-Acre, where you may every evening hear an exact account of distresses of this kind. Tatler, No. 180.

Our sex has dar'd the mughouse chiefs to meet,
And purchas'd fame in many a well fought street. Tickell.

MUGIL. * n. s. [mugil, Lat.] A name for the mullet.

In common constructions, mugil is rendered a mullet, which, notwithstanding, is a different fish from the mugil described by authors.

Sir T. Browne, Miscell. p. 104.

It is thought wonderful among the seamen, that mugil, of all fishes the swiftest, is found in the belly of the bream, of all the slowest.

Lily, Campanpe.

MUGIENT. adj. [mugiens, Lat.] Bellowing.

That a bittern maketh that mugient noise or bumping, by putting its bill into a reed, or by putting the same in water or mud, and after a while retaining the air, but suddenly excluding it again, is not easily made out.

Brown.

MUGWORT. n. s. [mugpyrt, Saxon; artemisia, Latin.]

The flowers and fruit of the mugwort are very like those of the wormwood, but grow erect upon the branches.

Miller.

Some of the most common simples with us in England are comfrey, bugle, Paul's betony, and mugwort.

Wiseman.

MULATTO. † n. s. [mulata, Spanish; mulat, French; from mulas, Lat.] One begot between a white and a black, as a mule between different species or animals.

Purgatory, which is a device to make men be mulatas, as the Spaniard calls half Christians.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. ii. § 3.
Mulatus are not Ethiopians.

Young, Centaur, Lett. 2.

MULBERRY. † n. s. [morberr, Sax.; MULBERRY tree. † morus, Latin.]

1. The mulberry tree hath large, rough, roundish leaves; the male flowers; or katkins, which have a calyx consisting of four leaves, are sometimes produced upon separate trees, at other times at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the fruit is composed of several protuberances, to each of which adhere four small leaves; the seeds are roundish, growing singly in each protuberance; it is planted for the delicacy of the fruit. The white mulberry is commonly cultivated for its leaves to feed silkworms, in France and Italy, though the Persians always make use of the common black mulberry for that purpose.

Miller.

Morton, archbishop of Canterbury, was content to use mor upon a tun; and sometimes a mulberry tree called morus in Latin, out of a tun.

Camden, Rem.

2. The fruit of the tree.

The ripest mulberry,

That will not hold the handling. Shakespeare, Coriol.

A body black, round, with small grain-like tubercles on the surface; not very unlike a mulberry.

Woodward on Fossils.

MULCH.* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of mul.] Rotten or crumbled dung. See MULL.

If mulch be used, it should be thoroughly rotten, and almost reduced to mould.

Adelphi Transactions, xv. 158.

MULCT. n. s. [mulcta, Latin.] A fine; a penalty: used commonly of pecuniary penalty.

Do you then Argive Hellenæ, with all her treasure, here

Restore to us, and pay the mulct that by your vows is due.

Chapman.

Because this is a great part, and Eusebius hath said nothing, we will by way of mulct or pain, lay it upon him.

Bacon.

Look humble upward, see his will disclose
The forfeit first, and then the fine impose;
A mulct thy poverty could never pay,
Had not eternal wisdom found the way. Dryden.

TO MULCT. † v. a. [mulcto, Latin; mulcter, French.] To punish with fine or forfeiture.

Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents' inheritance.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

All fraud must be banished out of their markets; or, if it dares to intrude, soundly punished, and mulcted with due satisfaction.

Dp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 1. C. 7.

MULCTUARY.* adj. [from mulct.] Punishing with fine or forfeiture.

He wishes fewer laws, so they were better observed; and for those [that] are mulctuary, he understands their institution not to be like briers, and springs, to catch every thing they lay hold of; but like sea-marks, — to avoid the shipwreck of ignorant passengers.

Overbury, Character. (1627.) sign. N. 4. b.

Fines, or some known mulctuary punishments upon other crimes.

Temple, Intr. Hist. of Eng. p. 172.

MULE. † n. s. [mul, Saxon; mule, mulet, French; mula, Latin.] An animal generated between a he ass and a mare, or sometimes between a horse and a she ass.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part. Shakespeare.
Five hundred asses yearly took the horse,
Producing mules of greater speed and force.

Sandys.

Those effluvia in the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation, as is demonstrable in a mule, which doth more resemble the parent, that is, the ass, than the female.

Ray.

Twelve young mules, a strong laborious race.

Pope.

MULETIER. † n. s. [muletier, French; mulio, Latin.] Mule-driver; horse-boy.

Base muletiers,

Like peasant foot-boys, do they keep the walls,
And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.

Shakespeare.

Your ships are not well mann'd,
Your mariners are muletiers, reapers. Shakespeare.
About a quarter of an hour farther, we came up with our muletiers; they having pitched our tents, before they had gone so far as we intended.

Mauvred, Trav. p. 20.

MULIEBRITY. † n. s. [muliebris, Lat.] Womanhood; the contrary to virility; the manners and character of woman.

The ladies of Rhodes, hearing that you have lost

A capital part of your lady-ware,
Have made their petition to Cupid,

To plague you above all other,

As one prejudicial to their muliebrity.

Solinan and Perseda, (1599).

MULISH.* adj. [from mule.] Like a mule; obstinate as a mule. Modern.

The curbs invented for the mulish mouth
Of head-strong youths were broken. Cowper, Task.

MULL.* n. s. [M. Goth. muld; Su. Goth. mull.] Dust; rubbish. See MULLOCK.

That other cofre of straw and mull

With stones meynd he fill'd also;

Thus be they full bothe two.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

TO MULL. v. a. [mollius Latin.]

1. To soften and dispirit, as wine is when burnt and sweetened.

Hammer.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy,
Mull'd, deaf, sleepy, insensible. Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. To heat any liquor, and sweeten and spice it.

Drink new cyder mull'd with ginger warm.

Gay.

MULLEIN. n. s. [verbascum, Latin.] A plant.

Miller.

MULLER. † n. s. [mouleur, French; from mola, Icel. to crumble, to break into small pieces.] A stone held in the hand with which any powder is ground upon a horizontal stone. It is now often called improperly mullet.

The best grinder is the porphyry, white or green marble, with a muller or upper stone of the same, cut very even without flaws or holes; you may make a muller also of a flat pebble, by grinding it smooth at a grindstone.

Peachment.

MULLET. † n. s. [millus, Lat.; mulet, Fr.] A sea fish.

Care must be taken, lest, being deceived by the identity of names, we take our English mullet to be the mullus of the ancients.

Ray, Diet. Triling. p. 25.

Of carps and mullets why prefer the great?
Yet for small turbot such esteem profess.

Pope, Hor.

MULLIGRUBS. † n. s. Twisting of the guts; sometimes sullenness. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. — Sick of the mulligrubs; low spirited; having an imaginary sickness. Grose, Class. Dict. Dr. Jamieson defines the Scottish molligrant, molligrub, or mullygrub, the act of whining, complaining, or murmuring; and cites the Icel. mogla, murmur, and grawn, the countenance, q. d. such whining as distorts the countenance; or, as including two ideas nearly connected, grunnia, murmuring and grunting. He finds another apparent etymon in the Teut. muylen, to mutter, with the Germ. grob, great, q. d. a great complaint or muttering. Whether this be the origin or not, the word certainly seems to have been old in English, as a contemptuous expression; though Dr. Johnson could find no example of it.

What's the matter?

Whither go all these men-menders? these physicians?

Whose dog lies sick o' the mulligrubs?

Beaumont and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

MULLION.* n. s. [moulure, French.] A division in a window frame: a bar; a munnion, or munion, which is commonly, and perhaps correctly, pronounced mullion.

TO MULLION.* v. a. [from the noun.] To shape into divisions in a window.

Such is the fabrick of our ancient churches and cathedrals. The slender pillars imitate the taper trunk of a tree. The curve of the arches is from the delicate branching of the boughs in a wood or grove. The mullion'd lacework of the windows, the like; intercepting the dubious light, as in a real grove. Stukely, Palaeogr. Sacra, (1763), p. 18.

MULLOCK. † n. s. Rubbish. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth. — This is an old word, the same as mull; and yet used in several places, signifying, dirt, rubbish, or ashes. See MULL.

The mullock on an hepe swyswed was.

Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.

MULSE. n. s. [mulsum, Lat.] Wine boiled and mingled with honey.

Diet.

MULTA'NGULAR.† adj. [multus and angulus, Lat.] Many cornered; having many corners; polygonal.

Some round; others long, oval, multangular.
Evelyn, B. 4. § 21.

Full of holes.

MULTIFA'RIOUS. adj. [multifarius, Lat.] Having great multiplicity; having different respects; having great diversity in itself.

There is a multifarious artifice in the structure of the meanest animal. More, Divine Dialogues.

When we consider this so multifarious congruity of things in reference to ourselves, how can we withhold from inferring, that that which made both dogs and ducks made them with a reference to us?

More, Antid. against Atheism.

His science is not moved by the gusts of fancy and humour, which blow up and down the multifarious opinionists.

Glanville to Albius.

We could not think of a more comprehensive expedient, whereby to assist the frail and torpent memory through so multifarious and numerous an employment.

Evelyn, Kalendar.

MULTIFA'RIOUSLY. adv. [from multifarius.] With multiplicity; with great variety of modes or relations.

If only twenty four parts may be so multifari-ously placed, and ordered, as to make many millions of millions of differing rows: in the supposition of a thousand parts, how immense must that capacity of variation be?

Bentley, Sermon.

MULTIFA'RIOUSNESS. n. s. [from multifarius.] Multiplied diversity.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being.

Norris, Miscell.

MULTI'FIDOUS. adj. [multifidus, Latin.] Having many partitions; cleft into many branches.

These animals are only excluded without sight which are multiparous and multifidous, which have many at a litter and have feet divided into many portions.

Brown.

MULTIFORM. adj. [multiformis, Latin.] Having various shapes or appearances.

Ye that in quaternion run
Perpetual circle, multiform.

Milton, P. L.

The best way to convince is proving, by ocular demonstration, the multiform and amazing operations of the air pump and the loadstone.

Watts.

MULTI'FORMITY.† n. s. [multiformis, Lat.] Diversity of shapes or appearances subsisting in the same thing.

Barking out a multiformity of oaths, like hellish Cerberus; as if men could not be gallants, unless they turned devils. Purchas, Pilgrim. (1617.) Pref.

MULTILA'TERAL.* adj. [multus and lateralis, Latin.] Having many sides.

MULTIPLICAND. n. s. [multiplicandus, Latin.] The number to be multiplied in arithmetic.

Multiplication hath the multiplicand or number to be multiplied; the multiplier, or number given, by which the multiplicand is to be multiplied, and the product, or number produced by the other two.

Cocker's Arithmetic.

MULTIPLICATE. adj. [from multiplico, Lat.] Consisting of more than one.

In this multiple number of the eye, the object seen is not multiplied, and appears but one, though seen with two or more eyes.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

MULTIPLICA'TION. n. s. [multiplication, French; multiplicatio, Lat.]

1. The act of multiplying or increasing any number by addition or production of more of the same kind.

Although they had divers stiles for God, yet under many appellations they acknowledged one divinity: rather conceiving thereby the evidence or acts of his power in several ways than a multiplication of essence, or real distractions of unity in any one.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. [In arithmetic.] Multiplication is the increasing of any one number by another, so often as there are units in that number, by which the one is increased.

Cocker's Arithmetic.

A man had need be a good arithmetician to understand this author's works: his description runs on like a multiplication table.

Addison on Anc. Medals.

MULTIPLICA'TOR. n. s. [multiplicateur, Fr. from multiplico, Lat.] The number by which another number is multiplied.

MULTIPLI'CITY. n. s. [multiplicité, Fr.] 1. More than one of the same kind.

Had they discoursed rightly but upon this one principle that God was a being infinitely perfect, they could never have asserted a multiplicity of gods: for, can one God include in him all perfection, and another God include in him all perfections too? Can there be any more than all? And if this too be in one, can it be also in another?

South, Sermon.

Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and abates the torrent of a common odium, by deriving it into many channels; and therefore if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of the object.

South, Sermon.

2. State of being many.

You equal Donne in the variety, multiplicity, and choice of thoughts. Dryden, Ded. to Juvenal.

MULTIPLI'CIOUS. adj. [multiplex, Latin.] Manifest. Not used.

Amphibena is not an animal of one denomination; for that animal is not one, but multiplicious, or many, which hath a duplicity or gemination of principal parts.

Brown.

MULTIPLIER.† n. s. [from multiply; Fr. multiplicieur.]

1. One who multiplies or increases the number of any thing.

Broils and quarrels are alone the great accumulators and multipliers of injuries.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

2. The multiplier in arithmetic.

They are the only multipliers in the world; they have the art of multiplication.

Bacon, Sp. to K. James I.

Multiplication hath the multiplicand and the multiplier, or number given, by which the multiplicand is to be multiplied.

Cocker's Arithmetic.

TO MULTIPLY. v. a. [multiplier, Fr. multiplico, Lat.]

1. To increase in number; to make more by generation, accumulation, or addition.

He clappeth his hands amongst us, and multiplieth his words against God.

Job, xxiv. 37.

He shall not multiply horses.

Deut. xvii. 16.

His birth to our just fear gave no small cause, But his growth now to youth's full flower displaying

All virtue, grace, and wisdom, to achieve

Things highest, greatest, multiplies my fears.

Milton, P. R.

2. To perform the process of arithmetical multiplication.

From one stock of seven hundred years, multiplying still by twenty, we shall find the product to be one thousand three hundred forty-seven millions three hundred sixty-eight thousand four hundred and twenty.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO MULTIPLY. v. n.

1. To grow in number.

The multiplying brood of the ungodly shall not thrive.

Wisd. iv. 3.

2. To increase themselves.

The multiplying villanies of nature Do swarm upon him.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

We see the infinitely fruitful and productive power of this way of sinning; how it can increase and multiply beyond all bounds and measures of actual commission.

South, Sermon.

MULTI'POTENT. adj. [multus and potens, Lat.] Having manifold power; having power to do many different things.

By Jove *multipl*otent,

MULTISYLLABLE.* n. s. [multus, Latin, and syllable.] A polysyllable; a word of many syllables.

Which is to be observed, not only in the length of sentences, but of words; among which a multisyllable better answers a monosyllable precedent, than a monosyllable a multisyllable.

Instruct. for Oratory, (1682), p. 38.

MULTITUDE. n. s. [multitude, French; multitudo, Latin.]

1. The state of being many; the state of being more than one.
2. Number collective; a sum of many; more than one.

It is impossible that any multitude can be actually infinite, or so great that there cannot be a greater. Hale.

3. A great number, loosely and indefinitely. It is a fault in a multitude of preachers, that they utterly neglect method in their harangues. Watts.

4. A crowd or throng: the vulgar.

He the vast hissing multitude admires. Addison.

MULTITUDINOUS.† adj. [from multitude.]

1. Having the appearance of a multitude. Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather

Thy multitudinous sea incarnardine,
Making the green one red. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Manifest.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet that is their poison. Shakspeare.

3. Belonging to a multitude.

There was another parting speech, which was to have been presented in the person of a youth, and accompanied with divers gentlemen's younger sons of the country; but, by reason of the multitudinous press, was hindered. B. Jonson, Entertainments.

MULTIVAGANT. } adj. [multivagus, Lat.]
MULTIVAGOUS. } That wanders or strays much abroad. Dict.

MULTURE.* n. s. [moulture, Fr. from molo, Lat. to grind.] A grist, or grinding; the corn ground; also the toll, or fee, that is due for grinding. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. Molter, the toll of a mill; used in the north of England. Grose. This old English word is common in Scotland.

MUM. interject. [Of this word the supposed original is mentioned in mome: it may be observed, that when it is pronounced it leaves the lips closed. Mumme, Danish, a mask; whence mummers and maskers are the same. Upton.] A word denoting prohibition to speak, or resolution not to speak; silence; hush.

But to his speech he answered not whit,
But stood still mute, as if he had beene dum,
No signe of sence did shew, no common wit,
As one with griefe and anguise over-cum,
And unto every thing did aunswere mum.

Spenser, F. Q.

Mum then, and no more proceed.
Shakspeare, Tempest.

Well said, master; mum! and gaze your fill.
Shakspeare.

Intrust it under solemn vows,
Of mum, and silence, and the rose. Hudibras.

MUM.* adj. Silent.

The citizens are mum, say not a word.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

They rage with wrath, they daily fret and fume;
Ruthfull revenge them alwaies hath in sute,
And right in time makes might both mum and mute.
Mir. for Mag. p. 212.

The mum club is an institution of the same nature, and as great an enemy to noise.

Addison, Spect. No. 9.

MUM-BUDGET.* interj. [mum and budget. "I come to her in white, and cry mum; she cries, budget; and by that we know one another." Shakspeare, Merr. Wives of Windsor. "To play mumbudget, demeur court, Fr." which Cotgrave renders "to be gravelled, put to silence or a nonplus." An expression denoting secrecy as well as silence; used in a contemptuous or ludicrous manner.

To MUMMIFY.* v. a. [mummy, and fio, Latin.] To preserve as a mummy; to make a mummy of.

Thy virtues are
The spices that embalm thee; thou art far
More richly laid, and shalt more long remaine
Still mummified within the hearts of men,
Than if to life thee in the rolls of fame
Each marble spoke thy shape, all brass thy name.
J. Hall, Poems, (1646), p. 50.

MUMMY.† n. s. [munie, French; mumia, Latin; derived by Salmasius from amomum, Latin, by Bochart, from the Arabic munia. Dr. Johnson. — The Spaniards call pissasphalt cera de minera, mineral wax, perhaps from its consistency; but the Arabians term it munia; whence, it may be, embalmed bodies came to be called mummies, from their being preserved with this pissasphalt; and this we are the more apt to believe, since the true asphalt, or bitumen Judaicum, was very scarce. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, 1705, p. 277.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two substances for medicinal use under the name of mummy: one is the dried flesh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and spice; the other is the liquor running from such mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps: this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is preserved in vials, or suffered to dry: the first kind is brought in large pieces, of a friable texture, light and spongy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface; it is of a strong but not agreeable smell: the second, in its liquid state, is a thick, opaque, and viscous fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell: in its indurated state it is a dry, solid substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is extremely dear, and the first sort so cheap, that we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of any bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen so plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhaled, and the embalming matter has penetrated.

Hill, Mat. Med.

It is strange how long carcases have continued uncorrupt, as appeareth in the mummies of Egypt, having lasted some of them three thousand years.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Sav'd by spice, like mummies, many a year,
Old bodies of philosophy appear. Pope, Dunciad.

2. The liquor which distils from mummies; any gum.

The work —

Was died in mummy, which the skillful Conserv'd of maidens' hearts. Shakspeare, Othello.

He watches them like a younger brother, that is afraid to be mump'd of his snip. Wycherley, Love in a Wood.

MUMPER. n. s. [In cant language.] A beggar.

To MUMP.* v. n.

1. To chatter; to make mouths; to grin like an ape.

Thou world of marmosets and mumping apes;
Unmaske; put off thy feigned, borrowed shapes.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599), iii. 9.

The ghost knocks; Harlequin opens the door; and, seeing the apparition, runs backward in a fright, whips up a dish of vermicelli, with which he retreats under the table: the ghost enters, sits down at table, talks to Don John, while Harlequin mumps below, with such buffoonery as excites the mirth of the whole audience.

Drummond, Trav. (Lett. 1744), p. 35.

2. To implore notice by making a face of distress; to beg with a false pretence. A cant word.

They had no way left for getting rid of this mendicant perseverance, but by sending for the beadle, and forcibly driving our embassy of shreds and patches, with all its mumping cant, from the inhospitable door of cannibal castle.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

Ah hapless fate of man! ah wretch doom'd once to die. Blackmore, Creation.

MURMURING.  n. s.* [from murmur.] 1. A low sound; a continued murmur; a confused noise.

A cloud of cumbrous gnats doe him molest,
All striving to infixe their feeble stings,
That from their noyance he no where can rest;
But with his clownish hands their tender wings
He bruiseth oft, and oft doth mar their murmurs. Spenser, F. Q.

His voice was hoarse and hollow, yet so strong,
As when you hear the murmuring of a throng
In some vast arch'd hall; or like as when
A lordly lion angled in his den
Grumbles within the earth. Drayton, David and Goliath.

2. Complaint half suppressed.
Do all things without murmurs and disputings. Phil. ii. 14.

At his return to the court he found no change in faces, but smothered murmurs for the loss of so many gallant gentlemen.

Wotton, D. of Buckingham.
Murmuring is a secret discontented muttering one to another of things that we dislike, or persons that we distaste; and the very word in all languages seems as harsh unto our ears, as the sin is hateful unto our souls.

Bp. Williams, Chariot of Truth, p. 238.

MURMURINGLY.  adv.* [from murmuring.] With a low sound; mutteringly.

Sherwood.

I never spit nor cough more than this; and that but since I caught this murre.

Gascoigne, Tr. of Aristotle's Supposes, (1566.)

MURRAIN. † n. s. [The etymology of this word is not clear; mur is an old word for a catarrh, which might well answer to the glanders; muriana, low Latin. Skinner derives it from mori, to die. Dr. Johnson.—Minsheu derives it, with greater probability, from the Greek μαρῖνα, to waste, to consume; whence the old French marrane, “sorte de maladie epidemique.” Roq. Gloss. Our word was formerly written morren.] The plague in cattle.

Away ragg'd rams, care I what murrain kill.

Some trials would be made of mixtures of water in ponds for cattle, to make them more milch, to fatten, or to keep them from murrain. Bacon.

And threw the sops all in the sexton's face.

Shakspeare.
The muscadine stays for the bride at church.

Armin, Hist. of the Two Maids, &c. (1609.)

MUSCLE. n. s. [muscle, Fr. musculus, Lat. mycula, Sax.]

1. Muscle is a bundle of thin and parallel plates of fleshy threads or fibres, inclosed by one common membrane: all the fibres of the same plate are parallel to one another, and tied together at extremely little distances by short and transverse fibres: the fleshy fibres are composed of other smaller fibres; inclosed likewise by a common membrane: each lesser fibre consists of very small vesicles or bladders, into which we suppose the veins, arteries, and nerves to open, for every muscle receives branches of all those vessels, which must be distributed to every fibre: the two ends of each muscle or the extremities of the fibres are, in the limbs of animals, fastened to two bones, the one moveable, the other fixed; and therefore, when the muscles contract, they draw the moveable bone according to the direction of their fibres. Quincy.

The instruments of motion are the muscles, the fibres whereof, contracting themselves, move the several parts of the body. Locke.

2. A bivalve shell-fish.

Of shell-fish, there are wrinkles, limpets, cockles and muscles. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

MUSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Deep thought; close attention; absence of mind; brown study.

The tidings strange did him abashed make,
That still he sat long time astonished
As in great muse, ne word to creature spake.

Spenser, F. Q.

He was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse, to hear
Of things so high and strange. Milton, P. L.

2. The power of poetry.

Begin, my muse. Cowley.

The muse-inspired train
Triumph, and raise their drooping heads again. Waller.

Lodona's fate, in long oblivion cast,
The muse shall sing, and what she sings shall last.

Pope.

TO MUSE. v. n. [muser, Fr.; muysen, Dutch; musso, Lat.]

1. To ponder; to think close; to study in silence.

If he spake courteously, he angled the people's hearts; if he were silent, he mus'd upon some dangerous plot. Sidney.

St. Augustine, speaking of devout men, noeth, how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they give unto the chapters read, how careful they were to remember the same, and to muse thereupon by themselves. Hooker.

Cesar's father oft,
When he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses. Shakspeare.

My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and my heart muse of understanding. Psalms xlix. 5.

Her face upon a sudden glittered, so that I was afraid of her, and mus'd what it might be.

2 Estras, x. 25.

All men mus'd in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not. St. Luke, iii. 15.

On these he mus'd within his thoughtful mind. Dryden.

We muse so much on the one, that we are apt to overlook and forget the other. Atterbury, Sermon.

2. To be absent of mind; to be attentive to something not present; to be in a brown study.

Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks?

And given my treasures and my rights of thee,
To thick-ey'd musing and curs'd melancholy. Shakspeare.

You suddenly arose and walk'd about,
Musing and sighing with your arms across. Shakspeare.

The sad king
Feels sudden terror and cold shivering,
Lists not to eat, still muses, sleeps unsound. Daniel.

3. To wonder; to be amazed.

Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will. Shakspeare.

MUSER.† n. s. [in hunting.] The place through which the hare goes to relief.

Dr. Johnson from Bailey.—Muset is a gap in a hedge. Cotgrave in V. TRouEE.

The purblind hare,—
How he outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles:
The many musets through the which he goes,
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.

MUSEUM.† n. s. [μυσεῖον.] A repository of learned curiosities.

Our sciolists will often write musæum for musæum; as Mr. Thoresby, in the account he has given us of his collection of rarities, and others;

but the Greek word is μυσεῖον, i. e. musæum, in English. Pegge, Anonym. v. 43.

MUSHROOM. n. s. [mouscheron, French.]

1. Mushrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and seeds have not as yet been discovered: the true champignon or mushroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white; when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and explicate themselves almost to a flatness, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour: in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the mushrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the off-sets or young mushrooms; these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hot beds.

Miller.

2. An upstart; a wretch risen from the dunghill.

Mushrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unsworn; and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known, The lowly native of a country town.

Dryden.

1. The science of harmonical sounds.

The man that hath no musick in himself, Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds, Is fit for treasons.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Now look into the musick-master's gains, Where noble youth at vast expense is taught, But eloquence not valu'd at a great.

Dryden, Juv.

2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.

When she spake,

Sweet words, like dropping honey, she did shed; And 'twixt the pearls and rubies softly brake A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make.

Spenser, F. Q.

Such musick, as 'tis said,

Before was never made, But when of old the sons of morning sung.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

By musick minds an equal temper know, Nor swell too high, nor sink too low; Warriors she fires with animated sounds, Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds.

Pope.

We have dancing-masters and musick-masters.

Arbutnot, and Pope.

3. Entertainments of instrumental harmony.

What musick, and dancing, and diversions, are to many in the world, that prayers, and devotions, and psalms are to you.

Law.

MU'SICAL. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick.]

1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.

The merry birds

Chaunted above their cheerful harmony,

And made among themselves a sweet consort, That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort.

Spenser, F. Q.

Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,

Most musical, most melancholy;

These chauntsoft of the wood among,

I woo to hear thy even-song.

Milton, Il Pens.

Neither is it enough to give his author's sense, in poetical expressions and in musical numbers.

Dryden.

2. Belonging to musick.

Though he be not apt to break out into singing, — yet he will drink often musically a health to every one of these six notes, ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la.

Howell, Lett. ii. 54.

MU'SICALNESS.† n. s. [from musical.] Harmony.

The peculiar musicalness of the first of these lines, in particular, arises principally from its consisting entirely of iambic feet.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

MUSICIAN. n. s. [musicus, Lat. musicien, Fr.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of musick.

Though the musicians that shall play to you, Stand in the air a thousand leagues from hence; Yet strait they shall be here.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day, When every goose is cackling, would be thought No better a musician than the wren.

Shakespeare.

A painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in musick, and not by rule.

Bacon, Essays.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung;

Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young.

Dryden.

MU'SING.* n. s. [from muse.] Meditation; contemplation.

If we did think

His contemplation were above the earth, And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Wisdom and knowledge — are sweet as the wakened musings of delightful thoughts which not only dew the mind with perfumes that ever refresh us, but raise us to the mountain that gives us view of Canaan; and shows us rays and glimpses of the glory that shall after crown us. Yet it is the object only that makes these good unto men, when God is the ocean that all his streams make way unto.

Feltman on Eccles. ii. 11.

Men of learning are wont to be vilified, that they use to be so much affected with the pleasant musings of their own thoughts, as to abhor the roughness and toil of business.

Sp. Hist. R. S. p. 335.

MUSK.† n. s. [muschio, Italian; musc, Fr. from the Arab. moscha, whence μύσχος or μύσχος, Gr. Barb. V. Meursii Gloss.]

A dry, light, and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous; its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity: its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochin China: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common goat but taller: the bag which contains the musk, is three inches long and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly.

And saw thee maul'd, appear within the list
To witness truth?

Dryden, Jew.

MUTUAL. adj. [mutuel, French; mutuius,
Latin.] Reciprocal; each acting in return or correspondence to the other.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing
loud,

If they perchance but hear a trumpet sound,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
By the sweet power of musick.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

What should most excite a mutual flame,
Your rural cares and pleasures are the same.

Pope.

MUTUALLY. adv. [from mutual.] Reci-procally; in return.

He never bore
Like labour with the rest; where the other instruments

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And mutually participate.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answer'd my affection.

Shakspeare, T. and A.

The tongue and pen mutually assist one another, writing what we speak, and speaking what we write.

Holder.

at a distance, in refracting, reflecting and infecting them, and the rays mutually agitate the parts of those substances at a distance from heating them.

Newton, Opticks.

They mutually teach, and are taught, that lesson of vain confidence and security.

Atterbury, Serm.

May I the sacred pleasures know
Of strictest amity, nor ever want
A friend with whom I mutually may share
Gladness and anguish.

Philips.

MUTUALITY. n. s. [from mutual.] Reci-procation.

Villanous thoughts, Roderigo! when these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the incorporate conclusion.

Shakspeare, Othello.

MUTUATION.* n. s. [mutuatio, Latin.]
The act of borrowing.

Here is a sale, there a lending: — In both there seems to be a valuation of time; which, whether in case of mutation or sale, may justly be suspected for unlawful.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. D 1 C. 4.

MUTUAT'IOUS.* adj. [mutuatiuus, Lat.]

MUZZLE.† n. s. [museau, French.] Dr.
Johnson. — Hence our word, in conformity to its French origin, was at first written mosel, and then moozle. See Barret's Alv. 1580. in V. MOOZLE. And Chaucer: "With mosel fast ybound." Kn. Tale.]

1. The mouth of any thing; the mouth of a man in contempt.

But ever and anon turning her muzzle toward me, she threw such a prospect upon me, as might well have given a surfeit to any weak lover's stomach.

Sidney.

Huygens has proved, that a bullet continuing in the velocity with which it leaves the muzzle of the cannon, would require twenty-five years to pass from us to the sun.

Cheyne.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with the tongs; if the tongs be not at hand, use the muzzle of the bellows.

Swift, Direct. to Servants.

2. A fastening for the mouth, which hinders to bite.

The fifth Harry from curbed licence plucks
The muzzle of restraint; and the wild dog
Shall flesh his tooth on ev'ry innocent.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair;

Dryden.

With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound.

To MUZZLE. v. n. To bring the mouth near.

The bear muzzles, and smells to him, puts his nose to his mouth and to his ears, and at last leaves him.

L'Estrange.

To MUZZLE. v. a.

1. To bind the mouth.

This butcher's cur is vemon-mouth'd, and I
Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore best
Not wake him in his slumber.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The bear, the boar, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bower,
And muzzled though they seem, the mutes devour.

Dryden.

Through the town with slow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear.

Gay, Past.

2. To fondle with the mouth close. A low word.

The nurse was then muzzling and coaxing of the child. L'Estrange.

3. To restrain from hurt.

My dagger muzzled
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

M'ZZY.* adj. [a corruption from to muse;
or from the French musard.] Absent;
forgetful; dreaming; bewildered by thought; bewildered by liquor. A low expression.

My. pronoun possessive. [See MINE.] Belonging to me. My is used before a consonant, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before both.
My is used when the substantive follows, and mine when it goes before: as, this is my book; this book is mine.

Her feet she in my neck doth place. Spenser.
I conclude my reply with the words of a Christian poet. Bp. Bramhall.

If my soul had free election
To dispose of her affection. Waller.
I shall present my reader with a journal.

Addison.

MY'NCHEN. n. s. [mýnchen, Saxon.] A
nun. Dict.

MYNH'ER.* n. s. [Dutch.] Sir, my lord or master, among the Dutch; among us,
it usually means a Dutchman.

Our connoisseurs in their zeal all became myn-heers. Cowentry.

MY'OGRAPHY. n. s. [μυογραφία.] A description of the muscles.

MY'OLOGY.† n. s. [myologie, French; μύς,
a muscle, and λόγος, discourse, Greek.] The description and doctrine of the muscles.

To instance in all the particulars, were to write a whole system of myology.

Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

MY'OPE.* n. s. [myope, French; μύωψ, Greek; claudens oculos, from μύω, to close or shut, and ὄψ, the eye.] A short-sighted person. It is sometimes myops, in the singular number; and myope is uncommon.

Upon the same principle we may account for the shortsighted so often rarely shutting their eye-lids, from whence they were formerly denominated myopes. Adams on Vision.

MY'OPY. n. s. [μύωψ.] Shortness of sight.
MY'RIAD.† n. s. [μύρις.]

1. The number of ten thousand.

Thou seest, brother, how many thousands, or rather how many myriads, that is, ten thousands, of the Jews there were.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

2. Proverbially, any great number.

Assemble thou,

Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief.

Milton, P. L.

Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good.

Tillotson.

Safe sits the goddess in her dark retreat;

Around her, myriads of ideas wait,

And endless shapes.

Prior.

MY'RMDON. n. s. [μυρμιδών.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the soldiers of Achilles.

The mass of the people will not endure to be governed by Clodius and Curio, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever so numerous, and composed of their own representatives.

Swift.

MYRO'BALAN. n. s. [myrobalanus, Latin.]
A fruit.

The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel, having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acrid taste: they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preserved. Hill.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures;
for it is sweet, and yet astringent.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

MYRO'POLIST. n. s. [μύρων and πωλέω.] One who sells unguents.

MYRRH. n. s. [myrrha, Latin; myrrhe,
French.] A gum.

Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin kind, sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper-corn to that of a walnut, of a reddish brown colour, with more or less of an admixture of yellow: its taste is bitter and acrid with a peculiar aromatic flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: it is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown. Our myrrh is the very drug known by the ancients under the same name. Hill, Mat. Med.

The myrrh sweet-bleeding in the bitter wound.

Spenser, F. Q.

I dropt in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Wiseman, Surgery.

MYRRHINE. adj. [myrrhinus, Lat.] Made of the myrrhine stone.

How they quaff in gold,

Crystal and myrrhine cups imbosh'd with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton, P. R.

MYRTIFORM. adj. [myrtus, Latin, and form.] Having the shape of myrtle.

MYRTLE. n. s. [myrtus, Latin; myrte,
French.] A fragrant tree sacred to Venus.

The flower of the myrtle consists of several leaves disposed in a circular order, which expand in form of a rose;
upon the top of the foot-stalk is the ovary, which has a short star-like cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;

A cap of flowers, and a girdle

Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Marlow.

I was of late as petty to his ends,

As is the morn dew on the myrtle leaf

To his grand sea. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Demetrius would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for such is the nature of these trees, that if they be planted though a good space from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peacham.

Nor can the muse the gallant Sidney pass,
The plume of war! with early laurels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay.

Thomson, Summer.

MYSE'LF. n. s. [my and self.]

1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myself do it, that is, not I by proxy; not another.

As his host,

I should against his murderer shut the door,
Nor bear the knife myself. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. The reciprocal of I, in the oblique case.

They have missed another pain, against which I should have been at a loss to defend myself.

Swift, Examiner.

3. I is sometimes omitted, to give force to the sentence.

Myself shall mount the rostrum in his favour,
And try to gain his pardon. Addison.

MYSTAGOGUE.† n. s. [μυσταγωγος; mystagogos, Latin; mystagogue, French.] One who interprets divine mysteries; also one who keeps church relics, and shows them to strangers. Cockeram.

The mystagogue taught them, that Jupiter, Mercury, Bacchus, Venus, Mars, and the whole rabble of licentious deities, were only dead mortals.

Warburton, Div. Legat. ii. § 4.

MYST'RIAL.* adj. [from mystery.] Containing a mystery or mystery.

Beauty and love, whose story is mysterious,
In yonder palm-tree and the crown imperial,
Do, from the rose and lily so delicious,
Promise a shade, shall ever be propitious
To both the kingdoms. B. Jonson, Masques.

MYST'RIARCH. n. s. [μυστήριον and ἀρχή.]
One presiding over mysteries.

MYST'RIOUS. adj. [mysterieux, French;
from mystery.]

1. Inaccessible to the understanding; awfully obscure.

God at last

To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd, Though in mysterious terms. Milton, P. L.

Then the true Son of knowledge first appear'd,
And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd.
Denham.

2. Artfully perplexed.

Those princes who were distinguished for mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift.

MYST'RIOUSLY. adv. [from mysterious.]

1. In a manner above understanding.

2. Obscurely; enigmatically.

Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described, there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty. Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.
Each stair mysteriously was meant.

Milton, P. L.

MYST'RIOUSNESS. n. s. [from mysterious.]

1. Holy obscurity.

My purpose is, to gather together into an union

all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness.

Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.

To MY'STERIZE. v. a. [from mystery.] To explain as enigmas.

Mysterizing their ensigns, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiack. Brown, Vulg. Err.

MY'STERY.† n. s. [μυστήριον; mystere, Fr.]

1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.

They can judge as fitly of his worth, As I can of those mysteries which heaven Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Upon holy days, let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Bp. Taylor.

If God should please to reveal unto us this great mystery of the Trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift.

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.

To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Important truths still let your fables hold, And moral mysteries with art unfold. Granville.

3. A trade; a calling; in this sense it should, according to Warburton, be written mystery, from mestier, French, a trade. Dr. Johnson. — Mystery is a specious and easy corruption of maistery or mastery, the English of the Latin magisterium, or artificium; in French, maistrise, mestier, mestrie. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. xxxvii. Chaucer writes it mistere.

In youth he lerned hadde a good mistere: He was a wel good wright, a carpentere.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

And that which is the noblest mystery, Brings to reproach and common infamy.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Instruction, manners, mysteries and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contraries.

Shakespeare.

4. [Mistere, old French.] A kind of ancient dramatick representation.

Dramatick poetry, in this and most other nations of Europe, owes its origin, or at least its revival, to those religious shows, which in the dark ages were usually exhibited on the more solemn festivals. At those times they were wont to represent, in the churches, the lives and miracles of the saints, or some of the more important stories of Scripture. And as the most mysterious subjects were frequently chosen, such as the Incarnation, Passion, and Resurrection of Christ, &c. these exhibitions acquired the general name of mysteries.

Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Orig. of the English Stage.

MY'STICAL.† } adj. [mysticus, Lat.]

1. Sacredly obscure.

Let God himself that made me, let not man that knows not himself, be my instructor concerning the mystical way to heaven. Hooker.

From salvation all flesh being excluded this way, God hath revealed a way mystical and supernatural. Hooker.

2. Involving some secret meaning; emblematical.

Ye five other wandering fires! that move In mystick dance, not without song, resound His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light.

Milton, P. L.

It is Christ's body in the sacrament and out of it; but in the sacrament not the natural truth, but the spiritual and mystical.

Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

It is plain from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be consumed by fire.

Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

3. Obscure; secret.

Let new fears disturb the happy state, Know I have search'd the mystick rolls of fate.

Dryden.

MY'STICALLY.† adv. [from mystical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying some secret meaning; emblematically.

These two in thy sacred bosom hold, Till mystically join'd but one they be. Donne.

Unto which I conceive the prophet Isaiah to allude, in that passage touching the city of Tyre, representing there mystically the church of Rome.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 10.

MY'STICALNESS. n. s. [from mystical.] Involvement of some secret meaning.

MY'STICISM.* n. s. [from mystick.] The pretences of the mysticks; fanaticism.

How much nobler a field of exercise, to the devout and aspiring soul, are the seraphick entertainments of mysticism and extasy, than the mean and ordinary practice of a mere earthly and common virtue! Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

This ingenious man — has spent a long life in hunting after, and with an incredible appetite devouring, the trash dropt from every species of mysticism. Warburton, Doc. of Grace, p. 306.

MY'STICK.* n. s. One of an old fanatic sect, pretending to talk and think of religion in a manner above the understanding of common Christians; disparaging all due composure and recollection of mind, and laying open the heart to all the wild extravagances of frantick enthusiasm.

It is this way of thinking and talking in religion, that, I suppose, has given rise to what is called mystical theology; the teachers whereof have accordingly been styled mysticks.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

MY'THICAL.* } adj. [μυθικός, Greek.] Fa-

MY'THICK. } bulous.

The account we have of them so far from being mythick or unintelligible, is most plainly written for our admonition.

Shuckford on the Creation, (1753,) Pref. p. v.

MYTHO'GRAPHER.* n. s. [μύθος, fable, and γράφο, to write, Gr.] A writer of fables.

The statues of Mars and Venus I imagined had been copied from Fulgentius, Boccacio's favourite mythographer.

Warton, Hist. E. P. Add. ii. sign. e. 3.

MYTHOLOGICAL.† } adj. [from mytho-

MYTHOLOG'ICK. } logy.] Relating to the explication of fabulous history.

The origin of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological and by tradition stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense and morality.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

A relation, which her masters of the mythologic prosopopeia expressed, we may suppose, by giving them in marriage to each other.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

MYTHOLOG'ICALLY.† adv. [from mythological.] In a manner suitable to the system of fables.

The relating mythologically physical or moral truths concerning the origin and nature of things, was not perhaps, as modern writers too hastily imagine, the customary practice of Moses's age, but rather began after his times.

Shuckford on the Creat. Pref. p. vii.

MYTHO'LOGIST. n. s. [from mythology.] A relater or expositor of the ancient fables of the heathens.

The grammarians and mythologists seem to be altogether unacquainted with his writings. Crech.

It was a celebrated problem among the ancient mythologists, What was the strongest thing, what the wisest, and what the greatest? Norris, Miscel.

To MYTHO'LOGIZE.† v. n. [from mythology; mythologiser, French. Cotgrave.] To relate or explain the fabulous history of the heathens.

He mythologizeth upon that fiction.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 320.

They mythologized that five gods were now born, Osiris, Orus, Typho, Isis, and Nephthe.

Shuckford on the Creat. Pref. p. x.

MYTHO'LOGY. n. s. [μύθος and λόγος; mythologie, French.] System of fables; explication of the fabulous history of the gods of the heathen world.

The modesty of mythology deserves to be commended: the scenes there are laid at a distance; it is once upon a time, in the days of yore, and in the land of Utopia.

Bentley.

N.

NÆV

N, A semivowel, has in English an invariable sound: as, no, name, net; it is sometimes after m almost lost; as, condemn, contemn.

NA'DIR.† n. s. [Arabic. Dr. Johnson. "Zenith, saith Christmannus, quem Arabes scribunt semith, vertex capitis est, seu polus horizontalis: punctum vertici oppositum appellant nathir, quasi dicas, punctum simile: est enim illud quasi alter polus horizontalis, nobis depressus." Bedwell's Arabian Trudgman, 1615, p. 99.] The point under foot directly opposite to the zenith.

As far as four bright signs comprize,

The distant zenith from the nadir lies, Creech.

NEVE.* n. s. [neve, Fr. nevis, Lat.] A spot. This is one of the words which Dryden has been blamed for using, and is supposed to have introduced into our language. It is certainly a bad word; yet was in use long before his employment of it; and it was a favourite expression of his contemporary, Aubrey.

Warts, neves, inequalities, roughness.

Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, P. III. § 2.

So many spots, like neves on Venus' soil.

Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings

I am sorry so great a wit should have such a neve. Aubrey, Of Chillingworth, Anecd. ii. 286.

He was a tall, handsome, and bold man; but his neve was, that he was damnably proud.

Aubrey, Of Sir W. Raleigh, Anecd. ii. 509.

NAI

NAFF.* n. s. [mergus cirrhatus.] A kind of tufted sea-bird.

1. A small horse. A horse in familiar language.

A hungry lion would fain have been dealing with good horse-flesh; but the nag would be too fleet. L'Estrange.

Thy nags, the leanest things alive,

So very hard thou lov'st to drive. Prior.

2. A paramour; in contempt.

Your ribauld nag of Egypt

Hoists sails, and flies. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

NA'GGY.* adj. [nagg, Su. Goth. rixa, contentio. Spegel.] Contentious; disposed to quarrel. A northern word; and perhaps used in other parts. See also KNAGGY.

NA'IAID.* n. s. [Naiade, Fr. Naias, Lat.] A water-nymph.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wandering brooks,

With your sedg'd crowns, and ever harmless looks,

Leave your crisp channels. Shakspeare, Tempest.

What though nor fabled Dryad haunt their grove,

Nor Naiads near their fountains rove. Shenstone.

NAIL.* n. s. [nægl, Saxon; nagel, Germ.]

1. The hard crust or horny substance at the ends of the fingers and toes.

My nails can reach unto thine eyes. Shakspeare.

The meanest sculptor in th' Emilian square,

Can imitate in brass, the nails and hair;

Expert in trifles. Dryden.

The nails of our fingers give strength to those parts in the various functions they are put to; and defend the numerous nerves and tendons that are under them. Roy.

2. The talons of birds; the claws or paws of beasts.

3. A spike of metal by which things are fastened together.

As one nail by strength drives out another;

So the remembrance of my former love

Is by a newer object soon forgotten. Shakspeare.

For the body of ships no nation doth equal England, nor for the oaken timber to build them; and we need not borrow iron for spikes or nails, to fasten them together. Bacon.

The loadstone mines in the shore of India, are so placed in abundance and vigour, that it proves an adventure of hazard to pass those coasts in a ship with iron nails. Brown.

A beechen nail

Hung by the handle, on a driven nail. Dryden.

An equivocal word used for the nail of the hand or foot, and for an iron nail to fasten any thing. Watts.

4. A stud; a boss.

For not the desk with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expence,

Nor standish well japan'd avails

To writing of good sense. Swift.

NAK

5. A measure of length; two inches and a quarter.

6. On the nail. Readily; immediately; without delay. I once supposed it from a counter studded with nails, but have since found in an old record, solvere super unguem. It therefore means into the hand.

We want our money on the nail,
The banker's ruin'd if he pays. Swift.

To NAIL.† v. a. [næghlan, Sax.]

1. To fasten with nails; to fasten as with nails.

How shall they come to thee, whom thou hast nayled to their bed? Donne, Dev. (1624), p. 50.

To the cross he nails thy enemies,
The law that is against thee, and the sins
Of all mankind, with him are crucify'd. Milton, P. L.

He clasp'd his hand upon the wounded part.
The second shaft came swift and unespied,
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.

2. To stud with nails.

Those stars which nail heaven's pavement.

Fanshawe, Tr. of Past. Fido.

In golden armour glorious to behold,
The rivets of your arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

NA'ILER.* n. s. [from nail.] One whose trade is to forge nails; a nail-maker.

NA'ILERY.* n. s. [from nail.] A manufactory for nails.

Near the bridge is a large alms-house, and a vast nailery. Pennant.

NA'IVETE.* n. s. [French.] Simplicity; ingenuousness.

Is not that naïveté and good humour, which his admirers celebrate in him, owing to this, that he has continued all his days an infant, but one that unhappily has been taught to read and write?

Gray, Lett. to Beattie, (1770.)

To NAKE.* } v. a. [benacan, Saxon.] To

To NA'KEN. } make naked; to expose.

Not now in use. Huloet.

Come, be ready, name your swords.

Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy.

NA'KED.† adj. [naquath, Goth. nacob, Saxon, from na-cenneb, newly born. Wachter.]

1. Wanting clothes; uncovered; bare.

A philosopher being asked in what a wise man differed from a fool? answered, Send them both naked to those who know them not, and you shall perceive. Bacon.

He pitying how they stood

Before him naked to the air, that nbw

Must suffer change; —

As father of his family, he clad

Their nakedness with skins of beasts. Milton, P. L.

2. Unarmed; defenceless; unprotected.

Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age,
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your words,
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow.

Addison.

3. Plain; evident; not hidden. ["nuda veritas." Hor.]

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

4. Mere; bare; wanting the necessary additions; simple; abstracted.

Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men, saving only a naked belief, for hope and charity we may not exclude; but that without belief all other things are as nothing, and it is the ground of those other divine virtues.

Hooker.

NA'KEDLY.† adv.

1. Without covering.

Numberless things, which we pass by in their common dress, shock us when they are nakedly represented.

Burke, Vindict. of Nat. Society.

2. Simply; merely; barely; in the abstract.

Though several single letters nakedly considered, are found to be articulations only of spirit or breath, and not of breath vocalized; yet there is that property in all letters of aptness, to be conjoined in syllables.

Holder.

3. Discoverably; evidently.

So blinds the sharpest counsels of the wise
This overshadowing Providence on high,
And dazzleth all their clearest sighted eyes,
That they see not how nakedly they lie.

Daniel.

Truth seeketh no holes to hide itself: Princes, that will hold covenant, must deal openly and nakedly.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 92.

NA'KEDNESS.† n. s. [nacebnyrje, Sax.]

1. Nudity; want of covering.

My face I'll grime with filth;
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky,

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Nor be their outward only, with the skins
Of beasts, but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious! with his robe of righteousness
Arraying, cover'd from his father's sight.

Milton, P. L.

I entreat my gentle readers to sow on their tuckers again, and not to imitate the nakedness, but the innocence of their mother Eve.

Addison, Guardian.

Thou to be strong must put off every dress,
Thy only armour is thy nakedness.

Prior.

2. Want of provision for defence.

Ye are spies; to see the nakedness of the land you are come.

Gen. xlii. 9.

3. Plainness; evidence; want of concealment.

Why seekest thou to cover with excuse
That which appears in proper nakedness?

Shakspeare.

The nakedness of which opinion will not permit me to look any longer thereupon.

Spencer on Prodigies, p. 221.

NALL. n. s. An awl, such as collar-makers or shoemakers use.

Whole bridle and saddle, whitleather and nall,
With collars and harness.

NAME.† n. s. [namo, Gothick; nama, Saxon; naem, Dutch.]

1. The discriminative appellation of an individual.

What is thy name?

—Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

—No: though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.

—My name's Macbeth.

Shakspeare.

He called their names after the names his father had called them.

Gen. xxvi. 18.

Thousands there were in darker fame that dwell,

Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn.

Dryden.

2. The term by which any kind of species is distinguished.

What's in a name? That which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet.

Shakspeare.

If every particular idea that we take in, should have a distinct name, names must be endless.

Locke.

3. Person.

They list with women each degenerate name,
Who dares not hazard life for future fame.

Dryden.

4. Reputation; character.

The king's army was the last enemy the west had been acquainted with, and had left no good name behind.

Clarendon.

5. Renown; fame; celebrity; eminence; praise; remembrance; memory; distinction; honour.

What men of name resort to him?

Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
And Rice ap Thomas with a valliant crew,
And many others of great name and worth.

Shakspeare.

Visit eminent persons of great name abroad;
to tell how the life agreeeth with the fame.

Bacon, Ess.

Here rest thy bones in rich Hesperia's plains,
Thy name, 'tis all a ghost can have, remains.

Dryden.

A hundred knights
Approv'd in fight, and men of mighty name.

Dryden.

These shall be towns of mighty fame,
Though now they lie obscure, and lands without a name.

Dryden.

Bartolus is of great name; whose authority is as much valued amongst the modern lawyers, as Papinian's was among the ancients.

Baker on Learning.

6. Power delegated; imputed character.

In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

When Ulysses with fallacious arts,
Had forg'd a treason in my patron's name,
My kinsman fell.

Dryden, Æn.

8. Appearance; not reality; assumed character.

I'll to him again in the name of Brook;
He'll tell me all his purpose.

Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

There is a friend which is only a friend in name.

Ecclus.

9. An opprobrious appellation.

The husband
Bids her confess; calls her ten thousand names;
In vain she kneels.

Granville.

Like the watermen of Thames,
I row by and call them names.

Swift, Miscell.

TO NAME.† v. a. [namnjan, Goth. naman, Sax. and namen is our old verb.]

1. To discriminate by a particular appellation imposed.

I mention here a son of the king's whom Florizel

I now name to you; and with speed so pace
To speak of Perdita.

Shakspeare.

Thou hast had seven husbands, neither wast thou named after any of them.

Tob. iii. 8.

His name was called Jesus, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived.

St. Luke, ii. 21.

Thus was the building left
Ridiculous, and the work, Confusion, nam'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. To mention by name.

Accustom not thy mouth to swearing, neither use thyself to the naming of the Holy One.

Ecclus. xxiii. 9.

My tongue could name whate'er I saw.

Milton, P. L.

Those whom the fables name of monstrous size.

Milton, P. L.

appellation.

On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing.

The milky way,

Frank'd of many nameless stars.

Waller.

Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes.

Pope.

2. One of which the name is not known or mentioned.

Little credit is due to accusations of this kind, when they come from suspected, that is, from nameless pens.

Atterbury.

Such imagery of greatness ill became

A nameless dwelling, and an unknown name.

Harte.

NA'MELY. adv. [from name.] Particularly;
specially; to mention by name.

It can be to nature no injury, that of her we say the same which diligent beholders of her works have observed; namely, that she provideth for all living creatures nourishment which may suffice.

Hooker.

Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

To none of these, except it be the last;

Namely, some love that drew him oft from home.

Shakspeare.

The council making remonstrances unto queen Elizabeth, of the continual conspiracies against her life; and namely, that a man was lately taken, who stood ready in a very suspicious manner to do the deed; advised her to go less abroad weakly attended. But the queen answered, that she had rather be dead, than put in custody.

Bacon.

For the excellency of the soul, namely, its power of divining in dreams; that several such divinations have been made, none can question.

Addison, Spect.

Solomon's choice does not only instruct us in that point of history, but furnishes out a very fine moral to us, namely, that he who applies his heart to wisdom, does at the same time take the most proper method for gaining long life, riches, and reputation.

Addison, Guardian.

NA'MER.† n. s. [from name.] One who calls or knows any by name.

Sherwood.

NA'MESAKE. n. s. One that has the same name with another.

Nor does the dog-fish at sea much more make out the dog of land, than that his cognominal, or namesake in the heavens. Brown, Vulg. Err.

One author is a mole to another: it is impossible for them to discover beauties; they have eyes only for blemishes: they can indeed see the light, as is said of their namesakes; but immediately shut their eyes. Addison.

NANK'N, or NANK'EN.* n. s. A kind of light cotton, first manufactured at Nan-king, in China.

NAP.† n. s. [hnappian, Saxon, to sleep.] 1. Slumber; a short sleep. A word ludicrously used.

They took him napping in his bed. Hudibras.
A wold took a dog napping at his master's door. L'Estrange.

What is seriously related by Helmont, that foul linen, stopt in a vessel that hath wheat in it, will in twenty-one days' time turn the wheat into mice; without conjuring, one may guess to have been the philosophy and information of some housewife, who had not so carefully covered her wheat, but that the mice could come at it, and were there taken napping just when they had made an end of their good cheer. Bentley.

NAP'TAKING.* n. s. [nap and take.] Surprise; seizure on a sudden; unexpected onset, like that made on men asleep.

Naptakings, assaults, spoilings, and firings, have in our forefathers' days, between us and France, been common. Carew.

NAP.E.† n. s. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it to come from nap, the hair that grows on it; Junius, with his usual Greek sagacity, from ναπ, a hill; perhaps from the same root with knob. Dr. Johnson.—That is from cnep, Sax. any protuberance; hnapp, Icel. globus.] The joint of the neck behind.

Turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves. Shakespeare.

Domitian dreamed, the night before he was slain, that a golden head was growing out of the nape of his neck. Bacon.

NAP'ERY.† n. s. [naperia, Ital. nappa, a table-cloth, a napkin; nappe, French, naperia, low Lat. from mappa, Lat. The Scotch use naiprie, which Dr. Jamieson has noticed with this remark: "Dr. Johnson mentions napery, but without any authority; the word being scarcely known in English." It happens, however, (though Dr. Johnson indeed could find no example,) that this word is common in English, and supported by indisputable authority.] Linen for the table; linen in general.

Some her husband's gowne,
Some a pillowe of downe,
Some of the napery;
And all this shifte they make
For the good ale sake. Skelton, Poems, p. 188.

What use was there of a towel, where was no water? She that made a fountain of her eyes, made precious napery of her hair: that better flax shamed the linen in the Pharisee's chest. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Ye may see it in a servingman's fresh napery. Overbury, Character. sign. E. 3.

He did eat no meat on table-cloths; — out of mere necessity; because they had no meat nor napery. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 93.

A gentleman that loves clean napery. Shirley, Hyde Park.

NAP'HEW. n. s. [napus, Lat.] An herb.

NAP'HTHA.† n. s. [naphtha, Lat. naphte, Fr. Cotgrave. In the Persian language, neft, or naphit. See Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 182. and Hole's Remarks on the Arabian Nights' Entert. p. 170.]

Naphtha is a very pure, clear, and thin mineral fluid, of a very pale yellow, with a cast of brown in it. It is soft and oily to the touch, of a sharp and unpleasant taste, and of a brisk and penetrating smell; of the bituminous kind. It is extremely ready to take fire.

Hill, Mat. Med.
Strabo represents it as a liquation of bitumen. It swims on the top of the water of wells and springs. That found about Babylon is in some springs whitish, though it be generally black, and differs little from petroleum.

Woodward.
This nephtha is an oily or fat liquid substance; in colour not unlike soft white clay.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 182.
From the arched roof

Pendant by subtle magic, many a row
Of starry lamps, and burning cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. Milton, P. L.

NAP'PINESS. n. s. [from nappy.] The quality of having a nap.

NAP'KIN.† n. s. [from nap; which etymology is oddly favoured by Virgil, "Tonsisque ferunt mantilia villis;" naperia, Italian. Dr. Johnson — It is rather a corruption, as napery is, of the Latin mappa, a cloth. See NAPERY.

1. A cloth used at table to wipe the hands.

By art were weaved napkins, shirts, and coats, inconsumable by fire. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The same matter was woven into a napkin at Louvain, which was cleansed by being burnt in the fire. Wilkins.

Napkins Heliogabalus had of cloth of gold, but they were most commonly of linen, or soft wool. Arbutnot.

2. A handkerchief. This sense is retained in Scotland, and in some parts of the north of England.

I am glad I have found this napkin;
This was her first remembrance from the Moor. Shakespeare.

NAP'FLESS.† adj. [from nap.] Wanting nap; threadbare.

Were he to stand for consul, ne'er would he Appear in the market place, nor on him put
The napless vesture of humility. Shakspeare, Coriol.

His only coat,
Eldest of things! and napless, as an heath
Of small extent by fleecy myriads graz'd.

Shenston, Econ. P. iii.

NAP'PY.† adj. [from nap.] Lye derives it from nappe, Saxon, a cup. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius has given the same derivation, nape, Germ. nap, Goth. a cup; defining nappy, inebriating. So Sherwood renders nappy ale, bien forte, i. e. very strong. Dr. Johnson calls it, from nap, frothy, spumy; whence apples and ale are called lambs-wool. So we say the foaming bowl, i. e. having the liquor in it frothing, rising as it were with a head. Some have thought it referring to nap, in another sense, as producing sleep.]

1. An old epithet applied to ale.
Nappy ale, good and stale, in a browne bowle,
Which did about the board merrily trowle.
Old Ball. The King and Miller of Mansfield.

When I my thrasher heard,
With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd.

Gay, Past.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime,
To liberal acts enlarg'd the narrow-soul,
Soft'n'd the fierce, and made the coward bold.
Dryden, Cym. and Iph.

Nothing more shakes any society than mean divisions between the several orders of its members, and their narrow-hearted repining at each other's gain. Sprat.

The greatest understanding is narrow. How much of God and nature is there, whereof we never had any idea? Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

The hopes of good from those whom we gratify, would produce a very narrow and stinted charity.
Smalbridge.

A salamander grows familiar with a stranger at first sight, and is not so narrow-spirited as to observe, whether the person she talks to, be in breeches or in petticoats. Addison.

It is with narrow-soul'd people as with narrow-neck'd bottles; the less they have in them the more noise they make in pouring it out.
Swift, Miscell.

5. Near; within a small distance.

Then Mnestheus to the head his arrow drove,
But made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd by the foot the flitting bird.
Dryden.

6. Close; vigilant; attentive.

The orb he roam'd
With narrow search; and with inspection deep Consider'd ev'ry creature, which of all

Marshall.

NA'THLESS.† adv. [na, Sax. that is, not the less.] Nevertheless; formed thus, nathless, nath'less. Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer use nathless; and as a poetical word it was certainly of three syllables, as Spenser also uses it; afterwards contracted into two. Now obsolete.

Yet nathless it could not doe him dié.

Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 54.

Nath'less, my brother since we passed are Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Spenser.

The torrid clime

Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire. Nathless he so endur'd, till on the beach Of that inflamed sea he stood, and call'd His legions. Milton, P. L.

NA'THMORE.† adv. [na the more.] Never the more. Spenser, from whom Dr. Johnson cites his example, does not use nathmore as a word only of two syllables, but as of three, both in the passage incorrectly cited by Dr. Johnson, and elsewhere. Obsolete.

Yet nathmore by his bold hartie speech Could his blood-frozen heart emboldened be.

Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 25.

Yet nathmore his meaning she afeard.

Id. iv. viii. 14.

NA'TION. n. s. [nation, French; natío, Latin.]

1. A people distinguished from another people; generally by their language, original, or government.

If Edward III. had prospered in his French wars, and peopled with English the towns which he won, as he began at Calais driving out the French, his successors holding the same course, would have filled all France with our nation.

Raleigh.

A nation properly signifies a great number of families derived from the same blood, born in the same country, and living under the same government.

Temple.

2. A great number; emphatically.

When after battle I the field have seen Spread o'er with ghastly shapes, which once were men;

A nation crush'd! a nation of the brave! A realm of death! and on this side the grave! Are there, said I, who from this sad survey, This human chaos, carry smiles away! Young.

NA'TIONAL. adj. [national, French; from nation.]

1. Public; general; not private; not particular.

They in their earthly Canaan plac'd,
Long time shall dwell and prosper, but when sins
National interrupt their public peace.

Milton, P. L.

Such a national devotion inspires men with sentiments of religious gratitude, and swells their hearts with joy and exultation.

Addison, Freeholder.

The astonishing victories our armies have been crowned with, were in some measure the blessings returned upon that national charity which has been so conspicuous.

Addison.

God, in the execution of his judgements, never visits a people with public and general calamities, but where their sins are public and national too.

Rogers.

2. Bigotted to one's own country.

NATIONALITY.* n. s. [from national.]

Hangs not on an ordinance, or power legislative;
And first, 'tis to speak whatever we please.

Denham.

4. Relating to the birth; pertaining to the time or place of birth.

If these men have defeated the law, and outrun native punishment; though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Many of our bodies shall, no doubt,
Find native graves.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

5. Original; that which gave being.

Have I now seen death! is this the way
I must return to native dust? O sight
Of terror, foul, and ugly to behold.

Milton, P. L.

6. Born with; co-operating with; congenial.

The head is not more native to the heart,
The hand more instrumental to the mouth,
Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

NA'TIVE. n. s.

1. Born in any place; original inhabitant.

Make no extirpation of the natives, under pretence of planting religion, God surely will no way be pleased with such sacrifices.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known,
The lowly native of a country town.

Dryden, Juv.

There stood a monument to Tacitus the historian, to the emperors Tacitus and Florianus, natives of the place.

Addison.

Our natives have a fuller habit, squarer, and more extended chests, than the people that beyond us to the south.

Blackmore.

2. Offspring.

The accusation,
All cause unborn, could never be the native
Of our so frank donation.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

NA'TIVELY.* adv. [from native.]

1. Naturally; not artificially.

We wear hair which is not natively our own.

Ep. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 77.

There is something so natively great and good in a person that is truly devout, that an awkward man may as well pretend to be genteel, as an hypocrite to be pious.

Tatler, No. 211.

2. Originally.

I take two names given to Christ—to be na-tively Chaldee words.

Lightfoot, Miscell. p. 118.

This goodness of God natively proceeded from his will, as thought and truth proceedeth from his mind.

Shelford, Learned Disc. p. 184.

NA'TIVENESS. n. s. [from native.] State of being produced by nature.

NAT'IVITY. n. s. [nativité, French.]

1. Birth; issue into life.

Concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour, in whose birth the births of all are only blessed.

Bacon.

They looked upon those as the true days of their nativity, wherein they were freed from the pains and sorrows of a troublesome world.

Nelson.

2. Time, place, or manner of birth.

My husband and my children both,
And you the calenders of their nativity,
Go to a gossip's feast.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers,
either in nativity, chance, or death.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

When I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.

Shakespeare, Mid. N. Dream.

Thy birth and thy nativity is of Canaan.

Ezek. xvi. 3.

3. State or place of being produced.

These, in their dark nativity, the deep
Shall yield us, pregnant with infernal flame.

Milton, P. L.

NA'TRON.* n. s. A sort of black salt imported from Egypt.

NATURAL. adj. [naturalis, Latin; naturel, Fr.]

1. Produced or effected by nature; not artificial.

There is no natural motion of any particular heavy body, which is perpetual, yet it is possible from them to contrive such an artificial revolution as shall constantly be the cause of itself.

Wilkins, Dedalus.

2. Illegitimate; not legal.

This would turn the vein of that we call natural, to that of legal propagation; which has ever been encouraged as the other has been disfavoured by all institutions.

Temple.

3. Bestowed by nature; not acquired.

If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem that the advantage lies on the side of children born from noble and wealthy parents.

Swift.

4. Not forced; not farfetched; dictated by nature.

I will now deliver a few of the properest and natural considerations that belong to this piece.

Wotton.

5. Following the stated course of things.

If solid piety, humility, and a sober sense of themselves, is much wanted in that sex, it is the plain and natural consequence of a vain and corrupt education.

Law.

6. Consonant to natural notions.

Such unnatural connections become, by custom, as natural to the mind as sun and light; fire and warmth go together, and so seem to carry with them as natural an evidence as self-evident truths themselves.

Locke.

7. Discoverable by reason, not revealed.

I call that natural religion, which men might know, and should be obliged unto, by the most principles of reason, improved by consideration and experience, without the help of revelation.

Wilkins.

8. Tender; affectionate by nature.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
He wants the natural touch.

Shaks. Macbeth.

9. Unaffected; according to truth and reality.

What can be more natural than the circumstances in the behaviour of those women who had lost their husbands on this fatal day.

Addison.

10. Opposed to violent: as, a natural death.

NATURAL. n. s. [from nature.]

1. An idiot; one whom nature debars from understanding; a fool.

That a monster should be such a natural.

Shakespeare.

Take the thoughts of one out of that narrow compass he has been all his life confined to, you will find him no more capable of reasoning than a perfect natural.

Locke.

2. Native; original inhabitant. Not in use.

The inhabitants and naturals of the place,
should be in a state of freedom.

Abbot, Descr. of the World.

Oppression in many places, wears the robes of justice, which domineering over the naturals may not spare strangers, and strangers will not endure it.

Raleigh, Essays.

3. Gift of nature; nature; quality. Not in use.

The wretchered are the contempters of all helps;
such as presuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things.

B. Jonson.

To consider them in their pure naturals, the earl's intellectual faculties were his stronger part,
and the duke, his practical.

Wotton.

NA'TURALISM.* n. s. [from natural.] Mere state of nature.

Those frolicsome, revelling, and thoroughly natural people, who give a full swing to their desires and appetites:—Those spirited and wanton cross-worms, as they call themselves, who are striving with speed and alacrity to come up to the naturalism and lawless privileges of the first class.

Ep. Lavington, Moravians Comp. and Det. p. 63.

Lord Bolingbroke died in 1751, and his philosophical works were published in 1753. Every one knows the principles and presumption of that unhappy nobleman. He was of that sect, which, to avoid a more odious name, chooses to distinguish itself by that of naturalism.

Hurd, Life of Bp. Warburton.

NATURALIST.† n. s. [naturaliste, French. Cotgrave.] A student in physics, or natural philosophy.

Admirable artifice! wherewith Galen, though a mere naturalist, was so taken, that he could not but adjudge the honour of a hymn to the wise Creator. More.

It is not credible, that the naturalist could be deceived in his account of a place that lay in the neighbourhood of Rome. Addison on Italy.

NATURALITY.* n. s. [naturalité, Fr.] Naturalness. Not in use.

This distinction will be found of most general use, for as much as there is such an intricate mixture of naturality and preternaturality in age.

Smith on Old Age, (1666,) p. 133.

NATURALIZATION. n. s. [from naturalize.] The act of investing aliens with the privileges of native subjects.

The Spartans were nice in point of naturalization; whereby while they kept their compass, they stood firm; but when they did spread, they became a windfall. Bacon.

Encouragement may be given to any merchants that shall come over and turn a certain stock of their own, as naturalization, and freedom from customs the two first years. Temple.

Enemies, by taking advantage of the general naturalization act, invited over foreigners of all religions. Swift.

TO NATURALIZE.† v. a. [naturalizer, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. To adopt into a community; to invest with the privileges of native subjects.

The lords informed the king, that the Irish might not be naturalized without damage to themselves or the crown. Davies.

2. To make natural; to make easy like things natural.

He rises fresh to his hammer and anvil; custom has naturalized his labour to him. South.

NATURALLY. adv. [from natural.]

1. According to the power or impulses of unassisted nature.

Our sovereign good is desired naturally; God, the author of that natural desire, hath appointed natural means whereby to fulfil it; but man having utterly disabled his nature unto these means, hath had other revealed, and hath received from heaven a law to teach him, how that which is desired naturally, must now supernaturally be attained. Hooker.

If sense be not certain in the reports it makes of things to the mind, there can be naturally no such thing as certainty of knowledge. South.

When you have once habituated your heart to a serious performance of holy intercession, you have done a great deal to render it incapable of spite and envy, and to make it naturally delight in the happiness of mankind. Law.

2. According to nature; without affectation; with just representation.

These things so in my song, I naturally may show;

Now as the mountain high; then as the valley low; Here fruitful as the mead; there, as the heath be bare;

Then, as the gloomy wood, I may be rough, tho' rare. Drayton.

That part

Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd. Shakspeare.
This answers fitly and naturally to the place of the abyss before the deluge, inclos'd within the earth. Burnet.

The thoughts are to be measured only by their propriety; that is, as they flow more or less naturally from the persons and occasions. Dryden.

3. Spontaneously; without art; without cultivation: as there is no place where wheat naturally grows.

NATURALNESS. n. s. [from natural.]

1. The state of being given or produced by nature.

The naturalness of a desire, is the cause that the satisfaction of it is pleasure, and pleasure importunes the will; and that which importunes the will, puts a difficulty on the will refusing or forbearing it. South.

2. Conformity to truth and reality; not affectation.

He must understand what is contained in the temperament of the eyes, in the naturalness of the eyebrows. Dryden.

Horace speaks of these parts in an ode that may be reckoned among the finest for the naturalness of the thought, and the beauty of the expression. Addison.

NATURE. n. s. [natura, Latin; nature, French.]

1. An imaginary being supposed to preside over the material and animal world.

Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law My services are bound. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

When it was said to Anaxagoras, the Athenians have condemned you to die; he said, and nature them. Bacon.

Let the postilion nature mount, and let The coachman art be set. Cowley.

Heaven bestows

At home all riches that wise nature needs. Cowley.

Simple nature to his hope was giv'n,

Beyond the cloud topt hill an humbler heav'n. Pope.

2. The native state or properties of any thing, by which it is discriminated from others.

Why leap'd the hills, why did the mountains shake?

What ail'd them their fix'd natures to forsake? Cowley.

Between the animal and rational province, some animals have a dark resemblance of the influxes of reason: so between the corporeal and intellectual world, there is man participating much of both natures. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The nature of brutes, besides what is common to them with plants, doth consist in having such faculties, whereby they are capable of apprehending external objects, and of receiving pain or pleasure from them. Wilkins.

3. The constitution of an animated body.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rd earth, Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shakspeare.

We're not ourselves,

When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind

To suffer with the body. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. Disposition of mind; temper.

Nothing could have subdued nature

To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters. Shakspeare.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,

Whose nature is so far from doing harms,

That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty

My practices ride easy. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. The regular course of things.

My end

Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence. Shakspeare.

6. The compass of natural existence.

If their dam may be judge, the young apes are the most beautiful things in nature. Glanville.

7. The constitution and appearances of things.

The works, whether of poets, painters, moralists, or historians, which are built upon general nature, live for ever; while those which depend for their existence on particular customs and habits, a partial view of nature, or the fluctuation of fashion, can only be coeval with that which first raised them from obscurity. Reynolds.

8. Natural affection, or reverence; native sensations.

Have we not seen

The murdering son ascend his parent's bed, Through violated nature force his way, And stain the sacred womb where once he lay? Pope.

9. The state or operation of the material world.

He binding nature fast in fate, Left free the human will. Pope.

10. Sort; species.

A dispute of this nature caused mischief in abundance betwixt a king and an archbishop. Dryden.

11. Sentiments or images adapted to nature, or conformable to truth and reality.

Only nature can please those tastes which are unprejudiced and refined. Addison.

Nature and Homer were, he found, the same. Pope.

12. Physicks; the science which teaches the qualities of things.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night, God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

13. Of this word, which occurs so frequently, with significations so various, and so difficultly defined, Boyle has given an explication, which deserves to be epitomised.

Nature sometimes means the Author of Nature, or natura naturans; as, nature hath made man partly corporeal and partly immaterial. For nature in this sense may be used the word Creator.

Nature sometimes means that on whose account a thing is what it is, and is called, as when we define the nature of an angle. For nature in this sense may be used essence or quality.

Nature sometimes means what belongs to a living creature at its nativity, or accrues to it by its birth, as when we say, a man is noble by nature, or a child is naturally forward. This may be expressed by saying, the man was born so; or, the thing was generated such.

Nature sometimes means an internal principle of local motion, as we say, the stone falls, or the flame rises by nature; for this we may say, that the motion up or down is spontaneous, or produced by its proper cause.

Nature sometimes means the established course of things corporeal; as, nature makes the night succeed the day. This may be termed established order, or settled course.

Nature means sometimes the aggregate of the powers belonging to a body, especially a living one: as when physicians say, that nature is strong, or nature left to herself will do the cure. For this may be used, constitution, temperament, or structure of the body.

Nature is put likewise for the system of the corporeal works of God; as there is no phoenix or chimera in nature. For nature thus applied, we may use the world, or the universe.

Nature is sometimes indeed commonly taken for a kind of semideity. In this sense it is best not to use it at all.
Boyle, Free Eng. into the Received Notion of Nature.

To NA'TURE.* v. a. To endow with natural qualities. We have long ceased to use the verb, but we retain the participle in good-natured, ill-natured, and other compounds.

He whiche natureth every kynde,
The myghty God, so as I fynde,
Of man, whiche is his creature,
Hath so deveyd the nature.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

NA'TURITY. n. s. [from nature.] The state of being produced by nature. Not used.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause which we impose not on the second; or what we deny unto nature we impute unto naturity.

Brown.

NA'VAL. adj. [naval, Fr. navalis, Lat.]

1. Consisting of ships.

Encamping on the main,
Our naval army had besieged Spain;
They that the whole world's monarchy design'd,
Are to their ports by our bold fleet confin'd.

Waller.

As our high vessels pass their watery way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay.

2. Belonging to ships.

Masters of such numbers of strong and valiant men, as well as of all the naval stores that furnish the world.

Temple.

NA'VALS.* n. s. pl. Used by Clarendon for naval affairs; perhaps by no other writer.

It was a day of signal triumph, the action of it having much surpassed all that was done in Cromwell's time, whose navals were much greater than had ever been in any age.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, ii. 507.

NA'VARCHY.* n. s. [navarchus, Lat. captain of a ship.] Knowledge of managing ships.

Navarchy, and making models for buildings and riggings of ships.

Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Hartlib, (1648), p. 6.

NAVE. n. s. [nav, Sax.]

1. The middle part of the wheel in which the axle moves.

Out, out, thou strumpet fortune! all you gods
In general synod take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellics from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n,
As low as to the fiends.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

In the wheels of waggons the hollows of the naves, by their swift rotations on the ends of the axle-trees, produce a heat sometimes so intense as to set them on fire.

Ray.

2. [From navis, nave, old Fr.] The middle part of the church distinct from the aisles or wings.

It comprehends the nave or body of the church, together with the chancel.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

NA'VEL. n. s. [napela, navela, Sax.]

1. The point in the middle of the belly, by which embryos communicate with the parent.

Imbrasides address

His javeline at him, and so ript his navil, that he wound,
As endlessly it shut his eyes, so open'd on the ground,
It pow'd his entrails.

Chapman.

As children, while within the womb they live,
Feed by the nave: here they feed not so.

Davies.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments.

Brown.

Me from the womb the midwife muse did take,
She cut my navel.

Cowley.

There is a superintending providence, that some animals will hunt for the teat before they are quite gotten out of the secundines, and parted from the navelstring.

Derham.

2. The middle; the interior part.

Being press'd to the war,
Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates.

Shaksp. Coriol.

Within the navel of this hideous wood,
Immur'd in cypress shades, a sorcerer dwells.

Milton, Comus.

NA'VELGALL. n. s.

Navelgall is a bruise on the top of the chine of the back, behind the saddle, right against the navel, occasioned either by the saddle being split behind, or the stuffing being wanting, or by the crupper buckle sitting down in that place, or some hard weight or knobs lying directly behind the saddle.

NA'VELWORT. n. s. [cotyledon.] A plant. It hath the appearance of houseleek.

Miller.

NA'VEW. n. s. [napus, Lat. navet, naveau, French.] A plant. It agrees in most respects with the turnep; but has a lesser root, and somewhat warmer in taste. In the isle of Ely the species, which is wild, is very much cultivated, it being the cole seed from which they draw the oil.

Miller.

NAUFRAGE.* n. s. [naufnage, old Fr. naufragium, Lat.] Shipwreck. Cockram. Guilty of the ruin and naufrage, and perishing of infinite subjects.

Bacon, Speech at taking his Place in Chancery.

NAUFRAGOUS.* adj. [from naufragus, Lat.] Causing shipwreck.

That tempestuous, and oft naufragous sea, wherein youth and handsomeness are commonly tossed with no less hazard to the body than the soul.

Ep. Taylor, Arif. Handsom. p. 33.

NAUGHT. adj. [naht, naphiht, Saxon; that is, ne aught, not any thing.] Bad; corrupt; worthless: it is now hardly used but in ludicrous language.

With them that are able to put a difference between things naught and things indifferent in the church of Rome, we are yet at controversy about the manner of removing that which is naught.

Hooker.

Thy sister's naught: Oh Regan! she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here.

Shakespeare.

NAUGHT. n. s. Nothing. This is commonly, though improperly, written nought. See AUGHT, NOUGHT, and OUGHT.

Be you contented

To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To pluck down justice from your awful bench.

Shakespeare.

NAU'GHTILY. adv. [from naughty.] Wickedly; corruptly.

NAU'GHTINESS.† n. s. [from naughty.] Wickedness; badness. Slight wickedness or perverseness, as of children.

No remembrance of naughtiness delights but mine own; and methinks the accusing his traps might in some manner excuse my fault, which certainly I loth to do.

Sidney.

Idleness, the bane of body and mind, the nurse of naughtiness.

Burton, Anal. of Med. p. 83.

NAU'GHTLY.* adv. [from naught.] Badly; corruptly.

Thus did I for want of better wit,
Because my parents naughtily brought me up.

Mir. for Mag. p. 297.

NAU'GHTY. adj. The same with naught, 1. Bad; wicked; corrupt.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father.

Sidney.

These naughty times
Put bars between the owners and their rights.

Shakespeare.

How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Shakespeare.

2. It is now seldom used but in ludicrous censure.

If gentle slumbers on thy temples creep,
But, naughty man, thou dost not mean to sleep,
Betake thee to thy bed.

Dryden.

NAVI'CLAR. adj. [navicularis, Latin; naviculaire, Fr.] In anatomy, the third bone in each foot that lies between the astragalus and ossa cuneiformia.

Dict.

NA'VIGABLE. adj. [navigable, French; navigabilis, Latin.] Capable of being passed by ships or boats.

The first-peopled cities were all founded upon these navigable rivers or their branches, by which the one might give succour to the other.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Many have motioned to the council of Spain, the cutting of a navigable channel through this small isthmus, so to shorten their common voyages to China, and the Molucces.

Heylin.

Almighty Jove surveys
Earth, air, and shores, and navigable seas.

Dryden.

NA'VIGABLENESS. n. s. [from navigable.] Capacity to be passed in vessels.

To NA'VIGATE. v. n. [navigo, Lat. naviger, French.] To sail; to pass by water.

The Phenicians navigated to the extremities of the western ocean.

Arbutnot on Coins.

To NA'VIGATE. v. a. To pass by ships or boats.

Drusus, the father of the emperor Claudius, was the first who navigated the northern ocean.

Arbutnot on Coins.

NAVIGATION. n. s. [navigation, French, from navigare.]

1. The act or practice of passing by water.

Our shipping for number, strength, mariners, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever.

Bacon.

The loadstone is that great help to navigation.

More.

Rude as their ships, was navigation then,
No useful compass or meridian known;
Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
And knew no north but when the polestar shone.

Dryden.

When Pliny names the Peni as inventors of navigation, it must be understood of the Phenicians, from whom the Carthaginians are descended.

Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Vessels of navigation.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

NA'VIGATOR. n. s. [navigateur, French, from navigare.] Sailor; seaman; traveller by water.

By the sounding of navigators, that sea is not three hundred and sixty foot deep.

Brerewood.

The rules of navigators must often fail. Brown.
The contrivance may seem difficult, because the submarine navigators will want winds, tides, and the sight of the heavens.

Willins, Math. Magic.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only a globe in speculation, has since been surrounded by the boldness of many navigators. Temple.

NAU'LAGE.† n. s. [naulage, French, Cot-grave; from naulum, Lat.] The freight of passengers in a ship.

NAU'MACHY.† n. s. [naumachie, French;
naumachia, Latin.] A mock sea fight.
Cockeram.

And now the naumachie begins.
Close to the surface.

Loveace, Luc. Poeth. (1659), p. 43.

NAU'SCOPY.* n. s. [ναύς and σκοπέω, Greek.]
The art of discovering the approach of ships, or the neighbourhood of lands, at a considerable distance. Dr. Maty.

NAU'SEA.* n. s. [Latin; navis, Greek, from ναῖς, a ship.] Sea-sickness; any sickness.

The sickness and nausea, usual in other cases of the like nature, being marvellously in this transferred to the by-standers. Dodsley.

To NAU'SEATE.† v. n. [from nauseo,
Latin.] To grow squeamish; to turn away with disgust.

We are apt to nauseate at very good meat,
when we know that an ill cook did dress it.

Ep. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 39.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and nauseate, and grow tired of a particular subject before you have finished it. Watts on the Mind.

To NAU'SEATE. v. a.

1. To loath; to reject with disgust.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are cry'd up in one age, which are decried and nauseated in another. Brown.

Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on,
Nauses the praise, which in her youth she won,
And hates the muse by which she was undone.

Dryden.

The patient nauses and loaths wholesome foods. Blackmore.

Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the best,
Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest. Pope.

2. To strike with disgust.

He let go his hold and turned from her, as if he were naused, then gave her a lash with his tail. Swift.

NAU'SEOUS. adj. [from nausea, Latin;
nausée, French.] Loathsome; disgust-ful; regarded with abhorrence.

Those trifles, wherein children take delight,
Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite:
And from those gaieties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loath-some. Ray.

Old thread-bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers. Swift.

NAU'SEOUSLY. adv. [from nauseous.] Loathsomenly; disgustfully.

This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowned how nauseously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they always kept in reserve. Dryden.

Their satire's praise;
So nauseously and so unlike they paint.

Garth, Disp.

NAU'SEOUSNESS. n. s. [from nauseous.]
Loathsomeness; quality of raising disgust.

The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness but as a moated castle; he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

NAU'TICAL.† adj. [nauticus, Lat.] Per-
NAU'TICK. } taining to sailors.

He elegantly shewed by whom he was drawn,
which depicted the nautical compass with aut
magnes, aut magna. Camden.

How did thy senses quail,

Seeing the shores so swarm'd, and round about Hearing confused shoutings of the nautick rout!
Fanshawe, Poems, (1676), p. 288.

NAU'TILUS. n. s. [Latin; nautilus, Fr.]
A shell fish furnished with something analogous to oars and a sail.

Learn of the little nautilus to sail,
Spread the thin oar and catch the driving gale.
Pope.

NA'VY.† n. s. [navye, nave, old French;
navis, Latin.] An assemblage of ships,
commonly ships of war; a fleet.

We mette of shippes a grette nave,
Fall of people that wolde in to Irlonde.

Old Morality of Hyckes-Scorner.

On the western coast rideth a puissant navy.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Levy money, and return the same to the treasurer of the navy for his majesty's use.

Clarendon.

The narrow seas can scarce their navy bear,
Or crowded vessels can their soldiers hold.

Dryden.

NAWL.* n. s. An Awl. See NALL.

The master was appointed to bore their ears through with a nawl, and so to mark them for perpetual servants.

Fotherby, Athcom. (1622), p. 120.

NAY.† adv. [Goth. ne; Saxon, na, or ne
aye.]

1. No; an adverb of negation.
Disputes in wrangling spend the day,
Whilst one says only yea, and t' other na.
Denham.

2. Not only so, but more. A word of amplification.

A good man always profits by his endeavour, yea, when he is absent; na, when dead, by his example and memory; so good authors in their style. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

He catechized the children in his chamber, giving liberty na, invitation, to as many as would,
to come and hear. Fell, Life of Hammond.

This is then the allay of Ovid's writings, which is sufficiently recompensed by his other excellencies; nay, this very fault is not without its beauties; for the most severe censor cannot but be pleased. Dryden.

If a son should strike his father, not only the criminal but his whole family would be rooted out, nay, the inhabitants of the place where he lived, would be put to the sword, nay, the place itself would be razed. Addison, Spectator.

3. Word of refusal.

They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay verily;
but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

Acts, xvi. 37.

The fox made several excuses, but the stork would not be said nay; so that at last he promised him to come. L'Estrange.

He that will not when he may,
When he would he shall have nay. Old Proverb.

NAY.* n. s. Denial; refusal. See DE-NAY.

There is a faire bedde there also, which she determineth to sell, and would have you to have the first nay of it.

Radcliffe, Letters, (L. Mar. 26. 1613.)

There was no nay, but I must in,
And take a cup of ale. W. Browne.

To NAY.* v. a. To refuse. Obsolete.
The state of a cardinal — was naied and denaied
him. Holinshead, Chron. of Eng. p. 620.

NA'YWARD.* n. s. [nay and ward.] Tendency to denial. This word has been given by Dr. Johnson as a third illustration of nayward, but Shakespeare's expression is certainly nayward, as
Mr. Mason also has noticed.

But I'd say, he had not,

And, I'll be sworn, you would believe my saying,
Howe'er you lean to the nayward.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

NA'YWORD.† n. s. [nay and word.]
1. A proverbial reproach; a bye word.
If I do not gull him into a nayword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

2. A watch word. Not in use.
I have spoke with her; and we have a nay- word how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry mum; she cries budget; and by that we know one another.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

NE.† adv. [Saxon. This particle was formerly of very frequent use, both singly and by contraction in compound words: as, nill for ne will or will not;
nas for ne has or has not; nis for ne is or is not.]

1. Neither.

His warlike shield all cover'd closely was,
Ne might of mortal eye be ever seen,
Not made of steel, nor of enduring brass.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Not.
Yet who was that Belphebe, he ne wist.

Spenser, F. Q.

But when she saw at last, that he ne would
For ought or might be wonne unto her will,
She turn'd her love to hatred manifold.

Ib. v. iv. 30.

NEAF.† n. s. [nefi, Icelandic; naefve,
Su. Goth.] A fist. It is retained in Scotland, and the north of England.

Give me thy neaf, Monsieur Mustardseed.

Shakespeare.

To NEAL.† v. a. [anælan, Saxon, to heat;
neelen, old French, to enamel.] To temper by a gradual and regulated heat.

The workmen let it cool by degrees in such relentings of fire, as they call their nealing heats:
lest it should shiver by a violent succeeding of air in the room of fire. Digby.

This did happen for want of the glasses being gradually cooled or nealed. Boyle.

If you file, engrave, or punch upon your steel, neal it first, because it will make it softer, and consequently work easier. The common way is to give it a blood-red heat in the fire, then let it cool of itself. Mason, Mech. Es.

To NEAL. v. n. To be tempered in fire.

Reduction is chiefly effected by fire, wherein if they stand and neal, the imperfect metals vapour away. Bacon.

NEAP.* n. s. [nep-plob, Saxon. Skinner derives it from næpæ, næpiz, want, poor; implying, I suppose, that a neap is when the water flows not copious.] Low tide. Seamen use the expression "deep neap."

The mother of waters, the great deep, hath lost nothing of her ancient bounds. Her motion of ebbing and flowing, of high springs and dead neaps, are as constant as the changes of the moon.

Hakewill on Providence.

NEAP.† adj. Low; decrecent. Used only of the tide. See the substantive.

The waters are in perpetual agitation of flux and reflux; even when no wind stirs, they have their neap and spring tides. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 66.

How doth the sea constantly observe its ebbs and flows, its springs and neap-tides, and still retain its saltness, so convenient for the maintenance of its inhabitants. Ray.

NE'APED.* adj. [from neap.] Wanting sufficient depth of water. Spoken of ships. The same as beneaped. See BENEAPED.

NEAPOLITAN.* n. s. A native of the kingdom of Naples.

O Stephano! two Neapolitans 'scap'd.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

NEAPOLITAN.* adj. Belonging to Naples.

When a Neapolitan cavalier has nothing else to do, he gravely shuts himself up in his closet, and falls a tumbling over his papers to see if he can start a law-suit, and plague any of his neighbours.

Addison, on Italy.

NEAR.† prep. [nep, Saxon, from neah, nigh; Su. Goth. and Belg. naer.] At no great distance from; close to; nigh; not far from. It is used both of place and time.

I have heard thee say,
No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
As when thy lady and thy true love died. Shakspeare.
Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give,
As one near death to those that wish him live.

Shakspeare.

With blood the dear alliance shall be bought,
And both the people near destruction brought.

Dryden.

To the warlike steed thy studies bend,
Near Pisa's flood the rapid wheels to guide.

Dryden.

This child was very near being excluded out of the species of man, barely by his shape.

Locke.

NEAR.† adv.

1. Almost.

Whose fame by every tongue is for her minerals hurl'd,
Near from the mid-day's point throughout the western world. Dryden.

2. At hand; not far off. Unless it be rather in this sense an adjective.

Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins. Jer. xii. 2.
He serv'd great Hector, and was ever near,
Not with his trumpet only, but his spear.

Dryden, Æn.

3. Within a little.

Self-pleasing and humourous minds are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles.

Bacon, Ess.

This eagle shall go near, one time or other, to take you for a hare.

L'Estrange.

He that paid a bushel of wheat per acre, would pay now about twenty-five pounds per annum; which would be near about the yearly value of the land.

Locke.

The Castilian would rather have died in slavery than paid such a sum as he found would go near to ruin him.

Addison.

4. By relation or alliance.

The earl of Armagnac, near knit to Charles,
A man of great authority in France,
Proffers his only daughter to your grace
In marriage. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

Fell.

The will free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions.

Locke.

After he has continued his doubling in his thoughts, and enlarged his idea as much as he pleases, he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out.

Locke.

Whether they nearer liv'd to the blest times;
When man's Redeemer bled for human crimes;
Whether the hermits of the desert fraught
With living practice, by example taught.

Harte.

2. Advanced towards the end of an enterprise or disquisition.

Unless they add somewhat else to define more certainly what ceremonies shall stand for best, in such sort that all churches in the world should know them to be the best, and so know them that there may not remain any question about this point; we are not a whit the nearer for that they have hitherto said.

Hooker.

3. Direct; straight; not winding.

Taught to live the nearest way.

Milton.

To measure life, learn then betimes, and know

Tow'rd solid good what leads the nearest way.

Milton.

4. Close; not rambling; observant of style or manner of the thing copied.

Hannibal Caro's, in the Italian, is the nearest, the most poetical, and the most sonorous of any translation of the Æneid. Yet though he takes the advantage of blank verse, he commonly allows two lines for one in Virgil, and does not always hit his sense.

Dryden.

5. Closely related.

If one shall approach to any that is near of kin to him.

Lev. xviii. 6.

6. Intimate; familiar; admitted to confidence.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master.

Shakspeare.

7. Touching; pressing; affecting; dear.

Every minute of his being thrusts

Against my near'st of life. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He could never judge that it was better to be deceived than not, in a matter of so great and near concernment.

Locke.

8. Parsimonious, inclining to covetousness; as, a near man.

A near and hard and hucking chapman shall never buy good flesh.

Hales (of Eton), Serm. on 1 Cor. vi. 13. p. 20.

Nearly it now concerns us, to be sure

Of our omnipotence. Milton, P. L.

It concerneth them nearly, to preserve that government which they had trusted with their money.

Swift.

3. In a niggardly manner.

NEARNESS. n. s. [from near.]

1. Closeness; not remoteness; approach.

God, by reason of nearness, forbade them to be like the Canaanites or Egyptians.

Hooker.

Delicate sculptures be helped with nearness, and gross with distance; which was well seen in the controversy between Phidias and Alcmenas about the statue of Venus.

Wotton.

Those blessed spirits that are in such a nearness to God, may well be all fire and love, but you at such a distance cannot find the effects of it.

Druppa.

The best rule is to be guided by the nearness, or distance at which the repetitions are placed in the original.

Pope.

2. Alliance of blood or affection.

Whether there be any secret passages of sympathy between persons of near blood; as, parents, children, brothers and sisters. There be many reports in history, that upon the death of persons of such nearness, men have had an inward feeling of it.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Tendency to avarice; caution of expence.

It shews in the king a nearness, but yet with a kind of justness. So these little grains of gold and silver, helped not a little to make up the great heap.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

NEARSIGHTED.* adj. [near and sight.]

Shortsighted; applied to one who distinguishes objects only which are near. A common colloquial expression.

NEAT.† n. s. [neat, neatren, nten, Sax.

naut, Icel. The Scotch use nowt and nolt; and the former is old English also: "Goodly nowt, both fat and bigge with bone," Churchyard's Worth. of Wales, 1578. And so nowtherd is in the north of England a neatherd. Naut is used in the Isle of Man.]

naud, Icel. necessitas; neida, cogere,
(to compel,) ab antiquiss. na, con, prope.
Serenius.]

1. Exigency; pressing difficulty; necessity.
The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

That spirit that first rush'd on thee,

In the camp of Dan,

Be efficacious in thee now at need. Milton, S. A.

In thy native innocence proceed,

And summon all thy reason at thy need. Dryden.

2. Want; distressful poverty.

Famine is in thy cheeks;

Need and oppression stare within thine eyes,

Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back.

Shakespeare.

Defer not to give to him that is in need.

Ecclesi. iv. 3.

The distant heard, by fame, her pious deeds;

And laid her up for their extremest needs;

A future cordial for a fainting mind. Dryden.

God sometimes calls upon thee to relieve the needs of thy brother, sometimes the necessities of thy country, and sometimes the urgent wants of thy prince. South.

3. Want; lack of any thing for use.

God grant we never may have need of you.

Shakespeare.

God, who sees all things intuitively, neither stands in need of logic, nor uses it. Baker.

To NEED. v. a. [from the noun.] To want;
to lack; to be in want of; to require.

Basest beggars

Are in the poorest thing superfluous;

Allow not nature more than nature needs.

Man's life is cheap as beast's. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The whole need not a physician, but the sick.

St. Matthew.

Thou thy regal sceptre shalt lay by,

For regal sceptre then no more shalt need. Milton.

To ask whether the will has freedom? is to ask, whether one power has another? A question too absurd to need an answer. Locke.

To NEED. v. n.

1. To be wanted; to be necessary.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,

Here needs me whiles the famous ancestors

Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Spenser.

When we have done it, we have done all that is in our power, and all that needs. Locke.

2. To have necessity of any thing; to be in want of any thing.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep; but how incoherent and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being, those who are acquainted with dreams need not be told. Locke.

He that would discourse of things, as they agree in the complex idea of extension and solidity, needeth but use the word body. Locke.

NEEDER. n. s. [from need.] One that wants any thing.

If the time thrust forth

A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send

O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;

And lose advantage, which doth ever cool

In th' advantage of the needer. Shakspeare, Coriol.

NEEDFUL.† adj. [need and full.]

1. Distressed; in want. This is the primary sense, but not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

He nought helpeth needful in their need.

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.

Why standest thou so far off, O Lord, and hidest thy face in the needful time of trouble.

Psalms x. 1. Common Pr.

2. Necessary; indispensably requisite.

Give us all things that be needful, both for our souls and bodies. Common Prayer.

Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,

As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

All things needful for defence abroad,

Mnestheus, and brave Seresthus walk the round.

Dryden.

To my present purpose it is not needful to use arguments, to evince the world to be finite. Locke.

A lonely desert and an empty land,

Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,

A single house to their benighted guest.

Addison on Italy.

NEEDFULLY. adv. [from needful.] Necessarily.

They who

Dare for these poems, yet both ask and read,

And like them too; must needfully, though few,

Be of the best. B. Jonson.

NEEDFULNESS. n. s. [from needful.] Necessity.

NEEDILY. adv. [from needy.] In poverty;
poorly.

NEEDINESS. n. s. [from needy.] Want;
poverty.

Whereas men have many reasons to persuade;

to use them all at once, weakeneth them. For it argueth a neediness in every of the reasons, as if one did not trust to any of them, but fled from one to another. Bacon.

NEEDLE.† n. s. [Goth. nethal; Saxon nebl; Icel. nael; à Teut. nelen, suere.
Wachter and Serenius.]

1. A small instrument pointed at one end to pierce cloth; and perforated at the other to receive the thread, used in sewing.

For him you waste in tears your widow'd hours,
For him your curious needle paints the flowers.

Dryden.

The most curious works of art, the sharpest finest needle, doth appear as a blunt rough bar of iron coming from the furnace of the forge.

Wilkins.

2. The small steel bar which in the mariner's compass stands regularly north and south.

Go bid the needle its dear north forsake,

To which with trembling reverence it doth bend.

Cowley.

The use of the loadstone, and the mariners' needle was not then known. Burnet, Theory.

NEEDLE-MAKER. } who makes needles.

NEEDLE-WORK. n. s. [needle and work.]

1. The business of a sempstress.

2. Embroidery by the needle.

In needle-works and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a lightsome ground, than a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground. Bacon.

In a curious brede of needle-work, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one from the first appearance of the other. Addison.

NEEDLESS. adj. [from need.]

1. Unnecessary; not requisite.

Their exception against easiness, as if that did nourish ignorance, proceedeth altogether of a needless jealousy. Hooker.

This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;

Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Would not these be great and needless abate-ments of their happiness, if it were confined within the compass of this life only? Atterbury.

Money we either lock up in chests, or waste it in needless and ridiculous expences upon ourselves, whilst the poor and the distressed want it for necessary uses. Law.

2. Not wanting; out of use.

For his weeping in the needless stream,
Poor dear, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament,

As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more

To that which had too much. Shakspeare, As you like it.

NEEDLESSLY. adv. [from needless.] Unnecessarily; without need.

The consequences whereof have been to render languages more difficult to be learnt, and needlessly to advance orthography into a troublesome and laborious art. Holder, Elem. of Speech, Pref.

NEEDLESSNESS. n. s. [from needless.]
Unnecessariness.

To explain St. Paul's epistles, after so great a train of expositors, might seem censurable for its needlessness; did not daily examples of pious and learned men justify it. Locke.

NEEDMENT. n. s. [from need.] Something necessary.

Behind

His scrip did hang, in which his needments he did bind.

Spenser, F. Q.

NEEDS. adv. [nebe, Saxon, unwilling, Dr. Johnson. — It is merely need is, used parenthetically. Mr. H. Tooke.] Necessarily; by compulsion; indispensably.

The general and perpetual voice of men is as the sentence of God himself; for that which all men have at all times learned, nature herself must needs have taught.

Hooker.

God must needs have done the thing which they imagine was to be done.

Hooker.

I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.

Shakespeare.

Another being elected and his ambassadors returned, he would needs know the cause of his repulse.

Davies.

I perceive

Thy mortal sight to fall: objects divine Must needs impair, and weary, human sense.

Milton, P. L.

To say the principles of nature must needs be such as philosophy makes them, is to set bounds to omnipotence.

Glanville.

A trial at law must needs be innocent in itself, when nothing else corrupts it; because it is a thing which we cannot but want, and there is no living in this world without it.

Kettlewell.

I have affairs below,

Which I must needs dispatch before I go.

Dryden.

NEEDY. adj. [from need.] Poor; necessitous; distressed by poverty.

Their gates to all were open evermore, And one sat waiting ever them before, To call in comers by, that needy were and poor.

Spenser.

— In his needy shop a tortoise hung, An algar stuff'd, and other skins Of ill-shap'd fishes.

Shakespeare, Rom. & Jul.

The poor and needy praise thy name.

Psalms lxxiv. 21.

We bring into the world a poor needy uncertain life, short at the longest, and unquiet at the best.

Temple.

Being put to right himself upon the needy, he will look upon it as a call from God to charity.

Kettlewell.

Nuptials of form, of interest, or of state, Those seeds of pride are fruitful in debate: Let happy men for generous love declare, And choose the needy virgin, chaste and fair.

Granville.

To relieve the needy, and comfort the afflicted, are duties that fall in our way every day.

Addison, Spect.

The most nefarious bastards, are they whom the law styles incestuous bastards, which are begotten between ascendants and descendants, and between collateral, as far as the divine prohibition extends.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

NEFA'RIOUSLY. adv. [from nefarious.] Abominably; wickedly.

That unhallowed villany nefariously attempted upon the person of our agent.

Milton, Letters of State.

NEGA'TION. n. s. [negatio, Latin. negation, French.]

1. Denial: the contrary to affirmation.

Our assertions and negations should be yea and nay, for whatsoever is more than these is sin.

Rogers.

2. Description by denial, or exclusion, or exception.

Negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity to be present with it; as when we say a stone is inanimate, or blind, or deaf.

Watts, Logick.

Chance signifies, that all events called casual, among inanimate bodies, are mechanically and naturally produced according to the determinate figures, textures, and motions of those bodies, with this only negation, that those inanimate bodies are not conscious of their own operations.

Bentley.

3. Argument drawn from denial.

It may be proved in the way of negation, that they came not from Europe, as having no remainder of the arts, learning, and civilities of it.

Heylin.

NEGUS.* n. s. A mixture of wine, water, sugar, lemon, and nutmeg.

The mixture now called negus was invented in Queen Anne's time by Colonel Negus. Malone, Life of Dryden, p. 484.

NEIF.† n. s. [nef, Icel. naeve, Dan. neve or nieve, Scottish; and so in the north of England.] Fist. It is likewise written neaf.

Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif. Shaksp. Hen. IV. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Reach me thy neif.

To NEIGH.† v. n. [hnægan, Saxon; naeyen, Teut. hinnie, Latin.] To utter the voice of a horse or mare.

Note a wild and wanton herd, Or race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shaksp. Jer. v. 8.

They were as fed horses, every one neighed.

The generous horse, that nobly wild, Neighs on the hills, and dares the angry lion. Smith.

NEIGH. n. s. [from the verb.] The voice of an horse.

It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage. Shaksp.

NEIGHING.* n. s. [from neigh.] The voice of a horse or mare.

The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan: the whole land trembled at the sound of the neighing of his strong ones. Jer. viii. 16.

Shrill neighings fill the neighbouring plain. Dryden.

NEIGHBOUR.† n. s. [nehzebup, nehup, Saxon; from neh, nigh, near, and zebup, an inhabitant.]

1. One who lives near to another.

A choic sometimes for festivals he slew, The choicer part was his sick neighbour's due. Harle.

2. One who lives in familiarity with another; a word of civility.

Masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours, Will you undo yourselves? Shaksp. Macbeth.

3. Intimate; confident.

The deep revolving witty Buckingham No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels. Shaksp.

4. [In divinity.] One partaking of the same nature, and therefore entitled to good offices.

Sins against men are injuries; hurts, losses and damages, whereby our neighbour is in his dignity, life, chastity, wealth, good name, or any way justly offended, or by us hindered. Perkins.

The gospel allows no such terms as a stranger; makes every man my neighbour. Sprat, Sermon.

You should always change and alter your intercessions, according as the needs and necessities of your neighbours or acquaintance seem to require. Law.

NEIGHBOUR.* adj. Near to another; adjoining; next.

I long'd the neighbour town to see.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Jan.
God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and the neighbour cities thereof. Jer. i. 40.

He sent such an addition of foot, as he could draw out of Oxford and the neighbour garrisons. Clarendon.

TO NEIGHBOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adjoin to; to confine on.
Wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Give me thy hand,
Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. Shakespeare, Wind. Tale.
These grow on the leisurely ascending hills that neighbour the shore. Sandys, Journey.
Things nigh equivalent and neighbouring value,
By lot are parted. Prior.

2. To acquaint with; to make near to.
That being of so young days brought up with
him,
And since so neighbour'd to his youth and haviour. Shakespeare.

TO NEIGHBOUR.* v. n. [from the noun.]
To inhabit the vicinity.

As a king's daughter being in person sought
Of divers princes who do neighbour near,
On none of them can fix a constant thought. Davies.

NEIGHBOURHOOD. n. s. [from neighbour.]

1. Place adjoining.
One in the neighbourhood mortally sick of the small-pox, desiring the doctor to come to him. Fell.
I could not bear
To leave thee in the neighbourhood of death,
But flew in all the haste of love to find thee. Addison, Cato.

2. State of being near each other.
Consider several states in a neighbourhood; in order to preserve peace between these states, it is necessary they should be formed into a balance. Swift.

3. Those that live within reach of communication.
How ill mean neighbourhood your genius suits?
To live like Adam midst an herd of brutes! Harte.

NEIGHBOURLINESS.* n. s. [from neighbourly.] State or quality of being neighbourly. Scott.

NEIGHBOURLY. adj. [from neighbour.]
Becoming a neighbour; kind; civil.

The Scottish lord hath a neighbourly charity in him; for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay when he was able. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

The Woodberry so nigh, and neighbourly doth live,

With Aberley his friend. Drayton.
He steals my customers; twelve he has under bonds never to return; judge if this be neighbourly dealing. Arbutnot.

NEIGHBOURLY.† adv. [from neighbour.]
With social civility.

Being neighbourly admitted, — by the courtesy of England, to hold possessions in our province, a country better than their own.

Milton, Observ. on the Articles of Peace.

NEIGHBOURSHIP.* n. s. [from neighbour.]
State of being near each other.

How happy are the dead, who quietly rest
Beneath these stones! each by his kindred laid,
Still in a hallow'd neighbourhood with those,
Who when alive his social converse shar'd.

Miss Baillie, Series of Plays on the Passions, (1798.)

NEITHER.† conjunct. [наѣр. наѣр,
Sax. ne either.]

1. Not either. A particle used in the first branch of a negative sentence, and answered by nor. Dr. Johnson. — Improperly used when more than two things come under consideration: as where Addison uses "determined in his conduct neither by the dictates of his own conscience, the suggestions of true honour, nor the principles of religion," he should have either left out "the suggestions of true honour," or he should have said, "is not determined by the dictates of his own conscience, the suggestions of true honour, or the principles of religion." Bp. Hurd.

He was neither there ne here,
But cleane out of himselfe away,
That he n'ot wot to thinke or say.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king. I Kings, xxii. 31.
Men lived at home, neither intent upon any foreign merchandise, nor inquisitive after the lives and fortunes of their neighbours. Heylin.

2. It is sometimes the second branch of a negative or prohibition to any sentence.
Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it.

Gen. iii. 3.

This commandment standeth not for a cypher, neither is it read and expounded in vain among Christians. White.

3. Sometimes at the end of a sentence it follows as a negative; and though not very grammatically, yet emphatically, after another negative; in old English
two negatives denied.

If it be thought that it is the greatness of distance, whereby the sound cannot be heard; we see that lightnings and coruscations, near at hand, yield no sound neither. Bacon.

Men come not to the knowledge of which are thought innate, till they come to the use of reason, nor then neither. Locke.

NEITHER. pronoun. Not either; nor one nor other.

He neither loves
Nor either cares for him. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.
Which of them shall I take?

Both, one, or neither? neither can be enjoy'd
If both remain alive. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The balance, by a propensity to either side, inclined to neither. Fell.

Suffice it that he's dead; all wrongs die with
him;

Thus I absolve myself, and excuse him,
Who sav'd my life and honour, but praise neither. Dryden.

Experience makes us sensible of both, though our narrow understandings can comprehend neither. Locke.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither slave to his brother;
but independent of each other. Locke.

NEM-CON.* An abbreviation of the Latin nemine contradicente, no one opposing; often used in colloquial language. See CON.

NE'MOROUS.* adj. [nemorosus, Latin.]
Woody. Cockeram.

Paradise itself was but a kind of nemorous temple, or sacred grove. Evelyn, B. iv. § 4.

TO NEMPNE.* v. a. [nemnan, Saxon.] To name. Obsolete.

Ye moten nempe him to what place also.

Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

As much disdaining to be so misdeem't,
Or a warmonger to be basely nempt.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 29.

NE'NIA.* n. s. [Greek.] A funeral song; an elegy.

NE'NUPHAR. n. s. [nymphaea, Lat.] Water
lily, or water rose.

NEOLO'GICAL.* adj. [neologique, French.]
Employing new words or phrases.

Such examples really make one tremble; and will, I am convinced, determine my fair fellow-subjects and their adherents to adopt, and scrupulously conform to, [Dr.] Johnson's rules of true orthography by book. In return to this concession, I seriously advise him to publish, by way of appendix to his great work, a genteel neological dictionary, containing those polite, though perhaps not strictly grammatical, words and phrases, commonly used, and sometimes understood, by the beau monde. Ld. Chesterfield, World, No. 101.

NEO'LOGY.* n. s. [neologie, Fr. from the Greek νέος, new, and λόγος, a word, discourse.] Invention or use of new words and phrases.

They endeavour by a sort of neology of their own to confound all ideas of right and wrong.

Boothby on Burke, p. 266.

NEO'LOGISM.* n. s. [neologisme, Fr.] A new and quaint expression.

NEOPHYTE.† n. s. [neophyte, Fr. νέος and φύω.] One regenerated; a convert;
one entered into a new state.

In effects of grace, which exceed far the effects of nature, we see St. Paul makes a difference between those he calls neophytes, that is newly grafted into Christianity; and those that are brought up in the faith.

Bacon, Sp. on the Union of Laws.

He tells thee true, my noble neophyte; my little grammaticaster, he does.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

NE'OPHYTE.* adj. Newly entered into an employment.

It is with your young grammatical courtier, as with your neophyte player, a thing usual to be daunted at the first presence or interview.

B. Jonson, Cynthia Revels.

NEOTE/RICK.† n. s. [neotericus, Latin, from νέος, new, Gr. νεότερος, more recent.]
One of modern times.

I refer you to the voluminous tomes of Galen,
Aretæus, Rhasis, &c. and those exact neotericks, Savanarola, Capivaccius, Donatus.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 7.

The students in that profession [divinity] should apply themselves in the first place to the reading of the Scriptures, next the councils and ancient fathers, and then the schoolmen; excluding those neotericks, both Jesuits and Puritans, who are known to be meddlers in matters of state and monarchy.

The King's Let. to Vice-Ch. of Oxf. (1622.) A. Wood, An.

We are not to be guided either by the mis-reports of some ancients, or the capricious of one or two neotericks. Grew.

NEOTE'RICAL.* } adj. Modern; novel;
NEOTE'RIC. } late.

They were the inventions of men, which lived in diverse ages, and had also diverse ends, some being ancient, others neoterical.

Bacon, Pref. to Wisdom of the Ancients.

I advise you not to neglect old authors; for though we be come as it were to the meridian of truth, yet there be many neoterical commentators, and self-conceited writers, that eclipse her in many things, and go from "obscurum" to "obscurius."

Howell, Lett. iv. 31.

NEP.† n. s. [nepeta, Lat.] The herb cat-mint.

The dog when he is stomach-sick can go right to his proper grass, the cat to her nep, the goat to his hemlock.

Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 51.

NEPENTHE.† n. s. [Gr. νῆ, and πένθος; Fr. népenthès.] A drug that drives away all pains.

Not that Nepenthes, which the wife of Thone In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena, Is of such power to stir up joy as this.

Milton, Comus.

There where no passion, pride, or shame transport,

Lall'd with the sweet nepenthe of a court;
There where no fathers, brothers, friends disgrace,
Once break their rest nor stir them from their place.

Pope.

NEPHEW. n. s. [nepos, Latin; neveu, French.]

1. The son of a brother or sister.
Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;
My brightest nephew and whom best I love.

Dryden.

I ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, the grandson by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother?

Locke.

2. The grandson. Out of use.

With what intent they were first published, those words of the nephew of Jesus do plainly signify, after that my grandfather Jesus had given himself to the reading of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and had gotten therein sufficient judgement, he proposed also to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom.

Hooker.

Her sire at length is kind,
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas.

Dryden.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.

All the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descends the crown retain'd.

Spenser.

NEPHRIT'ICAL.† } adj. [νεφρίτιος; nephre-
NEPHRIT'ICK. } tique, Fr.]

1. Belonging to the organs of urine.

Mr. Harrison hath been of late somewhat more than heretofore troubled with certain nephritical fits; but they are transient and light.

Watton to Sir E. Bacon, Rem. p. 481.

A very valuable medicine, and of great account in divers cases, particularly asthmas nephritick pains, nervous colicks, and obstructions.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 62.

2. Troubled with the stone.

The diet of nephritick persons ought to be opposite to the alkaline nature of the salts in their blood.

Arbuthnot.

3. Good against the stone.

The nephritick stone is commonly of an uniform dusky green; but some samples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow.

Woodward.

NEPOTISM. n. s. [nepotisme, Fr.; nepos, Latin.] Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of nepotism Rome owes its present splendour; for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families.

Addison on Italy.

NE'RID.* n. s. [Nereis, Lat.; pl. Nereides, daughters of Nereus.] A sea-nymph.

Her gentewomen, like the Nereids,
So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,
And made their bends adornings,

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

NERVE.† n. s. [nervus, Latin; nerf, Fr.]

1. The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerves do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body; they have also blood vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever any nerve sends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two nerves join together, there is generally a ganglio or plexus.

Quincy.

What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. It is used by the poets for sinew or tendon.

If equal powres

Thou wouldst inflame, amidst my nerves, as then
I could encounter with three hundred mén.

Chapman.

Strong Tharysm'd discharged a speeding blow
Full on his neck, and cut the nerves in two.

Pope, Odyssey.

3. Force; strength.

The nerve and emphasis of the verb will lie in the preposition.

Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 20.

To NERVE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To strengthen.

Thou, last,

Tremendous goddess, nerve this lifted arm!

Aaron Hill.

NE'RVLESS.† adj. [from nerve.] Without strength.

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, faint and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head.

Pope, Dunciad.

O'er all profound dejection sat,
And nerveless fear. Thomson, Liberty, P. iii.
The western eloquence, in its turn, appeared nerveless and effeminate, frigid or insipid, to the hardy and inflamed imaginations of the east.

Warburton, Doct. of Grace, p. 71.

NE'RVOUS.† adj. [nervosus, Latin.]

1. Full of nerves.

The body of this fish is three yards long, and one yard broad, thick skinn'd, without scales, narrow towards the tail, which is nervous, slow in swimming, wanting fins.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 26.

We may imagine what acerbity of pain must be endured by our Lord — by the piercing his hands and feet, parts very nervous, and exquisitely sensible.

Barrow, vol. i. S. 32.

2. Well strung; strong; vigorous.

As "sine nervis esse" is a phrase for debility, so to be nervous, is taken to be valid and strong.

Waterhouse on Fortescue, (1663), p. 197.

What nervous arms he boasts, how firm his tread,
His limbs how turn'd.

Pope, Odyssey.

3. Relating to the nerves; having the seat in the nerves.

The venal torrent, murmur'ing from afar,
Whisper'd no peace to calm this nervous war;
And Philomel, the siren of the plain,
Sung soporific unisons in vain.

Harte.

4. [In medical cant.] Having weak or diseased nerves.

Poor, weak, nervous creatures. Cheyne.

NE'RVOUSLY.* adv. [from nervous.] With strength; with force.

He thus nervously describes the strength of custom.

Watson, Hist. E. P. iv. 66.

NE'RVOUNESS.* n. s. [from nervous.] Vigour; strength.

If there had been epithets joined with the other substantives, it would have weakened the nervousness of the sentence.

Dr. Watton, Ess. on Pope.

NE'RVY. adj. [from nerve.] Strong; vigorous. Not in use.

Death, that dark spirit, in his nervy arm doth lie,

Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men die.

Shakespeare.

NE'SCIENCE.† n. s. [from nescio, Latin.]

Ignorance; the state of not knowing.

Not vincible ignorance, or of things he might know, but invincible; not privative ignorance, or of things he ought to know, but mere nescience; in brief, ignorance: — simple ignorance, and not sinful ignorance.

Walsall, Life of Chr. (1615), sign. B. 4.

God fetched it out for me, in that absence and nescience of mine.

Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

Many of the most accomplished wits of all ages, have resolved their knowledge into Socrates his sum total, and after all their pains in quest of science, have sat down in a professed nescience.

Glanville, Scepis.

NESH.† adj. [nefc, Sax.] Soft; tender; easily hurt. Skinner. The word is used in several parts of England. Sometimes with the pronunciation of naish or nash; and it is old in our language.

For love his herte is tendre and nesshe.

Chaucer, Court of Love.

The nesh tops of the young hazel.

Crowe, Lewesdon Hill.

To NESH.* v. a. To render weak; to soften injuriously. Not in use.

I counsel you to eat and drinke temperately; nesh not your womb by drinking immoderately.

Old Poem in Ashmole's Theat. Chem. (1652), p. 113.

NESSE.

1. A termination added to an adjective to change it into a substantive, denoting state or quality; as, poisonous, poisonousness; turbid, turbidness; lovely, loveliness; from nije, Saxon.

2. The termination of many names of places where there is a headland or promontory; from nepe, Saxon; a nose of land, or headland.

NEST.† n. s. [neft, Saxon; the past participle of nejan, to visit frequently, to haunt. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 375. Su. Goth. naeste.]

1. The bed formed by the bird for incubation and feeding her young.

If a bird's nest chance to be before there in the way, thou shalt not take the dam with the young.

Deut. xxii. 6.

Th' example of the heavenly lark,

Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark,
Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground.

Cowley.

2. Any place where animals are produced.

Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted.

Bentley.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense: as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Not farre away, not meete for any guest,
They spide a little cottage, like some poor man's nest. Spenser, F. Q.

Come from that nest Shakspeare.

Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep.

4. A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither, for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

5. Boxes or drawers; little pockets or repositories.

To NEST.† v. n. [from the noun.] To build nests.

This poor dove, being driven thence away by that horrible northern wind, which razed at length the dove-house and the city, did she not nest, and as it were hide her head, in secret holes?

Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587,) p. 279.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nested within his leaves. Howell, Voc. For.

NESTEGG. n. s. [nest and egg.] An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for shew,

Like nesteggs, to make children lay. Hudibras.

To NESTLE.† v. n. [neſtlan, Saxon.] To settle; to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there nestle till succours came. Bacon.

A cock got into a stable was nestling in the straw among the horses. L'Strange.

The king's fisher wots commonly by the waterside, and nestles in hollow banks. L'Strange.

Fluttering there, they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own. Dryden.
The floor is strowed with several plants, amongst which the snails nestle all the winter. Addison on Italy.

Mark where the shy directors creep,
Nor to the shore approach too nigh;
The monsters nestle in the deep,
To seize you in their passing by. Swift, Miscel.

To NESTLE. v. a.

1. To house, as in a nest.

Poor heart!

That labour'st yet to nestle thee,
Thou think'st by hov'ring here to get a part,
In a forbidden or forbidding tree. Donne.

Cupid found a downy bed,
And nestled in his little head. Prior.

2. To cherish, as a bird her young.

This Itacus, so highly is endear'd

To this Minerva, that her hand is ever in his deeds:

She, like his mother, nestles him.

Chapman, Iliad.

NESTLING.† n. s. [neſtling, Saxon.]

1. A young bird in the nest: in some parts, the smallest bird of the nest, and called also nestlecock.

Second brothers, and poor nestlings.

B. Hall, Sat. ii. 2.

The chief object of children, looking after nests is the eggs, or nestlings, not the bird which lays them, Barrington, Ess. 4.

2. A receptacle; a nest. Not in use.

They [the physicians] inquire not of the diversities of the parts, the secretaries of the passages, and the seats or nestlings of the humours.

Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 2.

NESTLING. adj.* Newly hatched; newly deposited in the nest.

I have taken four young ones from a hen skylark, and placed in their room five nestling nightingales, as well as five wrens, the greater part of which were reared by the foster-parent.

Barrington, Ess. 4.

NET.† n. s. [nati, Goth. net, Icel. net, Sax. from the Germ. neten, suere. Serenius.]

1. A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net, nor lime,
The pitfall nor the gin. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Impatience intangles us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble.
Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

2. Any thing made with interstitial vacuities.

He made nets of chequered work for the chapters, upon the top of the pillars.

1 Kings, vii. 17.

The vegetative tribes,
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves.

Thomson.

To NET. v. n.* [from the noun.] To knit a net; to knot.

Ideal visits I often pay you, see you posting round your sylvan walks or sitting netting in your parlour, and thinking of your absent friends.

A. Seward, (Lett. 1789,) ii. 314.

NET. adj.* [net, French; netto, Ital.]

1. Pure; clear; genuine.

Her breast all naked, as nett ivory

Without adorne of gold or silver bright.

Wherewith the craftsman wouns its beautify,

Of her dew honour was despoyled quight.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 20.

2. Clear; denoting the total of a receipt of salary or income after certain deductions.

The net revenues of the crown, at the abdication of K. James, without any tax on land, &c. amounted to somewhat more than two millions.

Bolingbroke on Parties, Lett. 18.

3. Clear; denoting the weight of any commodity, after allowances have been made for tare and tret.

To NET. v. a.* [from the adjective.] To bring as clear produce.

NETHER.† adj. [neðer, Saxon; neder, Dutch. It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we say the nether part, but never say this part is nether than that, nor is any positive in use, though it seems comprised in the word beneath. Nether is not now much in use.]

1. Lower; not upper.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge.

Deut. xxiv. 6.

In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and nether great lip.

Peacham.

This odious offspring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew Transform'd.

Milton, P. L.

The upper part whereof was whey,

The nether, orange mix'd with grey. Hudibras.

A beauteous maid above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her nether parts.

Roscommon.

As if great Atlas from his height
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight,
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall
Should gape immense, and rushing down o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The first sublime in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the nether world. Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.

This shews you are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can revenge. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Numberless were those bad angels, seen
Hovering on wing under the cope of hell,
'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires.

Milton, P. L.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No less desire

To found this nether empire, which might rise;
In emulation opposite to heaven. Milton, P. L.

The gods with hate beheld the nether sky,
The ghosts repine. Dryden, Æn.

NE'THERMOST. adj. [superl. of nether.] Lowest.

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell.

Psalms lxxxvi. 13.

Undaunted to meet there whatever power,

Or spirit of the nethermost abyss.

Might in that noise reside. Milton, P. L.

All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very nethermost hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself would be too good for him.

South.

Heracitus tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex nethermost.

Keil against Burnet.

NE'TTING. n. s. A reticulated piece of work.

NE'TTLE.† n. s. [neſel, Sax. naella, Icel. to prick, to sting. Serenius.] A stinging herb well known.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle.

Shakspeare.

Some so like to thorns and nettles live,
That none from them can, when they perish, grieve.

Waller.

To NE'TTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate; to provoke.

The princes were so nettled at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself.

L'Strange.

Although at every part of the Apostle's discourse some of them might be uneasy and nettled, yet a moderate silence and attention was still observed.

Bentley.

NE'TTLER. n. s.* [from nettle.] One who provokes; that which stings or irritates.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

These are the nettlers, these are the blabbing books that tell, though not half your fellows' feats.

Milton, Animad. Rem. Defence.

NE'TWORK. n. s. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the intersections.

Nor any skill'd in workmanship emboss'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fingering fine;
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

A large cavity in the sinciput was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network. Addison, Spect.

Whoever contemplates with becoming attention this curious and wonderful network of veins, must be transported with admiration. Blackmore.

NE'VER.† adv. [ne ever, næppe, Sax. ne æppe, not ever; Goth. niawi, i. e. ne and aiw.]

1. At no time.

Never, alas, the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame. Cowley.
Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.
Death still draws nearer, never seeming near. Pope.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think, with justice, of solecism; as, he is mistaken though never so wise. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any: such, however, is the common use of the word among the best authors. Dr. Johnson. — "Be the distance never so remote:" Some have thought this mode of expression incongruous and ungrammatical: but never is the same as not ever; and the sentence is to be filled up thus: "be the distance not [near, but] ever so remote." Addison, Spect. No. 590. This, then, is one of those elliptical forms which are to be explained "by observing nicely the posture of the mind in discoursing," (to use Mr. Locke's words,) and not by attending merely to the obvious sense of the terms employed. For, in discoursing, we love to contract our ideas, though the opposition be not always, or but imperfectly expressed. Never so remote, if we regard this posture of the mind, is, therefore, as intelligible, and as proper as ever so remote; and, till of late, was more commonly used. We now say ever so remote, more clearly indeed, but with something less force: for never so implies an effort, or vehemence in asserting which ever so has not. However as perspicuity is the main object of grammar, I acknowledge it to be a good general rule to avoid not only real but seeming incongruities of speech. Bp. Hurd.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say. Gen. xxxiv. 12.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body, instantly make a transcurfion throughout the whole body. Bacon.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant, within a mile of the town. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Death may be sudden to him, though it comes by never so slow degrees. Wh. Duty of Man.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light, and never so near him. Atterbury.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second. Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whosoever has a friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective. Not any; but in reality it is not ever.

He answered him to never a word, insomuch that the governour marvelled. St. Matt. xxvii. 14.
There would be never a plain text. Atterbury, Serm. iii.

5. It is much used in composition; as, never-ending, having no end; of which some examples are subjoined.

Nature assureth us, by never-failing experience, and reason by infallible demonstration, that our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

But a smooth and stedfast mind,
Gentle thoughts and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combin'd,
Kindle never-dying fires. Carew.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude. Milton, Lycidas.

Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace. Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flowers,
Revive and raise themselves with moderate showers;
But over-charg'd with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist. Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deserv'd and gain'd their never-fading bays. Roscommon.

Not Thracian Orpheus should transmute my lays,
Nor Linus crown'd with never-fading bays. Dryden.

Leucippus, with his never-erring dart. Dryden.
Farewell, ye never-opening gates. Dryden.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find;
Meet stores of cold so greedily pursued,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blackmore.

Norton hung down his never-blushing head,
And all was hush'd, as folly's self lay dead. Pope.

What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Thy busy never-meaning face,
Thy screw'd-up front, thy state grimace. Swift.

NEVERTHE'LESS. adv. [never the less.]

Notwithstanding that.
They plead that even such ceremonies of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itself agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheless to be abolished. Hooker.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ships ready to depart; nevertheless the admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them. Bacon.

Creation must needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

NEU'ROLOGY. n. s. [νεῦρον and λόγος.] A description of the nerves.

NEU'ROSPAST.* n. s. [neurospaston, Latin, νευροσπαστή, Greek; nervis seu fidiculis

traho, moveo.] A puppet; a figure put in motion.

That outward form is but a neurospast;
The soul it is, that, on her subtle ray
That she shoots forth, the limbs of moving beast
Doth stretch strait forth.

More, Immortal. of the Soul, (1647.) i. ii. 34.

NEU'ROTOMY. n. s. [νεῦρον and τέμνω.] The anatomy of the nerves.

NEUTER. adj. [neuter, Latin; neutre, French.]

1. Indifferent; not engaged on either side.

The general division of the British nation is into Whigs and Tories; there being very few, if any, who stand neuter in the dispute, without ranging themselves under one of these denominations. Addison, Freeholder.

2. [In grammar.] A noun that implies no sex.

The adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make it grammar. Dryden.

A verb neuter is that which signifies neither action nor passion; but some state or condition of being; as, sedeo, I sit. Clarke, Latin Grammar.

NEUTER.† n. s. One indifferent and unengaged.

He is an odious neuter, a lukewarm Laodicean. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 81.

The learned heathens may be looked upon as neuters in the matter, when all these prophecies were new to them, and their education had left the interpretation of them indifferent. Addison on the Christian Religion.

NEUTRAL. adj. [neutral, French.]

1. Indifferent; not acting; not engaged on either side.

Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate, and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man. Shakespeare.

He no sooner heard that king Henry was settled by his victory, but forthwith he sent ambassadors unto him, to pray that he would stand neutral. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The allies may be supplied for money, from Denmark and other neutral states. Addison on the War.

2. Indifferent; neither good nor bad.

Some things good, and some things ill do seem,
And neutral some, in her fantastick eye. Davies.

3. Neither acid nor alkaline.

Salts which are neither acid nor alkaline, are called neutral. Arbuthnot.

NEUTRAL. n. s. One who does not act nor engage on either side.

The treacherous who have misled others, and the neutrals and the false-hearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, are to be noted. Bacon.

NEUTRALIST.* n. s. [from neutral.] An indifferent or careless being; one who is on neither side. Bullockar, (ed. 1656.)

Intrusting of the militia and navy in the hands of neutralists, unfaithful and disaffected persons. Pet. of the City of London to the H. of Com. (1648.) p. 6.

NEUTRALITY.† n. s. [neutralité, French.]

1. A state of indifference; of neither friendship nor hostility.

His majesty's clearness in the beginning of these motions: his neutrality in the progress thereof. Wotton, Propos. (in 1620.) Rem. p. 503.

Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of public danger, desert the interest of their fellow-subjects. Addison.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind,
These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth, Ovid.

All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the publick is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift.

2. A state between good and evil.

There is no health; physicians say, that we
At best enjoy but a neutrality. Donne.

3. The state of being of the neuter gender.

Jesus answered, "I and my Father are one," where the plurality of the verb, and the neutrality of the noun, with the distinction of their persons, speak a perfect identity of their essence.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

To NEUTRALIZE* v. a. [from neutral.]

1. To render indifferently; to engage on neither side.

2. [In agriculture.] To make neutral.

These [ill and vitriolic soils] necessarily require the calcareous ingredient to neutralise their peccant acid. Kirwan on Manures, p. 90.

NEUTRALLY. adv. [from neutral.] Indifferently; on neither part.

NEW† adj. [niuja, Goth. neop, Saxon, newyd, Welsh; neu, Germ. neuf, Fr.]

1. Not old; fresh; lately produced, made or had; novel. New is used of things, and young of persons.

Shoon full moist and newe.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

— That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one. Shaksp. Macbeth.

2. Not being before.

Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.

3. Modern; of the present time.

Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new.

Temple, Miscell.

4. Different from the former.

Steadfastly purposing to lead a new life.

Comm. Prayer.

5. Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.

There names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, nor subject to decays,
Spread and grow brighter with the length of days.

Pope.

6. Not habituated; not familiar.

Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of hereticks, and such as privily will instil their poison into new minds. Hooker.

Seiz'd with wonder and delight,
Gaz'd all around me, new to the transporting sight. Dryden.

Twelve mules, a strong laborious race,
New to the plough, unpractic'd in the trace.

Pope.

7. Renovated; repaired, so as to recover the first state.

Men, after long emaciating diets, wax plump, fat, and almost new. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

8. Fresh after any thing.

Nor dare we trust so soft a messenger,
New from her sickness to that northern air.

Dryden.

9. Not of ancient extraction.

A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outshines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.

NEW. adv. This is, I think, only used in composition for newly, which the following examples may explain.

As soon as she had written them, a new swarm of thoughts stinging her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney.

God hath not then left this to chuse that, neither would reject that to chuse this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forciling up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest.

Spenser.

Your master's lines
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakespeare.

Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

Take her or leave her? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Lest by a multitude
The new-head'd wound of malice should break out. Shakespeare.

Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I a gasping, new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

He saw heaven blossom with a new-born light,
On which, as on a glorious stranger gaz'd
The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright
The way to Beth'lem, and as boldly blaz'd;
Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night.

Crashaw.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day;
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night,
When a ruddy storm, whose scowl
Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night
To blot the newly blossom'd light. Crashaw.

Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together
sow'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new-come shame,
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean.

Milton, P. L.

Their father's state,
And new-entrusted sceptre. Milton, Comus.
The new-created world, which fame in heaven
Long had foretold. Milton, P. L.

His evil
Thou usest, and from thence creat'st more good,
Witness this new-made world, another heav'n.

Milton, P. L.

All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair
As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter hair;

All in that new-blown age which does inspire
Warmth in themselves, in their beholders fire.

Cowley.

If it could, yet that it should always run them into such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new-fashioned one, such as was never seen before, no reason can be assigned or imagined. Ray on the Creation.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition, there being several additional chapters in it, and several new- moulded. Burnet, Theology.

New-found lands accrue to the prince whose subject makes the first discovery. Burnet, Theology.

Let this be nature's frailty, or her fate,
Or Isgrim's counsel, her new-chosen mate.

Dryden.

Shewn nll at once you dazzled so our eyes,
As new-born Pallas did the gods surprise;
When springing forth from Jove's new-closing wound,
She struck the warlike spear into the ground.

Dryden.

A bird new-made about the banks she plies,
Not far from shore, and short excursions tries. Dryden.

Our house has sent to-day
To insure our new-built vessel, call'd a play. Dryden.

Then curds and cream,
And new-laid eggs, which Baucis' busy care
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

When pleading Matho, born abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashion'd chair. Dryden.

A new-form'd faction does your power oppose,
The fight's confus'd, and all who met were foes. Dryden.

If thou ken'st from far
Among the Pleiads a new-kindled star;
If any sparkles than the rest more bright,
'Tis she that shines in that propitious light. Dryden.

If we consider new-born children, we shall have little reason to think that they bring many ideas into the world with them. Locke.

Drummers with vellum-thunder shake the pile,
To greet the new-made bride. Gay, Trivia.
Ah Blouzelind! I love thee more by half,
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

The proctor exhibits his proxy from the dean and chapter, and presents the new-elected bishop to the vicar-general. Ayliffe.

The new-fall'n young here bleating for their dams,
The larger here, and there the lesser lambs. Pope.
Learn all the new-fashion words and oaths. Swift.

To NEW* v. a. [neopian, Saxon.] To make new; to renew. Obsolete.

The presents every day ben newed.

Let the stairs to the upper rooms be upon a fair
open newel, and finely railed in. Bacon.

2. A new thing; novelty.

He was so enamoured with the newel,
That thought he deemed dear for the jewel.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

NEWFANGLE* adj. [new and fangle.]

Some have pretended that nova evangelia, "new evangels," gave rise to this word; it being much used, they say, about the time that the gossellers, or reformers, began to flourish in England. But it was in use long before. Fangle was probably a cant term, corrupted from finigo, to form, to fashion; fingle, fangle.] Desirous of new things.

Flesh is so newefangle. Chaucer, Manc. Tale.

NEWFANGLE*† n. s. One desirous of NEWFANGLIST. } novelty. In the Cobler's Prophecie, 1594, Niceness is Venus's maid, and Newfangle her man.

Learned men have ever resisted the private spirits of these newfanglists, or contentious and quarrelous men.

Tooker, Fabr. of the Ch. (1504,) p. 90.

To NEWFANGLE* v. a. [from the adjective.] To change by introducing novelties.

To controul and newfangle the Scripture.

Milton, Of Prelat. Episcopacy.

NEWFA'NGLED.† adj. [from newfangle.] Formed with vain or foolish love of novelty; desirous of novelty.

At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
Than wish a snow in May's newfangled shows;
But like of each thing, that in season grows.

Shakspeare.
Have no fellowship with newfangled teachers.

1 Tim. vi. Arg. of the Chapter.

Those charities are not newfangled devices of yesterday, but are most of them as old as the reformation.

Atterbury.

NEWFA'NGLEDNESS. } n. s. [from new-
NEWFA'NGLENESS. } fangled.] Vain and foolish love of novelty.

So to newfangledness both of manner, apparel, and each thing else, by the custom of self-guilty evil, glad to change though often for a worse. Sidney.
Yet he them in newfangledness did pass.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in newfangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter. Carew.

NE'WING. n. s. [from new.] Yest or barm.

Ainsworth.

NE'WISH.* adj. [from new.] As if lately made.

It drinketh not newish at all.

Dacon, Nat. Hist.

NE'WLY.† adv. [implying, from new.]

1. Freshly; lately.

Her breath indeed those hands have newly stopp'd. Shakspeare.

They newly learned by the king's example, that retainers do not interrupt the conveying of title to the crown. Bacon.

Her lips were red, and one was thin,
Compar'd to that was next her chin;

Some bee had stung it newly. Suckling.

He rubb'd it o'er with newly gather'd mint. Dryden.

2. In a manner different from the former.

Such is the power of that sweet passion,
That it all sordid baseness doth repel,
And the refind mind doth newly fashion
Into a fairer form. Spenser, Hymn on Love.

3. In a manner not existing before.

NE'WNESS.† n. s. [implying, Saxon, from new.]

1. Freshness; lateness; recentness; state of being lately produced.

Their stories, if they had been preserved, and what else was performed in that newness of the world, there could nothing of more delight have been left to posterity. Raleigh.

In these disturbances,
And newness of a wavering government,
To avenge them of their former grievances. Daniel.

When Horace writ his satires, the monarchy of his Cæsar was in its newness, and the government but just made easy to his conquered people. Dryden, Juv.

2. Novelty; unacquaintance.

Words borrowed of antiquity do lend majesty to style; they have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win to themselves a kind of grace like newness. B. Jonson.

Newness in great matters, was a worthy entertainment for a mind; it was an high taste, fit for the relish. South.

3. Something lately produced.

There are some newnesses of English, translated from the beauties of modern tongues, as well as from the elegances of the Latin; and here and there some old words are sprinkled, which, for their significance and sound, deserved not to be antiquated. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

4. Innovation; late change.

Away, my friends, new fight;
And happy newness that intends old right.

Shakspeare.

5. Want of practice.

His device was to come without any device, all in white like a new knight, but so new as his newness shamed most of the others long exercise. Sidney.

6. Difference from the former manner.

Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. Rom. vi. 4.

NEWS. n. s. without the singular, unless it be considered as singular; Milton has joined it with a singular verb. [from new; nouvelles, French.]

1. Fresh account of any thing.

As he was ready to be greatly advanced for some noble pieces of service which he did, he heard news of me. Sidney.

When Rhea heard these news, she fled from her husband to her brother Saturn. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Evil news rides fast, while good news baits. Milton.

With such amazement as weak mothers use,
And frantick gesture, he receives the news. Waller.

We talk in ladies' chambers love and news. Cowley.

Now the books, and now the bells,

And now our act the preacher tells,

To edify the people;

All our divinity is news,

And we have made of equal use

The pulpit and the steeple. Denham.

The amazing news of Charles at once was spread,

At once the general voice declared

Our gracious prince was dead. Dryden.

They have news-gatherers and intelligencers distributed into their several walks, who bring in their respective quotas, and make them acquainted with the discourse of the whole kingdom. Spectator.

2. Something not heard before.

It is no news for the weak and poor to be a prey to the strong and rich. L'Estrange.

3. Papers which give an account of the transactions of the present times.

Their papers, filled with a different party spirit, divide the people into different sentiments, who generally consider rather the principles than the truth of the news-writer. Addison.

Advertise both in every news-paper; and let it not be your fault or mine, if our countrymen will not take warning. Swift.

NEWS-MONGER. n. s. [news and monger.]

One that deals in news; one whose employment it is to hear and to tell news.
Many tales devil'd,

Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,
By smiling pick-thanks and base news-mongers. Shakspeare.

This was come as a judgement upon him for laying aside his father's will, and turning stock-jobber, news-monger, and busy body, meddling with other people's affairs. Arbutnot.

NE'WSPAPER.* See the third sense of NEWS.

NEWT.† n. s. [epete, Saxon. Newt is supposed by Skinner to be contracted from an ewt. Ben Jonson writes it neuft; and thus we trace the contraction, nefet, neufi, neut, or newt. "Hath not a snail, a spider, yea, a neuft been found there?" B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.] Eft; small lizard: they are supposed to be appropriated some to the land, and some to the water: they are harmless.

O thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue,
The gilded newt, and cyless venom'd worm. Shakspeare.

News and blind worms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen.

Shakspeare, Mid. N. Dream.

Such humidity is observed in newts and water-lizards, especially if their skins be perforated or pricked. Brown.

NEW-YEAR'S-GIFT. n. s. [new, year, and gift.] Present made on the first day of the year.

If I be served such a trick, I'll have my brains taken out and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new-year's-gift. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

When he sat on the throne distributing new-years-gifts, he had his altar of incense by him, that before they received gifts they might cast a little incense into the fire; which all good christians refused to do. Stillingfleet.

NE'XIBLE.* adj. [nexibilis, Latin.] That may be knit together. Not in use. Cockeram.

NEXT. adj. [next, Saxon, by a colloquial change from nehre or nyhre, the superlative of neh or nyh; neest, Scottish.]

1. Nearest in place; immediately succeeding in order.

Want suppleth itself of what is next, and many times the next way. Bacon.

The queen already sat

High on a golden bed; her princely guest

Was next her side, in order sat the rest. Dryden.

The next in place and punishment were they,

Who prodigally throw their souls away. Dryden.

2. Nearest in time.

The good man warn'd us from his text,
That none could tell whose turn should be the next. Gay.

3. Nearest in any gradation.

If the king himself had staid at London, or, which had been the next best, kept his court at York, and sent the army on their proper errand, his enemies had been speedily subdued. Clarendon.

O fortunate young man! at least your lays
Are next to his, and claim the second praise. Dryden.

Finite and infinite, being by the mind looked on as modifications of expansion and duration, the next thing to be considered, is, how the mind comes by them. Locke.

That's a difficulty next to impossible. Rome.
There, blest with health, with business unperplexed,

This life we relish, and ensure the next. Young.

NEXT. adv. At the time or turn immediately succeeding.

Th' unwary nymph
Desir'd of Jove, when next he sought her bed,
To grant a certain gift. Addison, Ovid.

NIAS.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson has here given, by way of definition, "simple, silly, foolish," as if the word were an adjective; and then transcribed, from Bailey, "a niash hawk is one taken newly from the nest, and not able to help itself; and hence nisey, a silly person." So far as to taken from the nest, Bailey's account of the hawk is right.] A young hawk; an eyas. See EYAS.
Laugh at, sweet bird, is that the scruple? come, come;
Thou art a niash. B. Jonson, Dev. an. Ass.

NIB. n. s. [neib, Saxon, the face; nebbe, Dutch, the bill.]

1. The bill or neck of a bird. See NEB.
2. The point of any thing, generally of a pen.

A tree called the bejuco, which twines about other trees, with its end hanging downwards, travellers cut the nib off it, and presently a spout of water runs out from it as clear as crystal.

Derham.

N'BBED. adj. [from nib.] Having a nib.
To N'BBLE. † v. a. [from nib, the beak or mouth. Dr. Johnson. — It has been thought allied to the Greek νύβω, vellico; and gnibble, I have observed, is the old orthography of this word. See Barret's Alv. 1580. So Junius cites the Belg. knabbelen, or knibbelen, "quod scituti is frequentativum est a knawen, ita gnibble Anglis est a gnaw."] Dr. Johnson.

1. To bite by little at a time; to eat slowly.

Thy turf mountains, where live gnibbling sheep,
 And fad meads hatch'd with stover them to keep.

Shakespeare.

It is the rose that bleeds, when he
Nibbles his nice phlebotomy.

Cleveland.

Had not he better have born Wat's gnibbling of his plants and roots now, than the huntsman's eating of him out of house and home?

L'Estrange.

Many there are who nibble without leave;
 But none, who are not born to taste, survive.

Granville.

2. To bite as a fish does the bait.

The roving trout
 Greedily sucks in the twining bait,
 And tugs and gnibbles the fallacious meat.

Gay.

To N'BBLE. v. n.

1. To bite at.

As pigeons bill, so wedlock would be gnibbling.

Shakespeare.

They gape at rich revenues which you hold,
 And fain would nibble at your grandame gold.

Dryden.

If you would be gnibbling, here is a hand to stay your stomach.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

This fish plunging himself in mud, and then lifting up his head a little, casts out the string; which the little fishes taking for a worm, and gnibbling at it, he immediately plucks them both in together.

Grew, Mus.

2. To carp at; to find fault with.

Instead of returning a full answer to my book, he manifestly falls a gnibbling at one single passage in it.

Tillotson.

N'BBLE. n. s.* [from the verb.] A word used by anglers, denoting the act of the fish trying the bait, as it were: not immediately swallowing it.

N'BBLER.† n. s. [from gnibble.]

1. One that bites by little at a time.

The tender gnibbler would not touch the bait.

Shakespeare, Passionate Pilgrim.

2. A carper.

You tell me what the wits say of your book. I suppose you mean those identical dunces, who have been at war with sense for these last twenty years, as they were with wit for twenty years before. But these are gnibblers at the outside. I can tell you of a London divine that has gone deeper, and has returned your book in a great rage to the bookseller.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 130.

NICE.† adj. [Goth. hnasquia, soft; hneyc, nerc, Saxon; tender, effeminate, from hneycian, to soften; neische, old Engl. effeminate, Gloss. to Wicliffe; nice, old French, silly, weak, simple.]

1. Accurate in judgement to minute exactness.

VOL. II.

actness; superfluously exact. It is often used to express a culpable delicacy.

Such a man was Argalus, as hardly the nicest eye can find a spot in.

Sidney.

Nor be so nice in taste myself to know,
 If what I swallow be a thrush or no.

Dryden, Pers.

Thus critics, of less judgement than caprice,
 Curious, not knowing, not exact, but nice,
 Form short ideas, and offend in arts
 As most in manners, by a love to parts.

Pope.

Our author, happy in a judge so nice,
 Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice.

Pope.

She is so nice and critical in her judgement, so sensible of the smallest error, that the maid is often forced to dress and undress her daughters three or four times a-day.

Law.

2. Delicate; scrupulously and minutely cautious.

Dear love! continue nice and chaste;

For if you yield, you do me wrong;

Let duller wits to love's end haste,

I have enough to woo thee long.

Donne.

Of honour men at first, like women, nice,
 Raise maiden scruples at unpractis'd vice.

Lord Halifax.

Having been compiled by Gratian, in an ignorant age, we ought not to be too nice in examining it.

Baker.

3. Fastidious; squeamish.

God hath here

Varied his bounty so with new delights,

As may compare with heaven; and to taste,

Think not I shall be nice.

Milton, P. L.

4. Easily injured; delicate.

With how much ease is a young muse betray'd?

How nice the reputation of the maid? Roscommon.

5. Formed with minute exactness.

Indulge me but in virtue, my other passions

Shall rise and fall by love's nicest rules.

Addison, Cato.

6. Requiring scrupulous exactness.

Supposing an injury done, it is a nice point to proportion the reparation to the degree of the indignity.

L'Estrange.

My progress in making this nice and troublesome experiment, I have set down more at large.

Newton, Opt.

7. Refined.

A nice and subtle happiness I see

Thou to thyself proposhest, in the choice

Of thy associates, Adam; and wilt taste

No pleasure, though in pleasure solitary.

Milton, P. L.

8. Having lucky hits: as in the following passage of Shakespeare; a signification not in use, Dr. Johnson says. It is here used by Shakespeare rather in the sense of trifling, toying, wanton; and so in the Mirror for Magistrates.

When my hours

Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives

Of me for jests.

Shakespeare, Ant. & Cleop.

Shore's wife was my nice cheat,

The holy whore, and eke the wily peat.

Mir. for Mag. p. 412.

9. Foolish; weak; effeminate.

A nice heart! fie for shame!

A coward heart, of love unlured,

Whereof art thou so sore afeared?

Cower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

Men wax nice and effeminate. Barret, Alv. (1580.)

10. Trivial; unimportant.

The letter was not nice, but full of charge,

Of dear import.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

11. Delicious.

Look, how nice he makes it! Barret, Alv. (1580.)

12. Handsome; pleasing: a colloquial expression in several parts of England.

13. To make NICE. To be scrupulous: perhaps from faire le delicat.

He that stands upon a slippery place,
 Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up.

Shakespeare, K. John.

N'CELY. adv. [from nice.]

1. Accurately; minutely; scrupulously.

Knaves in this plainness

Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,

Than twenty silly ducking observants,
 That stretch their duties *nice*ly.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

What mean those ladies which, as tho'

They were to take a clock to pieces, go

So *nice*ly about the bride?

Donne.

He ought to study the grammar of his own tongue, that he may understand his own country-speech *nice*ly, and speak it properly.

Locke.

The next thing of which the doses ought to be *nice*ly determined, are opiates. Arbutnot on Coins.

At *nice*ly carving, shew thy wit;

But ne'er presume to eat a bit.

Swift, Miscell.

2. Delicately.

The inconveniences attending the best of governments, we quickly feel, and are *nice*ly sensible of the share that we bear in them.

Atterbury.

*NICE'NE Creed. The Creed drawn up, for the most part, by the first general counsel of Nice in the year 325; enlarged in the year 381.

That other confession of faith, which we call the Nicene creed.

Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 42.

N'CE'NESS. n. s. [from nice.]

1. Accuracy; minute exactness.

Where's now that labour'd *nice*ness in thy dress,
 And all those arts that did the spark express?

Dryden.

2. Superfluous delicacy or exactness.

A strange *nice*ness were it in me to refrain that from the ears of a person representing so much worthiness, which I am glad even to rocks and woods to utter.

Sidney.

Only some little boats, from Gaul that did her feed

With trifles, which she took for *nice*ness more than need.

Drayton.

Unlike the *nice*ness of our modern dames,
 Affected nymphs, with new affected names.

Dryden.

Nor place them where

Roast crabs offend the *nice*ness of their nose.

Dryden.

N'CE'Y. n. s. [from nice.]

1. Minute accuracy of thought.

Nor was this *nice*ty of his judgement confined only to literature, but was the same in all other parts of art.

Prior.

2. Accurate performance, or observance.

As for the workmanship of the old Roman pillars, the ancients have not kept to the *nice*ty of proportion and the rules of art so much as the moderns.

Addison on Italy.

3. Fastidious delicacy; squeamishness.

He them with speeches meet

Does far intreat; no courting *nice*ty,

But simple true, and eke unfeigned sweet.

Spenser.

No love doth loathe disdainful *nice*ty.

Spenser.

4. Minute observation; punctilious discrimination; subtily.

If reputation attend these conquests, which depend on the fineness and *nice*ties of words, it is no wonder if the wit of men so employed, should perplex and subtilize the signification of sounds.

Locke.

His conclusions are not built upon any *nice*ties, or solitary and uncommon appearances, but on the most simple and obvious circumstances of these terrestrial bodies.

Woodward.

5. Delicate management; cautious treatment.

- Love such nicety requires,
One blast will put out all his fires. Swift.
6. Effeminate softness.
7. Niceties, in the plural, is generally applied to dainties or delicacies in eating.
NICHAR. n. s. A plant. Miller.
NICHE. n. s. [French.] A hollow in which a statue may be placed.

Niches, containing figures of white stone or marble, should not be coloured in their concavity too black. Watson.

They not from temples, nor from gods refrain,
But the poor lares from the niches seize,
If they be little images that please. Dryden.

On the south a long majestic race
Of Egypt's priests, the gilded niches grace. Pope.
The heirs to titles and large estates are well enough qualified to read pamphlets against religion and high flying; whereby they fill their niches, and carry themselves through the world with that dignity which best becomes a senator and a squire. Swift, Miscell.

NICK.† n. s. [nicke, Teutonic, the twinkling of an eye.]

1. Exact point of time at which there is necessity or convenience.

That great instrument of state suffered the fatal thread to be spun out to that length for some politic respects, and then to cut it off in the very nick. Howell, Voc. For.

What in our watches that in us is found,
So to the height and nick we up be wound,
No matter by what hand or trick. Suckling.

That trick,
Had it come in the nick,
Had touch'd us to the quick. Denham.

Though dame fortune seem to smile,
And leer upon him for a while;
She'll after shew him in the nick
Of all his glories a dog trick. Hudibras.

And some with symbols, signs and tricks,
Engraved in planetary nicks,
With their own influences will fetch them
Down from their orbs, arrest and catch them. Hudibras.

This nick of time is the critical occasion for the gaining of a point. L'Estrange.

2. A notch cut in any thing. [Corrupted from nock or notch.]

Though but a stick with a nick.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622.) p. 23.

3. A score; a reckoning: from reckonings kept anciently upon tallies, or notched sticks.

Launce, his man, told me, he lov'd her art of all nick. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

4. A winning throw. [niche, Fr. a ludicrous trick.]

Come, seven's the main,
Cries Ganymede; the usual trick
Seven, slur a six, eleven a nick. Prior.

NICK.* n. s. An evil spirit of the waters, in the northern mythology of elder times; and in later transferred to the devil himself, by the English, with the addition of old. Butler, Spence, and others have pretended that Old Nick is derived from Nicholas Machiavel, the Florentine politician of infamous memory; and that "as cunning or as wicked as Old Nick," first referring to his character, afterwards was applied to the father of evil. But the evil being was called Old Nick long before Machiavel was born. Nocca or Nicken was a deity of the waters, which the ancient Danes and Germans worshipped; whom they represented as appearing in a monstrous shape, presaging shipwreck and death, and strangling persons that were drowning. See Keyser's Antiq. Septentr. p. 261. where Keyser suggests the Germ. neigen, signifying, as the Latin necare, to kill; and also mentions, as cited in a Belg. Gall. Dictionary, neccer, a spirit of the waters, and neccer, to kill. "Neccus, numen malignum aquarium." Verelius, Epit. Hist. Su. Goth. p. 13. "Nikur, bellua aquatica." Dick. Island. Hickeys.

Mr. Warburton is of opinion, that this is a blunder of the editors, to suppose the devil was called Old Nick, from Nick Machiavel, who lived in the sixteenth century; whereas they could not but know, that our English writers, before Machiavel's time, used the word Old Nick very commonly to signify the devil; and that it came from our Saxon ancestors, who called him old Nicka. The Goths, I will add, called the devil Nidlog, and the Danes the god of the sea Nocka, and some Nicken. Sheringham de Gentis Angl. Orig. cap. xiv. Dr. Grey, Notes on Hudibras.

To NICK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hit; to touch luckily; to perform by some slight artifice used at the lucky moment.

Is not the winding up of witness
A *nick*ing more than half the bus'ness? Hudibras.
The just season of doing things must be nick'd, and all accidents improved. L'Estrange.

Take any passion of the soul of man, while it is predominant and afloat, and just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may certainly over-rule it. South, Serms. ii. 333.

2. To cut in nicks or notches.

His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;

And ever as it blaz'd they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair.
My master preaches patience, and the while
His man with scissars nicks him like a fool. Shakspeare.
Breaks watchmen's heads, and chairmen's glasses,

And thence proceeds to *nick*ing sashes. Prior.

3. To suit, as tallies cut in nicks.

Words, *nick*ing and resembling one another, are applicable to different significations.

Camden, Rem. Allusions.

4. To defeat or cozen, as at dice; to disappoint by some trick or unexpected turn.

Why should he follow you?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd his captainship at such a point. Shakspeare.

NICKEL.* n. s. A metal, first described by Mr. Cronstadt in the Swedish Memoirs for the years 1751 and 1754. Chambers. It resembles silver in appearance; is softer than iron; and like iron is malleable, both hot and cold.

NICKER.* n. s. [from nick.] One who watches an opportunity to pilfer, or practise some knavish artifice. A low word.

Did not Pythagoras stop a company of drunken bullies from storming a civil house, by changing the strain of the pipe to the sober spondeus? And yet your modern musicians want art to defend their windows from common nickers.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

NICKNAME. n. s. [nom de nique, French.] A name given in scoff or contempt; a term of derision; an opprobrious or contemptuous appellation.

The time was when men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. B. Jonson.

My mortal enemy hath not only falsely surmised me to be a feigned person, giving me nicknames, but also hath offered large sums of money to corrupt the princes with whom I have been retained. Bacon, Hen. VII.

So long as her tongue was at liberty, there was not a word got from her, but the same nickname in derision. L'Estrange.

To NICKNAME. v. a. To call by an opprobrious appellation.

You nickname virtue vice;
For virtue's office never breaks men's troth. Shakspeare.

Less seem these facts which treasours nickname force,

Than such a fear'd ability for more. Denham.

NICOTIAN.* n. s. [French.] Tobacco; first sent into France by Nicot, the maker of the great French dictionary, in the year 1560, when he was ambassador leger in Portugal. Cotgrave, Bullokar, and Sherwood. Not now in use. Your Nicotian is good too.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

NICOTIAN.* adj. Denoting tobacco.

This gourmand sacrifices whole hecatombs to his paunch, and whiffs himself away in Nicotian incense to the idol of his vain intemperance.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

To NICTATE. v. a. [nicto, Latin.] To wink.

There are several parts peculiar to brutes, which are wanting in man; as the seventh or suspensory muscle of the eye, the nictating membrane, and the strong aponeuroses on the sides of the neck. Ray.

NICTATION.* n. s. [nictatio, Latin.] A twinkling of the eye. Cockeram.

NICTITATING Membrane.* In anatomy, a thin membrane which covers the eyes of several creatures; defending them without a total obstruction of vision.

The observation may be repeated of the muscle which draws the nictitating membrane over the eye. Its office is in the front of the eye; but its body is lodged in the back part of the globe, where it lies safe, and where it incumbers nothing. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 9.

NIDE. n. s. [nidus, Lat.] A brood: as a nide of pheasants.

NIDGET.† n. s. [corrupted from nothing or niding; the opprobrious term with which the man was anciently branded who refused to come to the royal standard in times of exigency. Dr. Johnson. — In colloquial language a nidget is a trifler; and so the old Fr. nigreur, which Cotgrave renders "a fop, a nidget, a trifler;" and we had formerly the substantive nidgeries for fooleries.] A coward; a dastard.

There was one true English word of as great, if not greater force than them all, now out of all use, — it signifieth no more than abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Camden, Rem.

NIDIFICATION. n. s. [nidificatio, Latin.] The act of building nests.

That place, and that method of nidification, doth abundantly answer the creature's occasions. Derham.

NÍDING.† n. s. [níðing, Sax.; niding, Su. Goth. a worthless person; from níð, villainess.] A coward; a dastard; a base fellow.

There was one true English word of as great, if not greater force than them all: — it is niding. For when there was a dangerous rebellion against king William Rufus, and Rochester castle, then the most important and strongest fort of this realm, was stoutly kept against him; after that he had but proclaimed that his subjects should repair thither to his camp, upon no other penalty, but that whoever refused to come should be reputed a niding; they swarmed to him immediately from all sides.

Camden, Rem.

He is worthy to be called a niding, one, the pulse of whose soul beats but faintly towards heaven, as having taken but weak impressions of the image of his Maker, who will not run and reach his hand to bear up his temple.

Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 229.

NÍDOUR.* n. s. [nidor, Latin; nideur, French.] Scent; savour.

When the flesh-pots reek, and the uncovered dishes send forth a nidor and hungry smells.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. p. 211.

And again, οι νεφελαι εχουσιν δαίμονες — The material demons do strangely gluttonize upon the nidours and blood of sacrifices.

Hallywell, Melampus. (1681), p. 102.

NÍDOROUS. adj. [nidoreux, from nidor, Lat.] Resembling the smell or taste of roasted fat.

Incense and nidrous smells, such as of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of contristation of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them.

Bacon.

The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are eructations with the taste of the aliment, acid, nidorose, or fetid, resembling the taste of rotten eggs.

Arbutnot.

NÍDOROSITY. n. s. [from nidorous.] Eructation with the taste of undigested roast-meat.

The cure of this nidorosity is, by vomiting and purging.

Flayer on the Humours.

TO NÍDULATE.* v. n. [nidulor, Lat.] To build a nest. Not in use. Cockeram.

NÍDULATION. n. s. [nidulor, Lat.] The time of remaining in the nest.

The ground of this popular practice might be the common opinion concerning the virtue prognostick of these birds; as also, the natural regard they have unto the winds, and they unto them again; more especially remarking in the time of their nidulation, and bringing forth their young.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

NIECE. n. s. [niece, niecepe, French; neptis, Latin.] The daughter of a brother or sister.

My niece Plantagenet,

Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

While he thus his niece bestows,

About our isle he builds a wall.

Waller.

NÍFLE.* n. s. [nifle, Norm. Fr. a thing of no value.] A trifle. Yet used in Lancashire.

He served them with nifles and with fables.

Chaucer, Somyn. Tale.

NÍGGARD. n. s. [niuggr, Icelandic.] A miser; a curmudgeon; a sordid, avaricious; parsimonious fellow.

Then let thy bed be turned from fine gravel to weeds or mud. Let some unjust niggards make wares to spoil thy beauty.

Sidney.

Be not a niggard of your speech.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Serve him as a grudging master, As a penurious niggard of his wealth.

Milton.

Be niggards of advice on no pretence; For the worst avarice is that of sense.

Pope.

NÍGGARD. adj.

1. Sordid; avaricious; parsimonious.

One she found

With all the gifts of bounteous nature crown'd,
Of gentle blood; but one whose niggard fate
Had set him far below her high estate.

Dryden.

2. Sparing; wary.

Most free of question, but to our demands

Niggard in his reply.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

TO NÍGGARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To stint; to supply sparingly.

The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity;
Which we will niggard with a little rest.

Shakespeare.

NÍGGARDISE.* n. s. [from niggard.] Niggardliness; avarice.

For he, whose daies in wilfull woe are worne,
The grace of his Creator doth despise,
That will not use his gifts for thanklesse niggardise.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 15.

The niggardise and miserable wretchedness of the stewards will not afford it.

Favour, Antig. Tran. over Noveltz, (1619), p. 516.

'Twere pity thou by niggardise should'st thrive,
Whose wealth by waxing craveth to be spent;
For which thou of the wisest shalt be shent,
Like to some rich churl hoarding up his pelf,
Both to wrong others, and to starve himself.

Drayton, Legend of Matilda.

NÍGGARDISH.† adj. [from niggard.] Having some disposition to avarice.

Barret, Alv. (1580).

NÍGGARDLINESS.† n. s. [from niggardly.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.

Oh damnable niggardliness of vain men, that shames the Gospel, and losses Heaven!

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Niggardliness is not good husbandry; nor generosity, profusion.

Addison, Spect.

NÍGGARDLY. adj. [from niggard.]

1. Avaricious; sordidly parsimonious.

Where the owner of the house will be bountiful, it is not for the steward to be niggardly.

Bp. Hall.

Love a penurious god, very niggardly of his opportunities, must be watched like a hard-hearted treasurer.

Dryden.

Why are we so niggardly to stop at one fifth? Why do we not raise it one full moiety, and double our money?

Locke.

Providence, not niggardly but wise,
Here lavishly bestows, and there denies,
That by each other's virtues we may rise.

Granville.

Tiberius was noted for his niggardly temper; he used only to give to his attendants their diet.

Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Sparing; wary.

I know your mind, and I will satisfy it;
neither will I do it like a niggardly answerer,
going no farther than the bounds of the question.

Sidney.

NÍGGARDLY. adv. Sparingly; parsimoniously.

I have long loved her, followed her, ingross'd opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me sight of her.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

NÍGGARDNESS.† n. s. [from niggard.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.

All preparations, both for food and lodging, such as would make one detest niggardness, it is so sluttish a vice.

Sidney.

Against him that is a niggard of his meat the whole city shall murmur; and the testimonies of his niggardness shall not be doubted of.

Ecclesi. xxi. 24.

NÍGGARDSHIP.* n. s. [from niggard.] Avarice. Not in use. Huloet, and Barret.

This was but misery and wretched niggardship
in a man of such honour.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 193.

NÍGGARDY.* n. s. Niggardness. Obsolete.

Disdaineth all covetise,
And hateth all niggardie. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

TO NÍGGLE.* v. n. [probably from the French niger, to trifle, to play the fool. Cotgrave.] To play with; to trifle with.

Take heed, daughter,

You niggle not with your conscience, and religion,
In styling him an innocent, from your fear
And shame to accuse yourself.

Massinger, Emp. of the East.

TO NÍGGLE.* v. a. To mock; to play on contemptuously.

I shall so niggle ye,

Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

NÍGGLE.* n. s. [from niggle.] One who is clever and dextrous. North. Grose.

NIGH.† prep. [neuha, Gath. neah, neh, Sax.; and so nee, in old Engl.] At no great distance from.

They shone

Stars distant, but nigh hand seem'd other worlds.

Milton, P. L.

Nigh this recess, with terror they survey,
Where death maintains his dread tyrannick sway.

Garth.

NIGH. adv.

1. Not at a great distance, either in time or place, or course of events: when it is used of time, it is applied to time future.

He was sick nigh unto death. Phil. ii. 27.

2. To a place near.

Mordecai sent letters both nigh and far.

Esther, ix. 20.

He drew nigh, and to me held,
Ev'n to my mouth, of that same fruit held part
Which he had pluck'd.

Milton, P. L.

I will defer that anxious thought,
And death by fear shall not be nigher brought.

Dryden.

3. Almost; as, he was nigh dead.

NIGH. adj.

1. Near; not distant; not remote: either in time or place.

When the fig-tree — putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh. St. Matt. xxiv. 32.

The loud tumult shews the battle nigh. Prior.

Now too nigh the archangel stood.

Milton, P. L.

2. Allied closely by blood.

He committed the protection of his son Asanes to two of his nigh kinsmen and assured friends.

Knolles.

His uncle or uncle's son, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family, may redeem him.

Lev. xxv. 49.

TO NIGH.† v. n. [nehan, Saxon, to approach.] To approach; to advance; to draw near.

Whanne he had entrid into Capernaum, the centurion neighede to him, and priede him, and said, Lord, my child lieth in the hous syke on the paleys.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. viii.

The joyous time now nigheth fast.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. March.

The dewy night now doth nye,
I hold it best for us home to hie.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

Now day is done, and night is nighing fast.

Spenser, Epithalam.

TO NIGH.* v. a. To come near to; to Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1775.

They shall never nigh it nere. Ibid. ver. 2003.
A knave catchpoll nyghed us nere.

Old Morality of Hycke-Scornor.
But Cloudesey cleft the apple in twaine,
His son he did not nee.

Old Song of Adam Bell, &c. Percy, i. ii. 1.

NIGHLY. adv. [from nigh the adj..] Nearly; within a little.

A man born blind, now adult, was taught by his touch to distinguish between a cube and a sphere of the same metal, and nightly of the same bigness, Locke.

NIGHNESS. † n. s. [from nigh.] Nearness; Proximity.

He could not prevail with her to come back; till about four years after, when the garrison of Oxon was surrendered, (the nighness of her father's house to which having for the most part of the mean time hindered any communication between them,) she of her own accord returned.

A. Wood, Acc. of Milton, Fast, Ox. under 1635.

NIGHT. n. s. [nauts, Gothick; niht, Sax.; nuht, Fr.]

1. The time of darkness; the time from sun-set to sun-rise.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchesse, will be here this night. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

In the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night divide the spoil. Gen. xlix. 27.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And the eternal morrow dawn;
Then the curtains will be drawn;
And they waken with that light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crashaw.
Dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

2. The end of the day of life; death.
She clos'd her eyes in everlasting night. Dryden.

NIGHTBIRD.* n. s. [night and bird.] A bird that flies only in the night.
Lurking nightbirds that fle the lyghte.

Confut. of N. Shaston, (1546), sign. E. iii. b.
He hates to be a nightbird any longer, but boldly flies forth, and looks upon the face of the sun.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.
There be a sort of birds that fly only in the night, called from thence nightbirds and night-ravens, which are afraid of light, as an enemy to spy, to assault, or betray them.

Hammond, Works, iv. 658.

NIGHTBORN.* adj. [night and born.] Produced in darkness.
And in his mercy did his power oppose,
Gainst Errour's night-born children.

Mir. for Mag, p. 784.

My solemn nightborn adoration hear;
Hear, and I'll raise thy spirit from the dust,
While the stars gaze on this enchantment new.
Young, Night Th. 9.

NIGHTBRAWLER. n. s. [night and brawler.] One who raises disturbances in the night.
You unlance your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a nightbrawler. Shakespeare, Othello.

NIGHTCAP. n. s. [night and cap.] A cap worn in bed, or in undress.

The rabblement houted, and clapt their chopt hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps.
Shakespeare, Jul. Ces.

Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the valleys below; and therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night-caps on, they mean mischief. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How did the humbled swain detest
His prickly beard and hairy breast!
His night-cap border'd round with lace,
Could give no softness to his face. Swift.

NIGHTCROW. n. s. [night and crow; nyctitorax, Lat.] A bird that cries in the night.

The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
The night-crow cry'd, a boding luckless time.

NIGHTDEW. n. s. [night and dew.] Dew that wets the ground in the night.

All things are hush'd, as nature's self lay dead,
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head;
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flowers beneath the night-dew sweat;
Ev'n lust and envy sleep. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

NIGHTDOG. n. s. [night and dog.] A dog that hunts in the night. Used by deer-stealers.

When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chased. Shakespeare.

NIGHTDRESS. n. s. [night and dress.] The dress worn at night.
The fair ones feel such maladies as these,
When each new night-dress gives a new disease. Pope.

NIGHTED. adj. [from night.] Darkened; clouded; black.

It was great ignorance, Gloster's eyes being out,
To let him live: Edmund, I think, is gone;
In pity of his misery to dispatch
His nighted life. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,
And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark. Shakespeare.

NIGHTFALL.* n. s. [night and fall.] The close of day; the beginning of night.
Swift somewhere uses this word.

NIGHTFARING. n. s. [night and fare.] Travelling in the night.

Will-a-Wisp misleads night-faring clowns,
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs. Gay.

NIGHTFIRE. n. s. [night and fire.] Ignis fatuus; Will-a-Wisp.
Foolish night-fires, women's and children's wishes,
Chases in arras, gilded emptiness:
These are the pleasures here. Herbert.

NIGHTFLY. n. s. [night and fly.] Moth that flies in the night.
Why rather, sleep, ly'st thou in smoky cribs,
And hush't with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?

Shakespeare.
NIGHTFOUNDERED. adj. [from night and founder.] Lost or distressed in the night.

Either some one like us night-founded here,
Or else some neighbour woodman, or at worst,
Some roving robber calling to his fellows. Milton, Comus.

NIGHTGOWN. n. s. [night and gown.] A loose gown used for an undress.

Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed, throw
Her night-gown upon her. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
They have put me in a silk night-gown, and a gaudy fool's cap. Addison, Guardian.
To meagre muse-rid mope, adust and thin,
In a dun night-gown of his own loose skin. Pope.

NIGHTHAG. n. s. [night and hag.] Witch supposed to wander in the night.

Nor uglier follows the night-hag, when called
In secret, riding through the air she comes Lur'd with the smell of infant-blood, to dance
With Lapland witches. Milton, P. L.

NIGHTINGALE.† n. s. [Sax. nihtegale; from night, and gale, to sing. In Chaucer, this bird is said to crie and gale. See the second sense of To GALE.]
1. A small bird that sings in the night with remarkable melody; philomel.

I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakespeare.
Although the wren, the thrule, and tongue, be the instruments of voice, and by their agitations concur in those delightful modulations, yet cannot we assign the cause unto any particular formation; and I perceive the nightingale hath some disadvantage in the tongue. Brown.
Thus the wise nightingale that leaves her home,
Pursuing constantly the cheerful spring,
To foreign groves does her old musick bring. Waller.

2. A word of endearment.
My nightingale!
We'll beat them to their beds.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
NIGHTISH.* adj. [from night.] Belonging to the night; attached to the night.
When hawks shall dread the sly fowl,
And men esteem the nightish owl. Turberville, Sonn. (1567.)

NIGHTLY.† adj. [from night, Sax. nihtlic.] Done by night; acting by night; happening by night.
May the stars and shining moon attend
Your nightly sports, as you vouchsafe to tell
What nymphs they were who mortal forms excel. Dryden.

Soon as the flocks shook off the nightly dews,
Two swains, whom love kept wakeful and the muse,
Pour'd o'er the whit'ning vale their fleecy care. Pope.

NIGHTLY. adv. [from night.]
1. By night.

Let all things suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Thee, Sion! and the flowery brooks beneath,
That wash thy hallow'd feet, and warbling flow,
Nightly I visit. Milton, P. L.

2. Every night.
Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
And nightly to the list'ning ear
Repeats the story of her birth. Addison, Spect.

NIGHTMAN. n. s. [night and man.] One who carries away ordure in the night.

NIGHTMARE.† n. s. [night, and according to Temple, mara, a spirit that, in the northern mythology, was related to torment or suffocate sleepers. Su. Goth. mara, a spectre of the night; maere, Germ. one of the fates; from marren, to disturb. Serenius. There is very doubtful as to the origin of this word. Some consider it as the plural of maia, a maid; an appellation of the fates. Our common people call the night-mare, witch-riding: the French coque-mare, with a similar allusion.] A morbid oppression in the night, resembling the pressure or weight upon the breast.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the nightmare, and her name he told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The forerunners of an apoplexy are, dullness, drowsiness, vertiges, tremblings, oppressions in sleep, and night-mares. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

NIGHTPIECE. n. s. [night and piece.] A picture so coloured as to be supposed seen by candle light; not by the light of the day.

He hung a great part of the wall with night-pieces, that seemed to show themselves by the candles which were lighted up; and were so inflamed by the sun-shine which fell upon them, that I could scarce forbear crying out fire. Addison.

NIGHTTRAIL. † n. s. [night and rexl, Saxon, a gown or robe.] A loose cover thrown over the dress at night.

To survey

Embroider'd petticoats; and, sickness feign'd,
That your night-trails of forty pounds a-piece
Might be seen with envy of the visitants.

Massinger, City Madam.

An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or night-rail; but will talk as gravely as a father of the church on the vitta and peplus.

Addison on Medals.

NIGHT-RA'VEN. n. s. [night and raven; nycticorax.] A bird supposed of ill omen, that cries loud in the night.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger,
The hoarse night-raven, trump of doleful drear.

Spenser.

I pray his bad voice bode no mischief:
I had as lief have heard the night-raven,
Come what plague would have come after it.

Shakespeare.

NIGHTREST.  n. s.* [night and rest.] Repose of the night.

Domestick awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood.
Shakespeare, Tim. of Athens.

NIGHTROBBER. n. s. [night and robber.] One who steals in the dark.

Highways should be fenced on both sides, whereby thieves and night-robbers might be more easily pursued and encountered.

Spenser on Ireland.

NIGHTRULE. † n. s. [night and rule; supposed to be a corruption of revel, formerly written ruel. See also Misrule.] A frolic of the night.

How now, mad spirit?

What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

NIGHTSHADE. † n. s. [night-caba, Saxon.] 1. A plant of two kinds; 1. Common nightshade. [solanum.] 2. Deadly nightshade. [belladonna.]

And I ha' been plucking (plants among)

Hemlock, henbane, adder's tongue,

Nightshade, moonwort, libbards-bane.

B. Jonson, Masques.

2. The darkness of the night. Not in use.

Through the darke night-shade herself she drew from sight. Plædr. Tr. of Virgil, (1562), Æn. 2.

NIGHTSHINING. adj. [night and shine.] Shewing brightness in the night.

None of these noctiluca, or night-shining bodies, have been observed in any of the antient sepulchres.
Wilkins, Dædalus.

NIGHTSHRIEK. n. s. [night and shriek.]

A cry in the night.

I have almost forgot the taste of fears:

The time has been, my senses would have cool'd

To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair

Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir,

As life were in't. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

NIGHTSPELL.  n. s.* [night and spell.]

A charm against the accidents of the night.

I crouch thee from elves, and from wights:

Therewith the night-spell said he anon rightes.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

Spell is a kind of verse or charme, that in elder times they used often to say over every thing that they would have preserved, as the night-spell for thieves, and the woodspell.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal. March.

NIGHTTRIPPING. adj. [night and trip.]

Going lightly in the night.

Could it be prov'd,

That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd

In cradle clothes, our children where they lay,

Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.

Shakespeare.

A vision of the night.

Then was the secret revealed unto Daniel in a night-vision. Dan. ii. 19.

NIGHTWAKING.  adj.* [night and wake.]

Watching during the night.

Yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally,

While in his holdfast foot the weak mouse panteth.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

NIGHTWALK. n. s. [night and walk.] Walk in the night.

If in his night-walk he met with irregular scholars,
he took their names, and a promise to appear,
unsent for, next morning.

Walton, Life of Sanderson.

NIGHTWALKER. n. s. [night and walk.]

One who roves in the night upon ill designs.

Men that hunt so, be privy stealers, or night-walkers. Ascham.

NIGHTWALKING.  adj.* [night and walking.] Roving in the night.

They shall not need hereafter, in old cloaks and false beards, to stand to the courtesy of a night-walking cudgeller for eaves-dropping.

Milton, Animado. Rem. Defence.

NIGHTWALKING.  n. s.* The act of walking in sleep; noctambulation.

After hard meats, it [sleep] increaseth fearful dreams, incubus, night-walking, crying out, and much inquietness. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 88.

NIGHTWANDERER.  n. s.* [night and wanderer.] One that wanders by night.

Hulot.

Or 'stonish'd as night-wanderers often are.

Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

Every body will be ready to take him up for a night-wanderer, and to chastise him for being out of his way.

More, Conj. Cabb. p. 201.

A wandering fire,

Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night

Condenses, and the cold environs round,

Kindled through agitation to a flame,

(Which oft, they say, some evil spirit attends),

Hovering, and blazing, with delusive light,
Misleads the amaz'd night-wanderer from his way.

Milton, P. L.

NIGHTWANDERING.  adj.* [night and wander.] Roving in the night.

Night-wandering weels shriek to see him there.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

NIGHTWABLING. adj. [night and warble.] Singing in the night.

Their night-ward studies, wherewith they close the day's work. Milton on Education.

NIGHTWATCH. n. s. [night and watch.] A period of the night as distinguished by change of the watch.

I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches. Psalms lxxiii. 6.

NIGHTWATCHER.  n. s.* [night and watch.] One who watches through the night upon some ill design. Hulot.

NIGHTWITCH.  n. s.* [night and witch.]

A nighthag. Hulot.

NIGRESCENT. adj. [nigrescens, Latin.]

Growing black; approaching to blackness.

NIGRIFICATION. n. s. [niger and facio, Lat.] The act of making black.

NIGHTLITY. n. s. [nihilité, French, nihilum, Latin.] Nothingness; the state of being nothing.

Not being is considered as excluding all substance, and then all modes are also necessarily excluded; and this we call pure nihility, or mere nothing. Watts, Logic.

TO NILL. v. a. [from ne will; nillan, Saxon.] Not to will; to refuse; to reject.

Certes, said he, I nill thine offer'd grace,

Ne to be made so happy do intend;

Another bliss before mine eyes I place,

Another happiness, another end. Spenser.

In all affections she concurreth still;

If now, with man and wife to will and nill

The self same things, a note of concord be,

I know no couple better can agree.

B. Jonson, Epigram.

TO NILL.  v. n.* To be unwilling; not to agree.

Your father hath consented

That you shall be my wife; your dowry 'greed on;

And will you, nill you, I will marry you.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

NILL. n. s. The shining sparks of brass in trying and melting the ore.

TO NIM. † v. a. [Goth. niman; Saxon, niman.] To take. In cant, to steal. The old pret. and part. used by Chaucer, is nome, simply for took and taken. To nim is still to take up hastily, in the north of England, according to Grose.

Thence goes he to their present,

And there he doth purloine;

For, looking in their plate,

He nimmes away their coyne.

Bp. Corbet's Poems, p. 28.

They'll question Mars, and by his look

Detect who 'twas that nimm'd a cloak. Audibras.

They could not keep themselves honest of their fingers, but would be nimming something or other for the love of thieving. L'Estrange.

NIMBLE. adj. [from nim; or numan, Sax. tractable.] Quick; active; ready; speedy; lively; expeditious.

They being nimble-jointed than the rest,
And more industrious, gathered more store.

Spenser.

You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

You have dancing shoes

With nimble soles. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
His offering soon propitious fire from heaven,
Consum'd with nimble glance and grateful steam;
The others not, for his was not sincere.

Milton, P. L.

Through the mid seas the nimble pinnace sails
Aloof from Crete before the northern gales. Pope.

NIMBLENESS. n. s. [from nimble.] Quickness; activity; speed; agility; readiness; dexterity; celerity; expedition;
swiftness.

The hounds were straight uncoupled, and ere long the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Himself shewing at one instant both steadiness and nimbleness. Sidney.

All things are therefore partakers of God; they are his offering, his influence is in them, and the personal wisdom of God is for that very cause said to excel in nimbleness or agility, to pierce into all intellectual, pure, and subtle spirits, to go through all, and to reach unto every thing.

Hooker.

We, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Shakespeare.

Ovid ranged over all Parnassus with great nimbleness and agility; but as he did not much care for the toil requisite to climb the upper part of the hill, he was generally roving about the bottom. Addison, Guardian.

NIMBLESS. † n. s. Nimbleness.

Seemed those little angels did uphold
The cloth of state, and on their purpled wings
Did bear the pendants through their *nimble*esse bold. Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 29.

NIMBLE-WITTED. adj. [nimble and wit.]
Quick; eager to speak.

Sir Nicholas Bacon, when a certain nimble- witted counsellor at the bar, who was forward to speak, did interrupt him often, said unto him,
There is a great difference betwixt you and me;
a pain to me to speak, and a pain to you to hold your peace. Bacon.

NIMBLY. adv. [from nimble.] Quickly;
speedily; actively.

He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious playing of a lute.

Latin non compos.] A fool; a trifler.

An old ninyhammer, a dotard, a nincompoop,
is the best language she can afford me. Addison.

NINE. n. s. [nin, Gothick; nigon, Sax.]
One more than eight; one less than ten.

The weird sisters,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

At ninety nine a modern and a dunce. Pope.

NINE.* adj. Five and four.

A thousand scruples may startle at first, and yet in conclusion prove but a nine days' wonder.
L'Estrange.

The faults are nine in ten owing to affectation,
and not to the want of understanding. Swift.

NINEFOLD. † adj. [nine and fold.] Nine times; any thing nine times repeated.

This huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to devour, immures us round

cember, and school-boys playing at ninepins upon ice in July. Peacham.

For as when merchants break, o'erthrown
Like ninepins they strike others down. Hudibras.

NINESCORE. adj. [nine and score.] Nine times twenty.

Eugenius has two hundred pounds a year; but never values himself above nine-score, as not thinking he has a right to the tenth part, which he always appropriates to charitable uses.

Addison, Spect.

NINETEEN. adj. [nigonctyne, Sax.] Nine and ten; one less than twenty.

Nineteen in twenty of perplexing words might be changed into easy ones, such as occur to ordinary men. Swift.

NINETEENTH. adj. [nigoncteoða, Saxon.]
The ordinal of nineteen; the ninth after the tenth.

In the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzardan.

Eos lived ninety years and begat Cætan.

Gen. v. 9.

NINTH. adj. [nigoða, Sax.] That which precedes the tenth; the first after the eighth; the ordinal of nine.

Upon a strict observation of many, I have not found any that see the ninth day.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

NINTHLY.* adv. [from ninth.] In the ninth place. Sherwood.

NINETIETH. adj. [hunbunconteoða, Sax.]
The ordinal of ninety; the tenth nine times told.

NINNY. n. s. [nino, a child, Spanish.]
A fool; a simpleton.

What a pied ninny's this? Shakespeare, Tempest.
The dean was so shabby and look'd like a ninny.

That the captain suppos'd he was curate. Swift.

NINNYHAMMER. n. s. [from ninny.] A simpleton.

Have you no more manners than to rail at Hocus, that has saved that clod-pated, numskulled, ninny-hammer of yours from ruin, and all his family? Arbutnot, John Bull.

TO NIP. v. a. [nippen, Teut.]

1. To pinch off with the nails; to bite with the teeth.

In oranges and lemons, the nipping of their rind giveth out their smell more.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To cut off by any slight means.

The small shoots that extract the sap of the most leading branches, must be *nip*t off. Mortimer.

3. To blast; to destroy before full growth.

This is the state of man; to day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root;
And then he falls as I do. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

A flower doth spread and dye,
Thou would'st extend me to some good,
Before I were by frost's extremity *nip*t in the bud,
Herbert.

His delivery now proves
Abortive, as the first-born bloom of spring,
*Nip*t with the lagging rear of winter's frost.

Milton, S. A.

Had he not been nipped in the bud, he might have been a formidable figure in his own works among posterity.

From such encouragement it is easy to guess to what perfection I might have brought this work, had it not been *nip*t in the bud.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

4. To pinch as frost.

The air bites shrewdly, it is very cold —
It is a nipping and an eager air.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail;
When blood is *nip*t, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl.

Shakespeare, Love's L. Lost.

5. To vex; to bite.

And sharp remorse his heart did prick and nip,
That drops of blood thence like a well did play,

Spenser.

6. To satirise; to ridicule; to taunt sarcastically.

But the right gentle mind would bite his lip
To hear the javel so good men to nip.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Quick wits commonly be in desire new-fangled;
in purpose unconstant; bold with any person;
busy in every matter; soothing such as be present,
nipping any that is absent. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

NIP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A pinch with the nails or teeth.

I am sharply taunted, yea, sometimes with pinches, nips, and bobs. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

2. A small cut.

What this a sleeve? 'tis like a demicannon;
What up and down carv'd like an apple-tart?
Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slash, and slash,

Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

3. A blast.

So hasty fruits and too ambitious flowers,
Scorning the midwifery of ripening show'rs,
In spite of frosts, spring from the unwilling earth,
But find a nip untimely as their birth. Stepney.

4. A taunt; a sarcasm.

NIPPER. n. s. [from nip.] A satirist.
Out of use.

Ready backbiters, some nippers, and spiteful reporters privily of good men. Ascham.

N'PPLE. n. s. [nȳpele, Saxon.]

1. The teat; the dug; that which the sucking young take into their mouths.

The babe that milks me, —

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have plucked my nipple from his boneless gums.

Shakspeare.

In creatures, that nourish their young with milk, are adapted the nipples of the breast to the mouth and organs of suction. Ray on the Creation.

2. It is used by Chapman of a man.

As his foe went then suffis'd away,

Thoas Ætolius threw a dart, that did his pile convey Above his nipple, through his lungs. Chapman.

3. The orifice at which any animal liquor is separated.

In most other birds there is only one gland, in which are divers little cells ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

N'PPLEWORT. n. s. [Lampasana.] A weed.

NIS.* [ne is; Sax. nir.] Is not. Obsolete.

Leave me those hills, where harbrough nis to see.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. June.

NISI PRIUS. n. s. [In law.] A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the inquest is pannelled and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the ease of the country. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the men impanelled to come before the justices in the same county, for the determining of the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation; in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talem locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius differ. So that justices of nisi prius must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county associated to him.

Cowel.

NIT.† n. s. [hnitu, Saxon.]

1. The egg of a louse, or small animal.

The whame, or burrel-fly, is voracious to horses in summer, not by stinging them, but only by their bombilyous noise, or tickling them in sticking their nits, or eggs, on the hair.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

2. [Pompholyx.] A small ash that flies forth of the furnace where brass is melting.

Huloet.

NITENTY. n. s. [nitentia, Latin.]

1. Lustre; clear brightness.

2. [From the Latin, nitor.] Endeavour; striving to expand itself.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles; from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward, will be augmented; that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open.

Boyle.

NIT'HING. n. s. [or niding; see NIDING.]

A coward, dastard, poltroon.

NIT'ID.† adj. [nitidus, Latin.]

1. Bright; shining; lustrous.

We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aqua fortis, which take off the adventitious filth.

Boyle on Colours.

2. Applied to persons, gay, spruce, fine.

Amongst these doth the nitid spark spend out his time: this is the gallant's day!

Reeve, God's Plea for Nieveh, (1657.)

NITRE.† n. s. [nitron, Gr. nitrum, Lat. nitre, Fr.] The salt commonly called saltpetre, as well as nitre; in chemical language, nitrate of potash, that is, composed of the nitrick acid and potash. It is found, in great abundance, in a state of incrustation on the surface of the earth in various parts. Several plants contain nitre. Artificial methods of procuring it are also used.

Some tumutuous cloud,

Insistent with fire and nitre, hurried him.

Milton, P. L.

Some steep their seed, and some in cauldrons boil,

With vigorous nitre, and with lees of oil. Dryden.

NITROGEN.* n. s. [νίτρον and γεννάω or γεννᾶν, Gr.] An elastic fluid, invisible, of which, with oxygen, atmospheric air is composed. It bears also the chemical name of azote; and exists in all animal substances, but is most plentiful in the atmosphere.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

NIT'ROUS. adj. [nitreus, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather nitrous fatness more than either of them have severally.

Bacon.

The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is fittest to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unwieldy bulk with due celerity.

Ray.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet stores of cold so greedily pursu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food.

Blackmore.

NIT'RY. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.

Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the slabby mire, and kennels bind.

Gay.

NIT'TILY. adv. [from nitty.] Lously.

One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion; he was a man nitily needy, and therefore adventrous.

Hayward.

NIT'TY.† adj. [from nit.]

1. Abounding with the eggs of lice.

Huloet.

I'll know the poor, egregious nitity rascal.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

NIT'ZY.† n. s. [from niais.] Dr. Johnson. —

Whence the Fr. nice, in a contemptuous sense. Kelham mentions the Norm. Fr. nessi, an idiot. A learned writer notices the Heb. nibzeh, a word of reproach, to express the utmost contempt of any man's person; and he says, "if it be considered, that the b of the ancients had a very soft pronunciation in some cases, in all probability the word still lives in our language, and is the same with nisey." Harris on the 53d chap. of Isaiah, p. 102. It may be, however, of the same origin with zany. See ZANY.] A dunce; a simpleton. A low word.

True critics laugh, and bid the trifling nisy Go read Quintilian. Anon.

NO. adv. [na, Saxon.]

1. The word of refusal: contrary to yea or yes.

Our courteous Antony,

Whom ne'er the word of no, woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast.

Shakspeare.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd.
In russet yeas and honest kersey noes. Shakspeare.

If you will not consider these things now, the time will shortly come when you shall consider them whether you will or no. Calamy, Serm.

2. The word of denial, opposite to concession or affirmation.

I think it would not sort amiss, to handle the question, whether a war for the propagation of the Christian faith, without another cause of hostility, be lawful or no, and in what cases? Bacon.

3. It sometimes confirms a foregoing negative.

My name's Macbeth: —

— The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. —

— No, nor more fearful. Shakspeare.

Never more

This hand shall combat on the crooked shore:
No: let the Grecian powers, oppress in fight,
Unspit'd perish in their tyrant's sight.

Dryden, Homer.

4. It sometimes strengthens a following negative; no not, not even.

No not the bow which so adorns the skies,
So glorious is, or boasts so many dies. Waller.

NO. adj.

1. Not any; none.

Let there be no strife between me and thee.

Gen. xiii. 8.

For true no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.

No wit to flatter left of all his store,

No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores,

Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floors. Pope.

Our bard

No common object to your sight displays. Pope.

Poor Edwin was no vulgar boy. Beattie.

2. It seems an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where; though sometimes it may be so commodiously changed to not, that it seems an adverb; as, the days are yet no shorter.

When we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel. 1 Sam. x. 14.

In vain I reach my feeble hands to join
In sweet embraces; ah, no longer thine. Dryden.

3. No one; none; not any one.

No one who doeth good to those only from whom he expects to receive good, can ever be fully satisfied of his own sincerity. Smalbridge.

NOB.* n. s. The head; in ridicule. A colloquial low word, and perhaps adopted from knob, which see.

It is a purpo's'd thing,

To curb the will of the nobility Shaksp. Coriol.

4. Dignity; grandeur; greatness.

Though she hated Amphialus, yet the nobility of her courage prevailed over it; and she desired he might be pardoned that youthful error; considering the reputation he had to be the best knight in the world; so as hereafter he governed himself, as one remembering his fault. Sidney.

But ah, my muse, I would thou hadst facility To work my goddess so by thy invention, On me to cast those eyes where shine nobility. Sidney.

Base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them. Shakspere, Othello.

They thought it great their sovereign to controul,

And nam'd their pride, nobility of soul. Dryden.

NOBLE.† adj. [noble, French; nobilis, Latin.]

1. Of an ancient and splendid family.

Choosing rather to die manfully, than to come into the hands of the wicked, to be abused otherwise than becometh his noble birth. 2 Mac. xiv. 42.

2. Exalted to a rank above commonalty.

From virtue first began,

The difference that distinguish'd man from man: He claim'd no title from descent of blood, But that which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

3. Great; worthy; illustrious: both men and things.

Thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage, and a memorial of virtue. 2 Mac. vi. 31.

What the nobles once said in parliament, Nolumus leges Angliæ mutari, is imprinted in the hearts of all the people. Bacon.

The nobles amongst the Romans took care in their last wills, that they might have a lamp in their monuments. Wilkins.

See all our nobles begging to be slaves, See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

It may be the disposition of young nobles, that they expect the accomplishments of a good education without the least expence of time or study. Swift, Mod. Education.

The second natural division of power, is of such men who have acquired large possessions, and consequently dependencies; or descend from ancestors who have left them great inheritances, together with an hereditary authority: these easily unite in thoughts and opinions. Thus commences a great council or senate of nobles, for the weighty affairs of the nation. Swift.

Men should press forward in Fame's glorious chase,

Nobles look backward, and so lose the race. Young.

2. A coin rated at six shillings and eightpence; the sum of six and eightpence.

He coined nobles, of noble, fair, and fine gold. Camden.

Ashmole, Berk. ii. 341.

NO'BLESS.† n. s. [noblesse, French.]

1. Nobility. This word is not now used in any sense. Dr. Johnson.—It certainly was in use, as Mr. Mason also has observed, at the time Dr. Johnson made this remark; and has been since supported by good authorities. See the third sense, as well as the first.

Fair branch of nobless, flower of chivalry, That with your worth the world amazed makes.

Spenser.

True noblesse consists in a liberal education, and honourable pursuits and employments, followed even from the cradle. Wealth may confer this, but it must be hereditary, not acquired. The upstart himself, whatever may be his talents or opulence, will seldom have the sentiments and inclinations of a gentleman.

Michell, Principles of Legislation, (1796.)

2. Dignity; greatness.

Thou, whose nobless keeps one stature still, And one true posture, though besieg'd with ill.

B. Jonson, Epigr. 102.

3. Noblemen collectively.

Let us haste to hear it,

And call the nobless to the audience. Shaks. Haml.

Only a second laurel did adorn His colleague Catulus, though nobly born: He shar'd the pride of the triumphal bay,

But Marius won the glory of the day. Dryden.

2. Greatly; illustriously; magnanimously.

Did he not straight the two delinquents tear, That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep? Was not that nobly done? Shakspere, Macbeth.

This fate he could have 'scap'd, but would not lose

Honour for life, but rather nobly chose Death from their fears, than safety from his own. Denham.

3. Grandly; splendidly.

There could not have been a more magnificent design than that of Trajan's pillar. Where could an emperor's ashes have been so nobly lodged, as in the midst of his metropolis, and on the top of so exalted a monument? Addison on Italy.

NOBODY. n. s. [no and body.] No one; not any one.

This is the tune of our catch played by the picture of nobody. Shakespeare, Tempest.

It fell to Coke's turn, for whom nobody cared, to be made the sacrifice; and he was out of his office. Clarendon.

If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you on your own laughter, you may condemn their taste, and appeal to better judgements; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift, Miscell.

NOCENT. † adj. [nocens, Latin.]

1. Guilty; criminal.

The earl of Devonshire being interested in the blood of York, that was rather feared than nocent; yet as one, that might be the object of other plots, remained prisoner in the Tower during the king's life. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Secretly Catesby resorts to you — to enquire whether it were lawful, considering the necessity of the time, to undertake an enterprise for the advancement of the Catholic religion, though it were likely that, among many that were nocent, some should perish that were innocent.

Ld. Northampton, Proceed. agst. Garnet, (1606.) A a. 2. God made us naked and innocent, yet we presently made ourselves nocent.

Hewitt, Sermon. Chm. Day, p. 74. (1658.)

A great scruple arose even in the minds of the most confident assassins, whether the nocent and the innocent might be destroyed and perish together.

Bp. Pearson, Sermon. (Nov. 5. 1673,) p. 21.

2. Hurtful; mischievous.

His head the midst, well stor'd with subtle wiles:

Not yet in horrid shade, or dismal den,
Nor nocent yet; but on the grassy herb,
Fearless unfeard he slept. Milton, P. L.

The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.
They meditate whether the virtues of the one will exalt or diminish the force of the other, or correct any of its nocent qualities.

Watts on the Mind.

Cassius must bend his body,
If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him. Shakespeare.

3. To bend downwards with quick motion.

When a pine is hewn on the plains,
And the last mortal stroke alone remains,
Labouring in pangs of death, and threatening all,
This way and that she nods, considering where to fall. Dryden.

He climbs the mountain rocks,
Fir'd by the nodding verdure of its brow. Thomson.

4. To be drowsy.

Your two predecessors were famous for their dreams and visions, and contrary to all other authors, never pleased their readers more than when they were nodding. Addison.

To NOD.* v. a.

1. To bend; to incline.

Cleopatra

Hath nodded him to her: He hath given his empire
Up to a whore. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. To shake.

Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakespeare, Coriol.

NOD. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick declination of the head.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things; a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss. Locke on Education.

A mighty king I am, an earthly God;
Nations obey my word, and wait my nod:
And life and death depend on my decree. Prior.

2. A slight declination.

Like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready with every nod to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

3. The motion of the head in drowsiness.

Every drowsy nod shakes their doctrine who teach, that the soul is always thinking. Locke.

4. A slight obeisance.

Will he give you the nod?

NONATTE^{NDANCE}.* n. s. [non and attendance.] The not giving personal attendance.

Nonattendance in former parliaments ought to be a bar against the choice of men who have been guilty of it. Ld. Halifax.

NONCE.† n. s. [The original of this word is uncertain; Skinner imagines it to come from own or once; or from nutz, German, need or use: Junius derives it less probably from noiance; to do for the nonce being, according to him, to do it merely for mischief. Dr. Johnson. — Tyrwhitt and Ritson suppose it to be from the Latin pro-nunc; viz. for the nunc, i. e. for the now, the occasion; the Lat. nunc being corrupted into nonce; and Mr. Tyrwhitt adds that "so anon came from the Latin ad-nunc." But anon has a very different origin. The etymology, which Serenius gives of nonce, seems most probable: "Icel. nenna, nenning, arbitrium, will, inclination; Su. Goth. nenna, nennas, a se impetrare posse;" i. e. to prevail with one's self to do a thing, to have a mind to do it: an etymology, to which

Dr. Jamieson had also inclined before he saw the observation of Serenius. Our word was formerly written nonces and names; as nonces by R. of Gloucester and Chaucer, and names in the old Romance of Ywaine and Gawin. This is in favour of the northern etymon: Mr. Chalmers, however, has supposed it to be from the French nonce, a nuncio, the prelate whom the pope used to send for his special purposes, for the nonce; noncier, in the Rom. de la Rose, for annoncer.] Purpose; intent; design. Not now in use.

I saw a wolf Nursing two whelps; I saw her little ones In wanton dalliance the teat to crave, While she her neck wreath'd from them for the nonce. Spenser.

Thy life shall hang in doubt, and thou shalt have none assurance of this life.

Deut. xxviii. 66.

Before the deluge, the air was calm; none of those tumultuary motions of vapours, which the mountains and winds cause in ours.

Burnet, Theory.

The most glaring and notorious passages, are none of the finest.

Felton on the Classics.

3. Not other.

This is none other but the house of God, and the gate of heaven.

Gen. xxviii. 17.

4. None sometimes signifies only emphatically nothing.

My people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me.

Ps. lxxii. 11.

5. None is always used when it relates to a substantive going before; as, we shall have no wine: wine we shall have none.

6. None seems originally to have signified according to its derivation, not one, and therefore to have had no plural, but it is now used plurally.

Terms of peace were none

Vouchsaf'd.

Milton, P. L.

In at this gate none pass

The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come

Well known from heav'n.

Milton, P. L.

Nor think though men were none

That heaven would want spectators, God want praise.

Milton, P. L.

NONE'THITY. n. s. [non and entity.]

1. Nonexistence; the negation of being.

When they say nothing from nothing, they must understand it as excluding all causes. In which sense it is most evidently true; being equivalent to this proposition, that nothing can make itself, or, nothing cannot bring its self out of nonentity into something.

Bentley.

2. A thing not existing.

There was no such thing as rendering evil for evil, when evil was truly a nonentity, and no where to be found.

South.

We have heard, and think it pity that your inquisitive genius should not be better employed, than in looking after that theological nonentity.

Arbutnot and Pope.

NONES.* n. s. [from nonus, Latin.]

1. Certain days in each month of the old Roman calendar.

The nones were so called, because they reckoned nine days from them to the ides.

NO'NESUCH.* n. s. The name of an apple.

NONEX'ISTENCE.† n. s. [non and existence.]

1. Inexistence; negation of being.

How uncomfortable would it be to lie down in a temporary state of non-existence! How delightful is it to think that there is a world of spirits; that we are surrounded with intelligent living beings, rather than in a lonely, unconscious universe, a wilderness of matter!

A. Baxter on the Soul, ii. 189.

2. The thing not existing.

A method of many writers, which depreciates the esteem of miracles is, to save not only real verities, but also non-existences.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

NONJU'RING. adj. [non and juror, Latin.]

Belonging to those who will not swear allegiance to the Hanoverian family.

This objection was offered me by a very pious, learned, and worthy gentleman of the nonjuror party.

Swift.

NONJU'ROR.† n. s. [from non and juror.]

One who, conceiving James II. unjustly deposed, refuses to swear allegiance to those who have succeeded him.

The nonconformists were then exactly upon the same foot with our nonjurors now, whom we double-tax, forbid their conventicles, and keep under hatches, without thinking ourselves possessed with a persecuting spirit, because we know they want nothing but the power to ruin us.

Swift, Exam. No. 36.

NONNA'TURALS. n. s. pl. [non naturalia.]

Physicians reckon these to be six, viz. air, meat and drink, sleep and watching, motion and rest, retention and excretion, and the passions of the mind.

The six nonnaturalis are such as neither naturally constitutive, nor merely destructive, do preserve or destroy according unto circumstances.

Brown.

NO'NNY.* n. s. In Norfolk, the same as ninny, which see. Mr. Steevens upon the words from the old song in Hamlet, "hey ho nonny," observes that, among the common people in Norfolk, to nonny signifies to trifle or play with.

Ninny-nonny is one of the colloquial expressions so frequent in our language for the sake of rhyme, alliteration, or jingle.

NON-OBSTANTE.* [Latin; non-obstant, old French.] Notwithstanding anything to the contrary: a law phrase.

I ask no dispensation now

To falsify a tear, or sigh, or vow;

I do not sue from thee to draw

A non-obstant on nature's law.

Donne, Poems, p. 28.

If in any one point, never so small, we may set aside, or supersede, the rule delivered down to us from the beginning with our non-obstantes and notwithstanding.

Biblioth. Bibl. i. 264.

NONPARE'IL. n. s. [non and pareil, French.]

In the mean time the most nonpareil beauty of the world, beauteous knowledge, standeth unregarded, or cloistered up in mere speculation.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654), p. 204.

NO'NPLUS. n. s. [non and plus, Latin.]

Puzzle; inability to say or do more. A low word.

Let it seem never so strange and impossible, the nonplus of my reason will yield a fairer opportunity to my faith.

South.

One or two rules, on which their conclusions depend, in most men have governed all their thoughts: take these from them and they are at a loss, and their understanding is perfectly at a nonplus.

Locke.

Such an artist did not begin the matter at a venture, and when put to a nonplus, pause and hesitate which way he should proceed; but he had first in his comprehensive intellect a complete idea of the whole organical body.

Bentley.

To NO'NPLUS. v. a. [from the noun.] To confound; to puzzle; to put to a stand; to stop.

Nor is the composition of our own bodies the only wonder; we are as much nonplus by the most contemptible worm and plant.

Glanville, Scopsis.

His parts were so accomplish,

That right or wrong he ne'er was nonplus.

Hudibras.

That sin that is a pitch beyond all those, must needs be such an one as must nonplus the devil himself to proceed farther.

South.

What, you are confounded, and stand mute? Somewhat nonplus to hear you deny your name.

Dryden.

Tom has been eloquent for half an hour together, when he has been *nonplus*ed by Mr. Dry's desiring him to tell what it was that he endeavoured to prove.

Spectator.

NONPROFI'CIANT.* n. s. [non and proficient.] One who has made no progress in the art or study in which he is engaged.

God hath in nature given every man inclination to some one particular calling; which if he follow, he excels; if he cross, he proves a non-proficient.

Bp. Hall, Holy Observ.

NONRE'SIDENCE. n. s. [non and residence.]

Failure of residence.

If the character of persons chosen into the church had been regarded, there would be fewer complaints of nonresidence.

Swift.

NONRE'SIDENT. n. s. [non and resident.]

One who neglects to live at the proper place.

As to nonresidents, there are not ten clergymen in the kingdom who can be termed nonresidents.

Swift.

NONRE'SIDENT.* adj. Not residing in the proper place.

Her household is her charge; her care to that makes her seldom non-resident.

Overbury, Character.

NONRESI'STANCE.† n. s. [non and resistance.] The principle of not opposing the king; ready obedience to a superior.

If the doctor had pretended to have stated the particular bounds and limits of non-resistance, he would have been much to blame.

Sir Joseph Jekyll at Sacheverel's Trial.

NONRESI'STANT.* adj. Not resisting; unopposing.

This is that (Ædipus, whose wisdom can reconcile inconsistent opposites, and teach passive obedience, and non-resistance principles to despise government, and to fly in the face of sovereign authority.

Arbutnot.

NO'NSENSE.† n. s. [non and sense.] This word is said by P. Heylin, in 1656, to be new and uncouth. But Mr. Malone observes that Anthony Stafford, in his Meditations printed in 1611, uses it; writing it, however, non-sense, apparently as a new word. It continued to be so written, I may add, long after; and had the accent on sense; as in an Elegy on the death of Donne, at the end of his Poems. This word is not in Shakspeare.]

1. Unmeaning or ungrammatical language.

Till understood, all tales, Hudibras.

Like nonsense are not true nor false. Many copies dispersed gathering new faults, I saw more nonsense than I could have crammed into it. Dryden.

This nonsense got into all the following editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope on Shakspeare.

NO'STRIL.† n. s. [næðýl, Saxon; nose and ðýl, a hole: formerly written nosethril, as by Chaucer and Spenser; and not wholly disused late in the seventeenth century.] The cavity in the nose.

Turn then my freshest reputation to

A savour that may strike the dullest nostril.

Shakspeare.

Stinks which the nostrils straight abhor, are not the most pernicious.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He form'd thee, Adam, and in thy nostrils breath'd

The breath of life.

Milton, P. L.

The secondary action subsisteth in concomitancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful both for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling.

Brown.

These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatick scent.

More, Divine Dialogues.

NO'STRUM. n. s. [Latin.] A medicine not yet made publick, but remaining in some single hand.

Very extraordinary, and one of his nostrums, let it be writ upon his monument, Hic jacet auctor injus argumenti; for no body ever used it before.

Stillingfleet.

What drop or nostrum can this plague remove?

Pope.

NOT.† adv. [nate, noht, nocht, Sax.]

1. The particle of negation, or refusal.

If thou be indeed, as men thee call,

The world's great parent, the most kind preserver

Of living wights, the sovaine lord of all,

How falls it then that with thy furious fervour

Thou dost afflict as well the not-deserver,

As him that doth thy lovely hests despise?

Spenser, Hymn of Love.

His countenance likes me not, Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The man held his peace, to wit whether the Lord had made his journey prosperous or not.

Gen. xxiv. 21.

The question is, may I do it, or may I not do it?

Sanderson.

He is invulnerable, I not.

Milton, P. L.

Let each man do as to his fancy seems;

I wait, not I, till you have better dreams.

Dryden.

This objection hinders not but that the heroic action enterprised for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be as well executed now as it was of old.

Dryden.

Grammar being to teach men not to speak, but to speak correctly: where rhetoric is not necessary, grammar may be spared.

Locke on Education.

This day, be bread and peace my lot;

All else beneath the sun

Thou know'st if best bestow'd or not,

And let thy will be done.

Pope, Univ. Prayer.

2. The first member of a negative sentence, followed by nor or neither.

I was not in safety, neither had I rest.

Job.

Not for price nor reward.

Forsake me not, O Lord; O my God, be not far from me!

Psalms.

5. It denotes cessation or extinction. NO more.

Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not.

Job, vii. 8.

6. Not only: elliptically.

He has—

Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers

That do distribute it.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God.

1 Thess. iv. 8.

Despiseth not man [only,] but God.

Whitby on 1 Thess. iv. 8.

NOT.* adj. Shorn. See NOTT.

NO'TABLE. adj. [notable, Fr. notabilis, Latin.]

1. Remarkable; memorable; observable: it is now scarcely used, but in irony.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears; which, it seems, all worthy fame hath glory to come unto.

Sidney.

The same is notified in the notablest places of the diocess.

Whitgift.

At Kilkenny, many notable laws were enacted, which shew, for the law doth best discover enormities, how much the English colonies were corrupted.

Davies.

Two young men appeared notable in strength, excellent in beauty, and comely in apparel.

2 Mac. iii. 26.

They bore two or three charges from the horse with notable courage, and without being broken.

Clarendon.

Both armies lay still without any notable action, for the space of ten days.

Clarendon.

It is impossible but a man must have first passed this notable stage, and got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin.

South.

2. Careful; bustling: in contempt and irony.

This absolute monarch was as notable a guardian of the fortunes, as of the lives of his subjects. When any man grew rich, to keep him from being dangerous to the state, he sent for all his goods.

Addison, Freshholder.

NO'TABLE.* n. s. A thing worthy to be observed.

Varro's aviary is still so famous, that it is reckoned for one of those notables which foreign nations record.

Addison.

NO'TABLENESS.† n. s. [from notable.]

1. Remarkableness; worthiness of observation.

Neither could the notableness of the place—make us to mark it.

Homilies, Sermon. I. against Idolatry.

2. Appearance of business; importance; in contempt.

NO'TABLY. adv. [from notable.]

1. Memorably; remarkably.

This we see notably proved, in that the oft polling of hedges conduces much to their lasting.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Herein doth the endless mercy of God notably appear, that he vouchsafeth to accept of our repentance, when we repent, though not in particular as we ought to do.

Perkins.

2. With consequence; with shew of importance: ironically.

Mention Spain or Poland, and he talks very notably; but if you go out of the gazette, you drop him.

Addison.

NOTA'RIAL. adj. [from notary.] Taken by a notary.

It may be called an authentick writing, though not a publick instrument, through want of a notarial evidence.

Ayliffe.

NO'TARY. n. s. [notaire, Fr. from notarius, Lat.] An officer whose business it is to take notes of any thing which may concern the publick.

There is a declaration made to have that very book and no other set abroad, wherein their present authorised notaries do write those things fully and only, which being written and there read, are by their own open testimony acknowledged to be their own.

Hooker.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there

Your bond.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

One of those with him, being a notary, made an entry of this act.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

So I but your recorder am in this,

Or mouth and speaker of the universe,

A ministerial notary; for 'tis

Not I, but you and fame that make this verse.

Donne.

They have in each province, intendants and notaries.

Temple.

NOTA'TION. n. s. [notatio, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of recording any thing by marks; as by figures or letters.

Notation teaches how to describe any number by certain notes and characters, and to declare the value thereof being so described, and that is by degrees and periods.

Cocher.

2. Meaning; signification.

A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to a building.

Hammond.

Conscience, according to the very notation of the word, imports a double knowledge; one of a divine law, and the other of a man's own action; and so is the application of a general law, to a particular instance of practice.

South.

NOTCH.† n. s. [noche, Teut. nocchia, Ital. See Nock.]

1. A nick; a hollow cut in any thing; a nock.

The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces in the margin of a pyramidal figure appositely set, and with transverse notches.

Grev. Mus.

From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes:
There take my tally of ten thousand pound. Swift.

2. It seems to be erroneously used for nich.

He shew'd a comma ne'er could claim
A place in any British name;
Yet making here a perfect botch,
Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch. Swift.

- To NOTCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.

He was too hard for him directly: before Corioli, he scotched him and notch'd him like a carbo-nado.

Shakspeare.

The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces, cancellated and transversely notched.

Grev. Mus.

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster. Pope.

- NOTCHWEE'D. n. s. [notch and weed; atriplex oblida.] An herb called orach.

- NOTE.† [for ne note.]

1. Know not.

But soth to say, I n'ot how men him call.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

Deare sonne, great beene the evils which ye bore

From first to last in your late enterprise,
That I n'ote, whether praise or pitty more.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Could not; could not know how to.

But he that last left helpe away did take,
And both her hands fast bound unto a stake,
That she n'ote stirre. Spenser, F. Q.

Ne let him then adimre,
But yield his sense to be too blunt and base,
That n'ote without an hound fine footing trace.

Spenser, F. Q.

- NOTE. n. s. [nota, Lat. notte, Fr.]

1. Mark; token: as, Bellarmine's notes of the church.

Whosoever appertain to the visible body of the church, they have also the notes of external profession whereby the world knoweth what they are.

Hooker.

2. Notice; heed.

Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence. Shakspeare.
I will bestow some precepts on this virgin,
Worthy the note. Shakspeare, All's Well.

3. Reputation; consequence.

Divers men of note have been brought into England.

Abbot.

Andronicus and Junia, — who are of note among the apostles.

Rom. xvi. 7.

As for metals, authors of good note assure us, that even they have been observed to grow. Boyle.

4. Reproach; stigma.

The more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat.

Shakspeare.

5. Account; information; intelligence; notice. Not used.

She that from Naples
Can have no note; unless the sun were post,
The man i' th' moon's too slow. Shakspeare, Tempest.

In suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place; so far forth consideration may be had of his trust, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been had but by him, advantage be not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort recompensed for his discovery.

Bacon.

6. State of being observed.

VOL. II.

Small matters come with great commendation, because they are continually in use and in note: whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh but on festivals.

Bacon.

7. Tune; voice; harmonick or melodious sound.

These are the notes wherewith are drawn from the hearts of the multitude so many sighs; with these tunes their minds are exasperated against the lawful guides and governors of their souls.

Hooker.

The wakeful bird tunes her nocturnal note.

Milton, P. L.

I now must change those notes to tragick.

Milton, P. L.

You that can tune your sounding string so well,
Of ladies' beauties and of love to tell;
Once change your note, and let your lute report
The justest grief that ever touch'd the court.

Waller.

One common note on either lyre did strike,
And knaves and fools we both abhor'd alike.

Dryden.

8. Single sound in musick.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony!

This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony,

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

9. Short hint; small paper; memorial register.

He will'd me

In heedfull reservation to bestow them,

As notes whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note. Shakspeare.

In the body's prison so she lies,
As through the body's windows she must look,
Her divers pow'rs of sense to exercise,
By gathering notes out of the world's great book.

Davies.

10. Abbreviation; symbol; musical character.

Contract it into a narrow compass by short notes and abbreviations.

Baker on Learning.

11. A small letter.

A hollow cane within her hand she brought,
But in the concave had inclos'd a note. Dryden.

12. A written paper.

I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy, for perpetually reading their sermons; perhaps, my frequent hearing of foreigners, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust. Swift.

13. A paper given in confession of a debt.

His note will go farther than my bond.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

14. Explanatory annotation.

The best writers have been perplexed with notes, and obscured with illustrations.

Felton on the Classics.

This put him upon a close application to his studies. He kept much at home, and writ notes upon Homer and Plautus.

Law.

- To NOTE.† v. a. [note, Latin; noter, Fr.]

1. To mark; to distinguish. This is the primary meaning, but is overpass'd by Dr. Johnson.

Can we once imagine that Christ's body so miraculously made, now clad with incorruption and enriched with glory, was ever afflicted with malady, or enfeebled with infirmity, or noted with deformity?

Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615), sign. B. 2.

2. To observe; to remark; to heed; to attend; to take notice of.

The foot hath much pined away. —

No more of that, I have noted it well.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Some things may in passing be fitly noted.

Hammond.

I began to note

The stormy Hyades, the rainy goat. Addison, Ovid.
Wandering from clime to clime, observant stray'd,

Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.

3. To deliver; to set down.

Saint Augustin speaking of devout men, noteth how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they gave unto the lessons and chapters read.

Hooker.

Note it in a book, that it may be for ever and ever.

Is. xxx. 8.

4. To charge with a crime: with of or for.

Sine veste Dianam, agrees better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julia's, who were both noted of incontinency.

Dryden.

5. [In musick.] To set down the notes of a tune.

To NOTE.* v. a. [hnitan, Sax. hniota, Icel.] To push, or strike, with the horns, as a bull or ram. North.

Ray, and Grose.

Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 186.

NOTELESS.* adj. [note and less.] Not attracting notice.

A courtesan,

Let her walk saintlike, noteless, and unknown,
Yet she's betray'd by some trick of her own.

Decker, Hon. Whore, P. ii.

NOTER.† n. s. [from note.]

1. He who takes notice.

2. An annotator.

Postellus, and the noter upon him, Severtius, have much admired this manner of section.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650), p. 308.

NOTEWORTHY.* adj. [note and worthy.] Deserving notice.

Think on thy Protheus, when thou haply seest
Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

Two are especially note-worthy in their steeples,
being small but exceeding high towers,

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 129.

NOTHING. n. s. [no and thing; nothing, Scottish.]

1. Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation: opposed to something.

It is most certain, that there never could be nothing. For, if there could have been an instant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself: and so was, and acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing; then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning.

Grev.

We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it. Bentley.

This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense; so we say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it. Watts, Logic.

2. Nonexistence.

Mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

3. Not any thing; no particular thing.

There shall nothing die. Exod. ix. 4.
Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.
Philosophy wholly speculative, is barren and produces nothing but vain ideas. Dryden, Don Seb.

Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone. Addison on the War.

4. No other thing.

Nothing but a steady resolution brought to practice; God's grace used, his commandments obeyed, and his pardon begged; nothing but this will intitle you to God's acceptance. Wake, Prep. for Death.

Words are made to declare something; where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise used, they conceal indeed something; but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or sopistry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing else under them. Locke.

5. No quantity or degree.

The report which the troops of horse make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows. Clarendon.

6. No importance; no use; no value.

The outward shew of churches, draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice fools say, there is nothing in the seemly form of the church. Spenser on Ireland.

Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught. Isaiah.

7. No possession or fortune.

A most homely shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspeakable estate. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

8. No difficulty; no trouble.

We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts. Ray on the Creation.

9. A thing of no proportion.

The charge of making the ground, and otherwise is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

10. Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.

I had rather have one scratch my head i' th' sun, When the alarm were struck, than idly sit To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakespeare.

My dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive. Crashaw.

'Tis nothing, says the fool; but says the friend,
This nothing, sir, will bring you to your end.
Do I not see your drowsy-belly swell? Dryden.

That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the fatiguing perpetual business of having no business to do. Pope, Lett.

Narcissus is the glory of his race;
For who does nothing with a better grace? Young.

11. Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.

Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth? Job, xxiv. 25.
Auria, nothing dismayed with the greatness of the Turk's fleet, still kept on his course. Knolles, Hist.

But Adam with such counsel nothing sway'd. Milton, P. L.

NO'THINGNESS.† n. s. [from nothing.]

1. Nihilty; nonexistence.

His art did express

A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations, and lean emptiness. Donne, Poems, p. 36.

Being demolished as to themselves, and turned into a chaos or dark nothingness. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 241.

2. Nothing; thing of no value.

Other stars may have their several virtues and effects; but their marvellous remoteness, and my undiscernible nothingness, may seem to forbid any certain intelligence of their distinct workings upon me. By. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 22.

I that am

A nothingness in deed and name,
Did scorn to hurt his forfeit carcass. Hudibras, i. ii.

NO'TICE. n. s. [notice, old French; notitia, Latin.]

1. Remark; heed; observation; regard.

The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's miscarriage is, what root it springs from. Locke.

This is done with little notice; very quick the actions of the mind are performed. Locke.

How ready is envy to mingle with the notices which we take of other persons! Watts.

2. Information; intelligence given or received.

I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall and his duchess will be here. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

TO NO'TICE.* v. a. [from the noun. Mr. Mason has pretended, that this is a word imported into English conversation from Ireland. So far from its being such an innovation, it is, as Mr. Malone has observed, of great age in our language. To note; to need; to observe; to regard.]

As some do perceive, yea and like it well, they should be so noticed. T. Howard, in Harrington's Nugæ Ant. (about 1608.)

These pieces contain several curious circumstances of Milton's early life, situations, friendships, and connections; which are often so transiently, or implicitly noticed, as to need examination and enlargement. Warton, Pref. to Milton's Sm. Poems.

It is impossible not to notice a strange comment of Mr. Lindsey's. By. Horne, Lett. to Dr. Priestley, p. 41.

NOTIFICATION. n. s. [notification, French, from notify.] Act of making known; representation by marks or symbols.

Four or five torches elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or longways, may, by agreement, give great variety of notifications. Holder on Speech.

TO NO'TIFY. v. a. [notifier, French; notifico, Latin.] To declare; to make known; to publish.

There are other kind of laws, which notify the will of God. Hooker.

Good and evil operate upon the mind of man, by those respective appellations by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South.

This solar month is by civil sanction notified in authentic calendars the chief measure of the year: a kind of standard by which we measure time. Holder.

NO'TION. n. s. [notion, French; notio, Latin.]

1. Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.

Being we are at this time to speak of the proper notion of the church, therefore I shall not look upon it as comprehending any more than the sons of men. Pearson.

The fiction of some beings which are not in nature; second notions, as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being. Dryden, St. of Innocence.

Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind. South.

What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write. Newton, Opticks.

There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and its laws; and yet few agree in their notions about these words. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

That notion of hunger, cold, sound, colour, thought, wish, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, wish, &c. Watts, Logic.

2. Sentiment; opinion.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares, And not molest us; unless we ourselves Seek them with wandering thoughts and notions vain. Milton, P. L.

It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themselves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbours. Addison, Freeholder.

Sensual wits they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come. Atterbury.

3. Sense; understanding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakespeare, but not in use.

His notion weakens, his discernings
Are lethargied. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
So told, as earthly notion can receive. Milton, P. L.

NO'TIONAL. adj. [from notion.]

1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in idea; visionary; fantastical.

The general and indefinite contemplations and notions, of the elements and their conjunctions, of the influences of heaven, are to be set aside, being but notional and ill-limited; and definite axioms are to be drawn out of measured instances. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Happiness, object of that waking dream
Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.

We must be wary, least we ascribe any real subsistence or personality to this nature or chance; for it is merely a notional and imaginary thing; an abstract universal, which is properly nothing; a conception of our own making, occasioned by our reflecting upon the settled course of things; denoting only thus much, that all those bodies move and act according to their essential properties, without any consciousness or intention of so doing. Bentley.

2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.

The most forward notional dictators sit down in a contented ignorance. Glanville, Scipias.

NOTIONALITY.† n. s. [from notional.]

Empty, ungrounded opinion. Not now in use.

I aimed at the advance of science, by discrediting empty and talkative notionalty. Glanville.

True and manly religion is no cold and comfortless thing; it is not a lukewarm notionality, not a formal and bayardly round of duties, not a dull "temperamentum ad pondus," as they call it; but is lively, vigorous, and sparkling.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

NO'TIONALLY adv. [from notional.] In idea; mentally; in our conception, though not in reality.

The whole rational nature of man consists of two faculties, understanding and will, whether really or notionally distinct, I shall not dispute.

Norris, Miscell.

NO'TIONIST* n. s. [from notion.] One who holds an ungrounded opinion. Not in use.

Content not yourselves with some part of it, that you read, the Gospel, or New Testament, but neglect the Old, as is the practice of some flush notionists.

Bp. Haykins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 297.

NOTORI'ETY, n. s. [notoriété, French; from notorious.] Public knowledge; public exposure.

We see what a multitude of pagan testimonies may be produced for all those remarkable passages; and indeed of several that more than answer your expectation, as they were not subjects in their own nature so exposed to public notoriety.

Addison on the Chr. Religion.

NOTO'RIOUS, adj. [notorius, Lat.; no-taire, French.] Publicly known; evident to the world; apparent; not hidden. It is commonly used of things known to their disadvantage; whence by those who do not know the true signification of the word, an atrocious crime is called a notorious crime, whether public or secret.

What need you make such ado in cloaking a matter too notorious?

Whitegift.

The goodness of your intercepted packets You write to the pope against the king; your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.

Shakespeare.

I shall have law in Ephesus, To your notorious shame. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

In the time of king Edward III. the impediments of the conquest of Ireland are notorious?

Overbury, Charact.

NOTT* adj. [hnot, Saxon.] Smooth; shorn. Nott sheep, i. e. sheep without horns; Essex. That field is nott, i. e. well tilled; Berkshire. Grose. Hence the adjectives, now obsolete, nott-headed, nott-pated, having the hair cut short; from the "head being like a nut," according to Mr. Tyrwhitt and others. But the Saxon word hnot, is smooth, cropped, shorn.

A notte head hadde he, with a hroune visage.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

To NOTT,† v. a. To shear. Dr. Johnson cites this verb on the authority of Ainsworth. It is in the dictionary of Barret in 1580.

He caused — from thenceforth his beard to be notted, and no more shaven.

Stowe, Ann. under the Year 1535.

NO'TWHEAT, n. s. [not and wheat.]

Of wheat there are two sorts; French, which is bearded, and requireth the best soil, and notwheat, so termed because it is unbarbed, being contented with a meaner earth.

Carew.

NOTWITHSTA'NDING, conj. [This word, though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withstanding, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante. It is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute with a noun; as, he is rich notwithstanding his loss; it is not so proper to say, he is rich notwithstanding he has lost much; yet this mode of writing is too frequent; Addison has used it: but when a sentence follows, it is more grammatical to insert that; as, he is rich notwithstanding that he has lost much. When withstanding is used absolutely, the expression is elliptical, this, or that being understood, as in the following passages of Hooker.]

1. Without hindrance or obstruction from.

Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures, were so transported that their gratitude made them, notwithstanding his prohibition, proclaim the wonders he had done for them.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

2. Although. This use is not proper.

A person languishing under an ill habit of body, may lose several ounces of blood, notwithstanding it will weaken him for a time, in order to put a new ferment into the remaining mass, and draw into it fresh supplies.

Addison.

3. Nevertheless; however.

They which honour the law as an image of the wisdom of God himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. Hooker.

The knowledge is small, which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven: notwithstanding this much we know even of saints in heaven, that they pray.

Hooker.

He hath a tear for pity, and a hand

Open as day, for melting charity:

Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint;

As humorous as winter. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

NOT'US, n. s. [Latin.] The southwind.

With adverse blast upturns them from the south

Notus, and Afer black with thunderous clouds

From Serrallona. Milton, P. L.

NOVA'TION,† n. s. [novation, old French novatio, Latin.] The introduction of something new.

I shall easily grant, that novations in religion are a main cause of distempers in commonwealths.

Abp. Laud, Hist. of his Troubles, ch. 3.

NOVA'TOR, n. s. [Latin.] The introducer of something new.

NO'VEL,† adj. [novel, old French; nouvelle, modern; novellus, Latin.]

1. New; not ancient; not used of old; unusual.

The Presbyterians are exacters of submission to their novel injunctions, before they are stamped with the authority of laws.

King Charles.

It is no novel usurpation, but though void of other title, has the prescription of many ages.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

Such is the constant strain of this blessed saint, who every where brands the Arian doctrine, as the new, novel, upstart heresy, folly and madness.

Waterland.

2. [In the civil law.] Appendant to the code, and of later enactment.

By the novel constitutions, before they are denied to any one.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

NO'VEL,† n. s. [nouvelle, French.]

1. Novelty.

[They] loving novels, full of affectation,

Receive the manners of each other nation.

Sylvestre, Du Bart. (1621.)

It is the condition of common people to press into the view of such novels.

Comment on Chaucer, (1665,) p. 56.

2. A small tale, generally of love.

To nought more, Thenot, my mind is bent,

Than to hear novels of his devise;

They ben so well thewed, and so wise,

Whatever that good old man bespake.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

Such as the old woman told Psyche in Apuleius, Boccace's novels, and the rest.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 271.

Nothing of a foreign nature; like the trifling novels which Ariosto inserted in his poems.

Dryden.

Her mangled fame in barbarous pastime lost, The coxcomb's novel and the drunkard's toast.

Prior.

3. A law annexed to the code.

By the civil law, no one was to be ordained a presbyter till he was thirty-five years of age: though by a later novel it was sufficient, if he was above thirty.

Ayliffe.

NO'VELIST* n. s. [from novel.] Innovator.

The other three [positions] are disciplinarian in the present way of novellism.

Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 44.

NO'VELIST,† n. s. [from novel.]

1. Innovator; assertor of novelty. In this sense the word was also written noveller.

Telesius, who hath renewed the philosophy of Parmenides, is the best of novelists.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The fathers of this synod were not schismatical, or novelists in the matter of the sabbath.

White.

They ought to keep that day, which these novellers teach us to contemn.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 303.

Aristotle rose,

Who nature's secrets to the world did teach,

Yet that great soul our novelists impeach. Denham.

The fooleries of some affected novelist have discredited new discoveries.

Glanville, Scepis.

The abettors and favourers of them he ranks with the Abonites, Argemonites, and Samosetarians, condemn'd heretics, brands them as novelists of late appearing.

Waterland.

2. A writer of news. Not now in use.

My contemporaries the novelists have, for the better spinning out paragraphs, and working down to the end of their columns, a most happy art in saying and unsaying, giving hints of intelligence, and interpretations of indifferent actions, to the great disturbance of the brains of ordinary readers.

Tatler, No. 178.

3. A writer of novels, or tales. This is a modern usage of the word.

The best stories of the early and original Italian novelists, — appeared in an English dress, before the close of the reign of Elizabeth.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 487.

Our novelists, like Sam Foote in his farces, often touch upon real characters.

Pegge, Anonym. vii. 21.

To NOVELIZE.* v. a. [from novel.] To innovate; to change by introducing novelties.

The novelizing spirit of man lives by variety, and the new faces of things.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 25.

M. Wilkinson, not taken out of the depth of divinity, but fitly chosen to discover how affections do stand to be novelized by the mutability of the present times. Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 44.

The Holy Scriptures should be interpreted not by novelizing humourists, but by the primitive fathers and councils.

Archd. Answay, Tablet of Mod. (1661.) p. 54.

NOVELTY.† n. s. [nouvelé, old French.]

1. Newness; state of being unknown to former times.

They which do that which men of account did before them, are, although they do amiss, yet the less faulty, because they are not the authors of harm: and doing well, their actions are freed from prejudice or novelty.

Hooker.

2. Freshness; recentness; newness with respect to a particular person.

Novelty is only in request; and it is dangerous to be aged in any kind of course.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

As religion entertains our speculations with great objects, so it entertains them with new; and novelty is the great parent of pleasure; upon which account it is that men are so much pleased with variety.

South.

NOVEMBER. n. s. [Latin.] The eleventh month of the year, or the ninth reckoned from March, which was, when the Romans named the months, accounted the first.

November is drawn in a garment of changeable green, and black upon his head.

Peacham on Drawing.

NO'VFNARY. n. s. [novenarius, Lat.] Number of nine; nine collectively.

Ptolemy by parts and numbers implieth climacterical years; is septenaries and novenaries.

Brown.

Looking upon them as in their original differences and combinations, and as selected out of a natural stock of nine quaternions, four novenaries, their nature and differences lie most obvious to be understood.

Holder.

NOVE'NNIAL.* adj. [novenus, Lat.] Done every ninth year.

Bullockar.

A novennial festival, celebrated by the Bœotians, in honour of Apollo.

Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. ch. 20.

NOVE'RCAL. adj. [novercalis, from noverca, Latin.] Having the manner of a step-mother; beseeeming a stepmother.

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation, produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novercal way.

Derham.

NOUGHT.† n. s. [ne auht, not any thing, Saxon; as therefore we write ought not ought for any thing, we should, according to analogy, write ought not ought for nothing; but a custom has irreversibly prevailed of using ought for bad, and ought for nothing. Dr. Johnson.

— This custom originated in the desire of distinguishing, injudiciously conducted. There is indeed no real ground for a distinction; the word ought, in the sense of wicked, being only a figurative signification of ought, nothing; meaning worthless, or nothing worth, nothing in point of value or goodness. Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 300. — The regular deduction of this word, from its original, will warrant the writing it either ought or nought: M. Goth. niwaiht, from ni, the negative particle, and waitht, the smallest thing possible, our whit; and thus the Sax. naphit, and also nophit; nauht, and noht. See also WHIT.]

1. Not any thing; nothing.

Who cannot see this palpable device?

Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not?

Bad is the world, and it will come to nought,

When such ill dealings must be seen in thought.

Shakspeare.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth e'ry passion:

Reneg, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks

With every gale and vary of their masters,

As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

Shakspeare.

We are of nothing, and your work of nought.

Is. xli. 24.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of bell,

And devilish machinations come to nought.

Milton, P. R.

2. In no degree. A kind of adverbial signification, which nothing has sometimes.

In young Rinaldo fierce desires he spy'd,

And noble heart, of rest impatient,

To wealth or sovereign power he nought apply'd.

Fairfax.

3. To set at NOUGHT. Not to value; to slight; to scorn; to disregard.

Ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof.

Prov. i. 25.

NO'VICE.† n. s. [novice, French; novitiis, Latin.] Dr. Johnson. — The word is very old in the French language. Huoloet gives our word in the form of no-phice, with the Lat. neophitus, a neophyte.]

1. One not acquainted with any thing; a fresh man; one in the rudiments of any knowledge.

Triple-twin'd where! 'tis thou

Has sold me to this novice. Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleop.

You are novices; 'tis a world to see

How time, when men and women are alone,

A meacock wretch can make the curstest shew.

Shakspeare.

We have novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fail.

Bacon.

If any unexperienced young novice happens in to the fatal neighbourhood of such pests, presently they are playing his full purse and his empty pate.

South.

I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractic'd to persuade;
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But caught myself lie struggling in the snare.

And she I love, or laughs at all my pain,
Or knows her worth too well, and pays me with disdain.

Dryden.

In these experiments I have set down such circumstances by which either the phenomenon might be rendered more conspicuous, or a novice might more easily try them, or by which I did try them only.

Newton, Opticks.

2. One who has entered a religious house, but not yet taken the vow; a probationer.

Fran. When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men

But in the presence of the prioress. —

Luc. Hall, virgin, if you be; as those check-roses

Proclaim you are no less! Can you so stead me,

As bring me to the sight of Isabella,

A novice of this place. Shakspeare. Meas. for Meas.

NOVI'TIATE.† n. s. [noviciat, French.]

1. The state of a novice; the time in which the rudiments are learned.

This is so great a masterpiece in sin, that he must have passed his tyrocinium or novitiate in sinning, before he come to this, be he never so quick a proficient.

South.

2. The time spent in a religious house, by way of trial, before the vow is taken.

None were admitted into this order, but after a long and laborious novitiate.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. i. 1.

3. Once used by Addison, improperly, for a novice.

The abbess had been informed the night before of all that had passed between her novice and father Francis. Spectator, No. 164.

NOVI'TIOUS.* adj. [novitiis, Lat.] Newly invented.

What is now taught by the church of Rome, is, as unwarrantable, so a novitious interpretation.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 9.

NO'VITY.† n. s. [novitas, Lat.] Newness; novelty.

Some conceive she might not yet be certain, that only man was privileged with speech, and being in the novity of the creation and unexperience of all things, might not be affrighted to hear a serpent speak.

Brown.

It remaineth that we stedfastly believe, not only that the heavens and earth and all the host of them were made, and so acknowledge a creation, or an actual and immediate dependence of all things on God; but also that all things were created by the hand of God, in the same manner, and at the same time, which are delivered unto us in the books of Moses by the Spirit of God, and so acknowledge a novity, or no long existence of the creature.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

NOUL.† n. s. [hnoI, Sax. a top, a head; nol, Germ.] The crown or top of the head; the head itself. See NODDLE, and NOLL.

Softly, quoth the steward, it lieth all in thy noll,

Both wit and wysdom. Hist. of Berym, (1524.)

Then came October full of merry glee;

For yet his noul was totty of the must.

Spenser, F. Q. vii. vii. 39.

NOULD.† Ne would; would not.

His enemy

Had kindled such coles of displeasure,

That the Goodman would stay his léasure,

But home him hasted with furious beate.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

NOUN. n. s. [noun, old French; nomen, Lat.] The name of any thing in grammar.

A noun is the name of a thing, whether substance, mode or relation, which in speech is used to signify the same when there is occasion to affirm or deny any thing about it, or to express any relation it has to any other thing. Clarke.

Thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun and a verb, and such abominable words as no christian ear can endure to hear.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The boy, who scarce has paid his entrance down, To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.

NOU'RICE,* n. s. [French, nourrice.] A nurse.

It shall be expedient, that a noble man's son, in his infancy, have with him continually one such as may accustom him, by little and little, to speake pure and elegant Latin: the nourishes and other women about him, if it be possible, to do the same.

Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 16. b.
Camden! the nourice of antiquite,
And lanterne unto late succeeding age.

Spenser, Ruins of Time.

To NOU'RISH. v. a. [nourrir, French; nutrio, Lat.]

1. To encrease or support by food, or aliment of any kind.

He planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it.

Thro' her nourish'd powers enlarg'd by thee,
She springs aloft.

You are to honour, improve, and perfect the spirit that is within you: you are to prepare it for the kingdom of heaven, to nourish it with the love of God, and of virtue, to adorn it with good works, and to make it as holy and heavenly as you can.

2. To support; to maintain.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm.

Shakspeare.

Him will I follow, and this house forgo
That nourish me a maid.

Chapman.

Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son.

3. To encourage; to foment. Out of use.

What madness was it with such proofs to nourish their contentions, when there were such effectual means to end all controversy?

Hooker.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion.

Shakspeare.

Yet to nourish and advance the early virtue of young persons was his more chosen desire.

Fell.

Gorgias hired soldiers, and nourished war continually with the Jews.

2 Mac. x. 14.

4. To train, or educate.

Thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith.

1 Tim. iv. 6.

I travel not, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins.

Is. xliii. 4.

5. To promote growth or strength, as food.

In vegetables there is one part more nourishing than another; as grains and roots nourish more than their leaves.

Bacon.

To NOU'RISH. v. n. To gain nourishment.

Unusual.

Fruit trees grow full of moss, which is caused partly by the coldness of the ground, whereby the parts nourish less.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

NOU'RISH,* n. s. [from the verb.] A nurse.

The word, however, in the following passage of Shakspeare has been doubted.

Pope, and Warburton, and Ritson, would have it to be marish. Steevens and Malone defend the old reading. Now certainly obsolete.

Adiens —
Was called nourish of philosophers wise.

Lydgate, Trag. of J. Bochas, B. i. c. xii.

Our isle be made a nourish of salt tears,
And none but women left to wait the dead.

Shaks. K. Hen. VI. P. I.

NOU'RISHABLE,† adj. [from nourish.] Susceptive of nourishment.

These are the bitter herbs, wherewith if we shall eat this passover, we shall find it most wholesome and nourishable unto us to eternal life.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 197.

The chyle is mixed herewith, partly for its better conversion into blood, and partly for its more ready adhesion to all the nourishable parts.

Grew, Cosmol.

NOU'RISHER. n. s. [from nourish.] The person or thing that nourishes.

Sleep, chief nourisher in life's feast. Shakspeare.

A restorer of thy life, and a nourisher of thee old age.

Ruth.

Milk warm from the cow is a great nourisher, and a good remedy in consumptions.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Bran and swine's dung laid up together to rot is a very great nourisher and comfortor to a fruit tree.

Bacon.

Please to taste

These bounties, which our nourisher hath caus'd
The earth to yield.

Milton, P. L.

NOU'RISHMENT. n. s. [nourissement, Fr.]

1. That which is given or received, in order to the support or encrease of growth or strength; food; sustenance; nutriment.

When the nourishment grows unfit to be assimilated, or the central heat grows too feeble to assimilate it, the motion ends in confusion, putrefaction, and death.

Newton, Opticks.

2. Nutrition; support of strength.

By temperance taught,
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence

Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight.

Milton, P. L.

The limbs are exhausted by what is called an atrophy, and grow lean and thin by a defect of nourishment, occasioned by an inordinate scorbutic or erratic heat.

Blackmore.

3. Sustentation; supply of things needful.

He instructeth them, that as in the one place they use to refresh their bodies, so they may in the other learn to seek the nourishment of their souls.

Hooker.

NOU'RITURE,† n. s. [nourriture, French: this was afterwards contracted to nurture.] Education; institution.

Thither the great magician Merlin came,
As was his use, oftimes to visit me;

For he had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutors nouriture to oversee.

Spenser.

Repaying thankfully the nouriture, which themselves received whiles they were young.

Brysket, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606), p. 75.

This trade also, connected at the root, deriving its nouriture from the same sources, — must have come within the sphere of the same attraction.

Pownall on Antiq. (1782), p. 94.

To NOU'RISLE,* v. a. [nourir, French. See also To NOUSLE.] To nurse up.

Whether ye list him traine in chivalry,
Or nourish up in lore of learn'd philosophy.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 35.

NOU'RSLING,† n. s. The creature nursed, nursing.

A little noursting of the humid air.

Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

To NOU'SLE,† v. a. [The same I believe with nuzzle, and both, in their original import, corrupted from nursle.] To nurse up.

Bald friars and knavish shavelings — sought to nouse the common people in ignorance, lest, being once acquainted with the truth of things, they would in time smell out the untruth of their packed pelt and masse-penny religion.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal. June.

Mothers, who, to nouse up their babes,
Thought nought too curious.

Shaks. Pericles.

To NOU'SLE. v. a. [nuzzle, noozle, noose, or nose; from nose.] To entrap; to ensnare; as in a noose or trap. They nuzzle hogs to prevent their digging, that is, put a ring in their noses.

NOW,† adv. [nowh, nu, M. Gothick; nu, Su. Goth. and Sax.]

1. At this time; at the time present.

Thy servants' trade hath been about cattle, from our youth even until now.

Gen. xlv. 34.

Refer all the actions of this short and dying life to that state which will shortly begin, but never have an end; and this will approve itself to be wisdom at last, whatever the world judge of it now.

Tillotson.

Now that languages abound with words standing for such combinations, an usual way of getting these complex ideas, is by the explication of those terms that stand for them.

Locke.

A patient of mine is now living, in an advanced age, that thirty years ago did, at several times, cast up from the lungs a large quantity of blood.

Blackmore.

2. A little while ago; almost at the present time.

Now the blood of twenty thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are dead.

Shakspeare.

How frail our passions!
They that but now for honour and for plate,
Made the sea blush, with blood resign their hate.

Waller.

3. At one time; at another time.

Now high, now low, now master up, now miss.

Pope.

4. It is sometimes a particle of connection, like the French or, and Latin autem; as, if this be true, he is guilty; now this is true, therefore he is guilty.

Now whatsoever he did or suffered, the end thereof was to open the doors of the kingdom of heaven, which our iniquities had shut up.

Hooker.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him. Now to affect the malice of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them.

Shakspeare.

Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man, but Barabbas; now Barabbas was a robber.

St. John.

Natural reason persuades man to love his neighbour, because of similitude of kind: because mutual love is necessary for man's welfare and preservation, and every one desires another should love him. Now it is a maxim of Nature, that one do to others, according as he would himself be done to.

White.

Pheasants, which are granivorous birds, the young live mostly upon ants' eggs. Now birds, being of a hot nature, are very voracious, therefore there had need be an infinite number of insects produced for their sustenance.

Ray.

The other great and undoing mischief which befalls men, is by their being misrepresented. Now by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to others in the way of slander and detraction.

South.

Helim bethought himself, that the first day of the full moon of the month Tizpa, was near at hand. Now it is a received tradition among the Persians, that the souls of the royal family, who are in a state of bliss, do, on the first full moon after their decease, pass through the eastern gate of the black palace.

Addison, Guardian.

The praise of doing well
Is to the ear, as ointment to the smell.
Now if some flies, perchance, however small,
Into the alabaster urn should fall,
The odours die.

The only motives that can be imagined of obedience to laws, are either the value and certainty of rewards, or an apprehension of justice and severity. Now neither of these, exclusive of the other, is the true principle of our obedience to God.

A human body a forming in such a fluid in any imaginable posture, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law. There will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above. Now what can make the heavier particles of bone ascend above the lighter ones of flesh, or depress these below those, against the tendency of nature?

5. After this; since things are so, in familiar speech.

How shall any man distinguish now betwixt a parasite and a man of honour, where hypocrisy and interest look so like duty and affection?

6. Now and then; at one time and another uncertainly. This word means, with regard to time, what is meant by here and there, with respect to place.

Now and then they ground themselves on human authority, even when they most pretend divine.

Now and then something of extraordinary, that is any thing of your production, is requisite to refresh your character.

A most effectual argument against spontaneous generation is, that there is no new species produced, which would now and then happen, were there any such thing.

He who resolves to walk by the gospel rule of forbearing all revenge, will have opportunities every now and then to exercise his forgiving temper.

They now and then appear in the offices of religion, and avoid some scandalous enormities.

7. Now and then are applied to places considered as they rise to notice and succession.

A mead here, there a heath, and now and then a wood.

Now, n. s. Present moment. A poetical use.

Nothing is there to come, and nothing past,
But an eternal now does ever last.

She vanish'd, now we scarcely say she dy'd,
For but a now did heaven and earth divide.

This moment perfect health, the next was death.

Not less ev'n in this despicable now
Than when my name fill'd Africk with affrights.

Nowadays.† adv. [now and adays, i. e. on days. So Gower. "Now on days." Conf. Am. B. 5. See ADAYS. This word, though common and used by the best writers, is perhaps barbarous.] In the present age.

Not so great as it was wont of yore,
It's nowadays, ne half so straight and sore.

Reason and love keep little company together nowadays.

It was a vestal and a virgin fire, and diffused as much from that which passes by this name nowadays, as the vital heat from the burning of a fever.

Such are those principles, which by reason of the bold cavils of perverse and unreasonable men, we are nowadays put to defend.

What men of spirit nowadays,
Come to give sober judgement of new plays.

Garrick.

Noway.* adv. [no and ways. Dr. Johnson has hastily condemned this expression, under nowise. See NOWISE.] Not in any manner or degree.

Wherever a considerable number of authorities can be produced in support of two different though resembling modes of expression for the same thing, there is always a divided use, and one cannot be said to speak barbarously, or to oppose the usage of the language, who conforms to either side. Of this divided use the words nowise, noway, and noways, afford a proper instance. Yet our learned lexicographer hath denominated all those, who either write or pronounce the word noways, ignorant barbarians. These ignorant barbarians (but he surely hath not adverted to this circumstance) are only Pope, and Swift, and Addison, and Locke, and several others of our most eminent writers. This censure is the more astonishing, that, even in this form which he has thought fit to repudiate, the meaning assigned to it is strictly conformable to that which etymology, according to his own explication, would suggest. See the senses of the word way marked with these numbers, 15, 16, 18, and 19.

Campbell, Philos. of Rhetorick.

No'wed. adj. [noué, Fr.] Knotted; inwreathed.

Reuben is conceived to bear three barres waved, Judah a lion rampant, Dan a serpent nowed.

Brown.

No'wel.* n. s. [Fr. noel, noël: which Menage derives from the Lat. natalis; and Borel from the Lat. novus, being a corruption of the Fr. nouvel. "From gnoul, signifying a child in Hebrew, comes the French word noel, signifying the child's day, (by way of distinction,) or Christmas-day; of which word the French critics give but a very slender and imperfect account, as may be seen in the dictionary of Trevoux, and Monsieur Menage." Harris on the 53d Ch. of Isaiah, 2d edit. 1739. Pref. p. 34.] A cry of joy; originally a shout of joy at Christmas. Obsolete.

And novel crieth every lusty man.

Chaucer, Frankl. Tale.

Nowes. n. s. [from nou, old French.] The marriage knot. Out of use.

Thou shalt look round about and see
Thousands of crown'd souls throng to be Themselves thy crown, sons of thy nowes;
The virgin births with which they spouse
Made fruitful thy fair soul.

Crashaw.

No'where. adv. [no and where.] Not in any place.

Some men of whom we think very reverently, have in their books and writings nowhere mentioned or taught that such things should be in the church.

Hooker.

True pleasure and perfect freedom are nowhere to be found but in the practice of virtue. Tillotson.

No'wise.† adv. [no and wise; this is commonly spoken and written by ignorant barbarians, noways. Dr. Johnson. — The censure is not just. See NOWAY. The noun wise, signifying manner, is quite obsolete. It remains now only in composition, in which along with an adjective, or other substantive, it forms an adverb or conjunction. Such are length- wise, coastwise, likewise, &c. These always preserve the compound form; and never admit a preposition; consequently nowise, which is an adverb of the same order, ought analogically to be written in one word, and not to be preceded by it. Campbell, Phil. of Rhet. — Dr. Johnson's solitary example from Bentley gives this word with the preposition: but I add from Barrow, one of our finest writers, an example which confirms the judicious reasoning of Campbell.] Not in any manner or degree.

No, God was so to prosecute his designs of goodness and mercy, as thereby nowise to impair or obscure, but rather to advance and illustrate, the glories of his sovereign dignity, of his severe justice, of his immaculate holiness, of his unchangeable steadiness in word and purpose.

Barrow, Serm. on G. Friday, (1677.)

A power of natural gravitation, without contact or impulse, can in nowise be attributed to mere matter.

Bentley.

Nowl.* See NOUL.

NO'XIOUS. adj. [noxius, Lat.]

1. Hurtful; harmful; baneful; mischievous; destructive; pernicious; unwholesome.

Preparation and correction, is not only by addition of other bodies, but separation of noxious parts from their own.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Kill noxious creatures, where 'tis sin to save,

This only just prerogative we have.

See pale Orion sheds unwholesome dew,

Arise, the pines a noxious shade diffuse;

Sharp Boreas blows, and nature feels decay.

Time conquers all, and we must time obey.

Noxious seeds of the disease are contained in a smaller quantity in the blood.

Blackmore.

2. Guilty; criminal.

Those who are noxious in the eye of the law, are justly punished by them to whom the execution of the law is committed.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

3. Unfavourable; unkindly.

Too frequent an appearance in places of much resort, is noxious to spiritual promotions.

Swift, Miscell.

No'xiousness.† n. s. [from noxious. Pronounced new and uncouth, in 1656, by P. Heylin.] Hurtfulness; insalubrity.

The writers of politics have warned us of the noxiousness of this doctrine to all civil governments, which the christian religion is very far from disturbing.

Hammond.

No'xiously. adv. [from noxious.] Hurtfully; perniciously.

To NOY.† v. a. [noyen, Teut.] To annoy. Not now in use. Dr. Johnson has printed this word noie, and its derivatives noiance, noious, &c. But our best old writers, and our old lexicography, are in favour of the orthography before us.

He noyede him nothing, [hurt him not, present version.]

Wicliffe, St. Luke, lv. 35.

The heat whereof, and harmful pestilence,

So sore him noy'd, that forc'd him to retire.

Let servant be ready with mattock in hand,

To stub out the bushes that *noiet*h the land.

Tusser.

NOY.* n. s. Annoy. Not in use.

He shall sustain no noy.

Hist. of Sir Clyomon, [1599.] sign. G. i. b.

NO'YANCE.† n. s. Mischief; inconvenience. See ANNOYANCE.

A cloud of cumbrous gnatts doe him molest,
All striving to infixe their feeble stings,
That from their noyance he no where can rest;
But with his clownish hands their tender wings
He brusheth oft, and oft doth mar their murmuring. Spenser, F. Q.

To borrow to day, and to-morrow to miss,
For lender and borrower noyance it is. Tusser.
The single and peculiar life is bound,
With all the strength and armour of the mind,
To keep itself from noyance. Shaksp. Hamlet.

NO'YER.† n. s. [from noy.] One who annoys. Not in use.

The north is a noier to grass of all suits,
The east a destroyer to herbs and all fruits. Tusser.

NO'YFUL.* adj. [noy and full.] Noisome; hurtful. Obsolete. Huloet.
Very execrable and noyfull to them that shall receive them. Bale, Yet a Course, &c. fol. 88.

NO'YOUS.† adj. [from noy; Ital. noioso.] Hurtful; troublesome; inconvenient. Obsolete.

We be delivered fro noyouse and yvele men.
Wicliffe, 2 Thess. iii. 2.
Being bred in a hot country, they found much hair on their faces to be noyous unto them. Spenser.

The false Duessa leaving noyous night,
Return'd to stately palace of dame Pride.

NO'YSANCE.* n. s. Offence; trespass; nuisance. The word is now nuisance.
Or suffer that may be noysance
Again our old accustomed. Chaucer's Dream. ver. 255.

NO'ZLE.† n. s. [nazal, old Fr. from naz, the nose.] The nose; the snout; the end.

It is nothing but a paulty old sconce, with the nose broke off. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribb.

TO NO'BBLE.† v. a. [properly to knubble, or knobble, from knob, for a clenched fist. Dr. Johnson.—Skinner derives knubble, to beat, from knippler, Danish.] To bruise with handy cuffs. Ainsworth.

NUB'FEROUS. adj. [nubifer, Lat.] Bringing clouds. Dict.

TO NU'BILATE. v. a. [nubilo, Latin.] To cloud. Dict.

NU'BILE. adj. [nubile, Fr. nubilis, Lat.] Marriageable; fit for marriage.
The cowslip smiles, in brighter yellow dress,
Than that which veils the nubile virgin's breast. Prior.

NU'BILIOUS.* adj. [nubilus, Lat.] Cloudy. Bailey.

NUC'FEROUS. adj. [nuces and fero, Lat.] Nutbearing. Dict.

NU'CLEUS. n. s. [Latin.] A kernel; any thing about which matter is gathered or conglobated.

The crusts are each in all parts nearly of the same thickness, their figure suited to the nucleus, and the outer surface of the stone exactly of the same form with that of the nucleus. Woodward on Fossils.

NU'DATION. n. s. [nudation, French, nudo, Lat.] The act of making bare or naked.

NUDE.* adj. [nud, French, nudus, Lat.] Bare; naked. Bullockar.

Contract by nude paroles, i. e. by bare words, Huloet, in V. Contracte.

NU'DITY.† n. s. [nuditè, Fr. nudus, Lat.] Naked parts; nakedness; poverty. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

There are no such licences permitted in poetry any more than in painting, to design and colour obscene nudities. Dryden.

The man who shews his heart,
Is hooted for his nudities, and scorn'd. Young, Night Th. 8.

NU'EL. See NEWEL.

NUGA'CITY.† n. s. [nugax, nugacis, Lat.] Futility; trifling talk or behaviour.

Such arithmetical nugacities as are ordinarily recorded for his. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653.) p. 155.

NUGA'TION. n. s. [nugor, Latin.] The act or practice of trifling.

The opinion that putrefaction is caused either by cold or peregrine and preternatural heat, is but nugation. Bacon.

NUGATORY. adj. [nugatorius, Latin.] Trifling; futile; insignificant.

Some great men of the last age, before the mechanical philosophy was revived, were too much addicted to this nugatory art: when occult quality, and sympathy and antipathy were admitted for satisfactory explications of things. Bentley.

NU'SANCE. n. s. [nuisance, French.]

1. Something noxious or offensive.
This is the liar's lot, he is accounted a pest and a nuisance; a person marked out for infamy and scorn. South.

A wise man who does not assist with his counsels, a rich man with his charity, and a poor man with his labour, are perfect nuisances in a commonwealth. Swift, Miscell.

2. [In law.] Something that incommodes the neighbourhood.

Nuisances, as necessary to be swept away, as dirt out of the streets. Kettlewell.

TO NULL. v. a. [nullus, Lat.] To annul; to annihilate; to deprive of efficacy or existence.

Thy fair enchanted cup, and warbling charms,
No more on me have power, their force is null'd. Milton, S. A.

Reason hath the power of nulling or governing all other operations of bodies. Grew, Cosmol.

NULL. adj. [nullus, Latin.] Void; of no force; ineffectual.

With what impatience must the muse behold
The wife, by her procuring husband sold?
For though the law makes null the adulterous deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryden.

Their orders are accounted to be null and invalid by many. Lesley.

The pope's confirmation of the church lands to those who hold them by King Henry's donation, was null and fraudulent. Swift, Miscell.

NULL. n. s. Something of no power or no meaning. Marks in ciphered writing, which stand for nothing, and are inserted only to puzzle, are called nulls.

If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon, War with Spain.

NULLIB'ETY. n. s. [from nullibi, Latin.] The state of being nowhere.

NULLIF'IDIAN.* adj. [Lat. nullus, none, and fides, faith.] Of no honesty; of no religion; of no faith. Bullockar.

A solifidian Christian is a nullifidian Pagan, and confutes his tongue with his hand. Feltham, Res. ii. 47.

TO NU'LLIFY.† v. a. [from nullus, Lat.] To annul; to make void.

You will say, that this nullifies all exhortations to piety; since a man, in this case, cannot totally come up to the thing he is exhorted to. But to this I answer, that the consequence does not hold: for an exhortation is not frustrate, if a man be but able to come up to it partially, though not entirely and perfectly. South, Sermon. vii. 95.

NU'LLITY. n. s. [nullité, French.]

1. Want of force or efficacy.

It can be no part of my business to overthrow this distinction, and to shew the nullity of it; which has been solidly done by most of our polemick writers. South.

The jurisdiction is opened by the party, in default of justice from the ordinary, as by appeals or nullities. Ayliffe.

2. Want of existence.

A hard body struck against another hard body, will yield an exterior sound, in so much as if the percussion be over soft, it may induce a nullity of sound; but never an interior sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

NUMB.† adj. [benumen, benumeb, Sax.] This word was formerly written num, as Mr. H. Tooke has also observed. How, or why, or when the b was added to it, he says, he knows not. Certain it is, I may add, that Milton omitted the b, and in later times Bentley. Nay, Dr. Johnson himself, in all the editions of his Dictionary, has given benum, not benumb. The etymon which Mr. Tooke gives of this word is from the Saxon niman, capere, eripere, to nim, to take away; that is, as Skinner also explains it by the Lat. membris captus, deprived of the use of the limbs.]

1. Torpid; deprived in a great measure of the power of motion and sensation; chill; motionless.

Like a stony statue, cold and numb. Shakespeare.
Leaning long upon any part maketh it numb and asleep; for that the compression of the part suffereth not the spirits to have free access; and therefore when we come out of it, we feel a stinging or pricking, which is the re-entrance of the spirits. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Producing chillness; benumbing.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did lap me
Even in his garments, and did give himself
All thin and naked to the numb cold night. Shakespeare.

TO NUMB. v. a. To make torpid; to make dull of motion or sensation; to deaden; to stupify.

Bedlam beggars with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms,
Pins, wooden-pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object from low farms,
Inforce their charity. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

She can unlock
The clasp of charm, and thaw the numbing spell. Milton, Comus.

Plough naked, swain, and naked sow the land,
For lazy winter numbs the lab'ring hand. Dryden.
Nought shall avail

The pleasing song, or well repeated tale,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.

NU'MBEDNESS. n. s. [from numbed.] Torpor; interruption of sensation.

If the nerve be quite divided, the pain is little, only a kind of stupor or numbedness. Wiseman, Surgery.

TO NU'MBER. v. a. [nombrer, French; numero, Latin.]

1. To count; to tell; to reckon how many.

If a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Gen. xiii. 16.

I will number you to the sword. Is. xiv. 12.

The gold, the vest, the tripods number'd o'er,
All these he found. Pope, Odys.

2. To reckon as one of the same kind.

He was numbered with the transgressors, and bare the sin of many. Is. liii. 12.

NUMBER.† n. s. [number, old French of the tenth century; nombre, modern; numerus, Latin.]

1. The species of quantity by which it is computed how many; either unity, or a multitude of units.

Hie thee from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The silver, the gold, and the vessels, were weighed by number and by weight. Ezra, viii. 34.

There is but one gate for strangers to enter at, that it may be known what numbers of them are in the town. Addison.

5. Any particular aggregate of units, as even or odd.

This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers: they say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

3. Many; more than one.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

Water lily hath a root in the ground; and so have a number of other herbs that grow in ponds. Bacon.

Ladies are always of great use to the party they espouse, and never fail to win over numbers. Addison.

4. Multitude that may be counted.

Of him came nations and tribes out of number.

2 Esdras, iii. 7.

Loud as from numbers without number.

Milton, P. L.

5. Comparative multitude.

Number itself importeth not much in arms, where the people are of weak courage: for, as Virgil says, it never troubles the wolf how many the sheep be. Bacon.

6. Aggregated multitude.

If you will, some few of you shall see the place; and then you may send for your sick, and the rest of your number, which ye will bring on land.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

Sir George Summers sent thither with nine ships and five hundred men, to a great part of their numbers in the isle of Bermudaz. Heylin.

7. Harmony; proportions calculated by number.

They, as they move

Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years tow'rd his all-cheering
lamp,

Milton, P. L.

8. Verses; poetry.

Then feed on thoughts that voluntary move,
Harmonious numbers as the wakeful bird
Sings darkling. Milton, P. L.

Yet should the muses bid my numbers roll
Strong as their charms, and gentle as their soul.

Pope.

9. [In grammar.]

In the noun is the variation or change of termination to signify a number more than one. When men first invented names, their application was to single things; but soon finding it necessary to speak of several things of the same kind together, they found it likewise necessary to vary or alter the noun.

Clark, Latin Grammar.

How many numbers is in nouns? —

— Two. Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

NUMBERER.† n. s. [from number.] One who numbers. Sherwood.

NUMBERFUL.* adj. [number and full.]

Many in number. Not in use.

About the year 700 great was the company of learned men of the English race, ye, so numberfull, that they upon the point excelled all nations in learning, piety, and zeal.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, (1653,) p. 50.

NUMBERLESS. adj. [from number.] Innumerable; more than can be reckoned.

I forgive all;

There cannot be those numberless offences

'Gainst me. Shakespeare.

About his chariot numberless were pour'd

Cherub and seraph. Milton, P. L.

Deserts so great,

Though numberless, I never shall forget. Denham.

The soul converses with numberless beings of her own creation. Addison, Spect.

Travels he then a hundred leagues,

And suffers numberless fatigues. Swift, Miscell.

NUMBERS.* n. s. pl. The title of the fourth book in the Old Testament.

This book is called by the name of Numbers in our language, because it begins with an account of the numbering of the people in the beginning of the second year after they came out of Egypt; though it contain a great many things besides that; particularly another numbering of them (ch. 26.) towards the conclusion of their travels in the wilderness. Bp. Patrick on Numbers.

NUMBLES.† n. s. [nomble, Fr.] The entrails of a deer. Bailey.

His glorious heart, as it were numbles, chopped in pieces. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 161.

NUMBNESS. n. s. [from numb.] Torpor;

interruption of action or sensation;

deadness; stupefaction.

Stir, nay, come away;

Bequeath to death your numbness, for from him

Dear life redeems you. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Till length of years,

And sedentary numbness craze my limbs

To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton, S. A.

Cold numbness strait bereaves

Her corpse of sense, and th' air her soul receives.

Denham.

Silence is worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it may proceed from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain, or make a stir. South.

NUMERABLE.† adj. [numerabilis, Latin.]

Capable to be numbered. Huloot.

So numerous in islands as they are scarce numerable. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 58.

NUMERAL. adj. [numeral, Fr.; from numerus, Lat.] Relating to number; consisting of number.

Some who cannot retain the several combinations of numbers in their distinct orders, and the dependance of so long a train of numeral progressions, are not able all their life-time regularly to go over any moderate series of numbers. Locke.

NUMERAL.* n. s. A numeral character or letter.

The learned Dr. Wallis, of Oxford, delivers it as his opinion, that the Indian or Arabick numerals were brought into Europe together with other Arabick learning, about the middle of the tenth century, if not sooner.

Astle, Orig. and Prog. of Writing, ch. 7.

NUMERALLY. adv. [from numeral.] According to number.

The blasts and undulatory breaths thereof, maintain no certainty in their course; nor are they numerally feared by navigators. Brown, Vulg. Err.

NUMERARY. adj. [numerus, Lat.] Any thing belonging to a certain number.

A supernumerary canon, when he obtains a prebend, becomes a numery canon.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

To NUMERATE. v. n. [numero, Lat.] To reckon; to calculate.

A boy of eight years old, who can barely read writing, and numerate well, is qualified by means of the guide to teach the four first rules of arithmetick. Lancaster.

NUMERATION. n. s. [numeration, French; numeratio, Latin.]

1. The art of numbering.

Numeration is but still the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole a new name or sign, whereby to know it from those before and after. Locke.

2. Number contained.

In the legs or organs of progression in animals, we may observe an equality of length, and parity of numeration. Brown.

3. The rule of Arithmetick which teaches the notation of numbers, and method of reading numbers regularly noted.

NUMERATOR. n. s. [Latin.]

1. One that numbers.

2. [Numerateur, Fr.] That number which serves as the common measure to others.

NUMERICAL. adj. [from numerus, Latin.]

1. Numeral; denoting number; pertaining to numbers.

The numerical characters are helps to the memory, to record and retain the several ideas about which the demonstration is made. Locke.

2. The same not only in kind or species, but number.

Contemplate upon his astonishing works, particularly in the resurrection and reparation of the same numerical body, by a re-union of all the scattered parts. South.

NUMERICALLY. adv. [from numerical.]

With respect to sameness in number.

I must think it improbable, that the sulphur of antimony would be but numerically different from the distilled butter or oil of roses. Boyle.

NUMERICK.* adj. [from numerus, Lat.]

The same in species and number.

This is the same numerick crew,

Which we so lately did subdue. Hudibras, i. iii.

Shew me the same numerick flea,

That bit your neck but yesterday. Swift to Delany.

NUMERIST. n. s. [from numerus, Lat.]

One that deals in numbers.

We cannot assign a respective fatality unto each which is concordant unto the doctrine of the numerists. Brown.

NUMEROSITY.† n. s. [numerosité, Fr.; from numerus, Lat.]

1. Number; the state of being numerous.

Of assertion, if numerosity of assertors were a sufficient demonstration, we might sit down herein as an unquestionable truth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It seems unlikely that the comets be Synods of stars that in wide heaven stray; Their smallness eke, and numerosity, Encreaseeth doubt, and lessens probability.

More, Infin. of Worlds, st. 87.

2. Harmony; numerous flow.

The numerosity of the sentence pleased the ear.

Parr on Education, p. 2.

NUMEROUS. adj. [numerosus, Latin.]

1. Containing many; consisting of many; not few; many.

Queen Elizabeth, was not so much observed for having a numerous, as a wise council. Bacon.

We reach our foes,
Who now appear so numerous and bold. Waller.
Many of our schisms in the west were never heard of by the numerous Christian churches in the east of Asia. Lestie.

2. Harmonious; consisting of parts rightly numbered; melodious; musical.

Thy heart, no ruder than the rugged stone,
I might, like Orpheus, with my numerous moan
Melt to compassion. Waller.

His verses are so numerous, so various, and so harmonious, that only Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, has surpassed him. Dryden.

NUMEROUSNESS.† n. s. [from numerous.]

1. The quality or state of being numerous.
The numerousness of these holy houses may easily be granted, seeing that a very few make up a Jewish congregation.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 89.

2. Harmony; musicalness.

That which will distinguish his style is, the numerousness of his verse. There is nothing so delicately turned in all the Roman language.

Dryden.

NUMISMATICS.* n. s. pl. [numismatique, Fr.; numismata, Lat.] The science of coins and medals.

NUMMARY. adj. [from nummus, Lat.] Relating to money.

The money drachma in process of time decreased; but all the while the ponderal drachma continued the same, just as our ponderal libra remains as it was, though the nummery hath much decreased. Arbutnot on Coins.

NUMMULAR. adj. [nummularius, Lat.] Relating to money. Dict.

NUMPS.* n. s. [probably from numb, dull, insensible.] A cant expression for a weak, foolish person.

These are villainous engines indeed; but take heart, numps! here is not a word of the stocks; and you need never stand in awe of any more honourable correction.

Bp. Parker, Rep. of Bilears. Transp. (1673), p. 85.

There is a certain creature called a grave hobby-horse, a kind of a she numps, that pretendeth to be pulled to a play, and must needs go to Bartholomew fair to look after the young folks.

Ld. Halifax.

1. The blue titmouse.

Sherwood.

2. A small kind of pigeon.

NUNCHION.† n. s. [corrupted from noon-shun, a meal eaten about noon, when country labourers usually retire from the heat of the sun, as Mr. Malone also has observed; citing the following passage from Browne, which Mr. Mason in his Supplement to Dr. Johnson's Dictionary has also given, with the definition of "a shady place to retire to at noon." But it is the meal, and not the place, which the poet means. Sherwood, in his Dict. 1632, calls it "a nunchions or nuncheon, an afternoones repast."] A piece of victuals eaten between meals.

That harvest folks (with curds and clouted cream,

With cheese and butter, cakes and cates ynow

That are the yeoman's from the yoke or cove)

On sheaves of corne, were at their noonshuns close.

The Gentiles nuncupated vows to them, [idols.]

Dr. Westfield, Serm. (1646), p. 65.

But how doth that will appear? In what table was it written? In what registers is it extant?

In whose presence did St. Peter nuncupate it.

Borrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

NUNCUPATION.* n. s. [nuncupatio, Lat.]

The act of naming.

God hath divers sons; some by adoption, and then he is made so; some by nuncupation, and then he is called so.

Farinodon's Serm. (1647), p. 5.

An instance of this manner of nuncupation take here from the author I promised you.

Gregory's Learned Works, (1684), p. 161.

NUNCUPATIVE.† adj. nuncupatus, Lat.]

NUNCUPATORY. } nuncupatif, French.]

1. Publicly or solemnly declaratory.

The same appareth by that nuncupative title wherewith both Heathens and Christians have honoured their oaths, in calling their swearing an oath of God. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622), p. 41.

2. Verbally pronounced; not written.

Wills nuncupatory and scriptory.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

Testaments are divided into two sorts; written and nuncupative; the latter depends merely upon oral evidence, being declared by the testator in extremis before a sufficient number of witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing. Blackstone.

NUNDINAL. } adj. [nundinal, French,

NUNDINARY. } from nundine, Lat.]

belonging to fairs. Dict.

TO NUNDINATE.* v. n. [nundinor, Lat.]

To buy and sell as at fairs. Cockeram.

NUNDINATION.* n. s. [nundination, Fr.]

Traffick at fairs and markets; any buying and selling. Cockeram.

Witness their penitentiary tax, wherein a man might see the price of his sin before hand; their common nundination of pardons; their absolving subjects from their oaths of allegiance.

Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, p. 149.

NUNNERY. n. s. [from nun.] A house of nuns; of women under a vow of chastity, dedicated to the severer duties of religion.

I put your sister into a nunnery, with a strict command not to see you, for fear you should have wrought upon her to have taken the habit.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

NUPTIAL. adj. [nuptial, French; nuptialis, Latin.]

Pertaining to marriage;

constituting marriage; used or done in marriage.

Confirm that amity

With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant

Bona to England's king. Shakspeare.

Because propagation of families proceedeth from the nuptial copulation, I desired to know of him what laws and customs they had concerning marriage. Bacon.

Then all in heat

They light the nuptial torch. Milton, P. L.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must pare off whatsoever is amiss, not eat of this sacrifice with a defiled head, nor come to this feast without a nuptial garment. Bp. Taylor.

Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,

The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed.

Dryden.

Let our eternal peace be seal'd by this,

With the first ardor of a nuptial kiss.

Dryden, Aurengz.

NUPTIALS.† n. s. like the Latin without singular. [nuptiae, Lat. Dr. Johnson. —

From nubo. "It has been an opinion long received, and almost as universally admitted, that "nuptie dictæ, quia

flammeo caput nubentis obvolvatur, quod antiqui obnubere vocarunt." But this is a custom evidently posterior to civil society, when ceremonies were instituted to give sanction and permanency to a rite, on which so much depended the good order and happiness of civil life.

The union, which was the origin of society, must have been antecedent to the rites ordained to make it legal. We must therefore search higher for the primitive signification of nubo. Dr. Taylor on the Civil Law, p. 287, mentions an Hebrew radix, consisting of the same elements, which signifies procreation, birth, &c. which he thinks bids fairer for the etymon than any other that can be assigned. But, with deference to so excellent a writer, I think that even this does not satisfy. To effect this union, there must have been something prior to the liberos procreare. For though the stipulation of the political contract was liberorum quærendorum causa; yet it is expressly mentioned in a law which Taylor quotes before, and afterwards enlarges upon, that "nuptias non concubitus sed consensus facit:" a law founded on the very essence, and natural principles, of marriage. And this signification, if we can discover it in nubo, will perhaps have the fairest claim to our preference: which I think we may be able to do, by shewing that nubo originally signified to assent, and is really the same as nuo. It is well known that the Eolic, the parent, or perhaps rather the sister, dialect of the Latin, made use of the digamma F, (which, as well as the Latin V, was pronounced like our W,) between two vowels: and thus nuo, nufo, i.e. nuvo; as from pluo came plui, pluvi, in the old Latin writers, in the same manner as they said fuvisti for fuisti, luvit for luit, &c. But the digamma, from the affinity of its sound, often became B: thus nuvo, nubo, as vado, bado; uro, (pronounced furo), buro, nuv: with which may be compared our burn, and fire, and anciently written fuyr. Though nuo does not exist by itself at present in the Latin language, it remains in its compounds annuo, renuo, &c. as buro in amburo, comburo, and bustum. It has been given as a reason for nubo being not spoken of the man, because it was the virgin only who veiled her head. But if there is any probability in what has been before proposed, this reason will fall to the ground. We may account for it otherwise, and consistently with the signification attributed to nubo. Viri est petere; virginis est assentiri, annuere, nubere. This privilege, allowed to the delicacy of the sex, is expressed by Milton, P. L. B. 8.

5 T

"Her virtue, and the conscience of
"her worth,
"That would be woo'd, and not un-
"sought be won."

If we add, that connubium implies the ratification of the union in the consent of both, it will confirm the observation, that nubo properly and originally signifies annuo, assentior; and therefore that connubium is consensus. Bp. Burgess, Ess. on the Study of Antiq. 2d. ed. p. 80.]

1. Marriage.

This is the triumph of the nuptial day,
My better nuptials, which in spite of fate,
For ever join me to my dear Morat.

Dryden, Aureng.

2. It is in Shakspeare singular, but contrarily to use.

Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial, which We two have sworn shall come. Shaks. W. Tale.

NURSE.† n. s. [nōice, Saxon; nourice, French; nource, old Eng. as in Barret's Alv. 1580. See also NURICE.]

1. A woman that has the care of another's child.

Unnatural curiosity has taught all women, but the beggar to find out nurses, which necessity only ought to commend.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

2. A woman that has care of a sick person.

Never master had

A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So feat, so nurse-like. Shakspeare, Cymb.

One Mrs. Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

3. One who breeds, educates, or protects.

Rome, the nurse of judgement,

Invited by your noble self, hath sent,
One general tongue unto us.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

We must lose

The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person
Our comfort in the country. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. An old woman in contempt.

Can tales more senseless, ludicrous, and vain,
By winter-fires old nurses entertain? Blackmore.

5. The state of being nursed.

Can wedlock know so great a curse,

As putting husbands out to nurse? Cleaveland.

6. In composition, any thing that supplies food. Dr. Johnson. — And also what is supplied by food or nursing.

Sweet nurse-child of the Spring's young hours,
Davies, Hymn 7. To the Rose, (1622.)

Put into your breeding pond three melters for one spawner; but if into a nurse-pond or feeding pond, then no care is to be taken. Walton, Angler.

TO NURSE. v. a. [from the noun, or by contraction from nourish; nourir, Fr.]

1. To bring up a child or any thing young.

I was nursed in swaddling cloaths with cares.

Wisd. vii. 7.

Him in Egerian groves Aricia bore,
And nurs'd his youth along the marshy shore.

Dryden.

2. To bring up a child not one's own.

Shall I call a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child? Ex. ii. 7.

3. To feed; to keep; to maintain.

Thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side.

Is. lx. 4.

Our monarchs were acknowledg'd here,
That they their churches nursing fathers were.

Denham.

The Niseans in their dark abode
Nurs'd secretly with milk the thriving God.

Addison.

4. To tend the sick.

5. To pamper; to foment; to encourage;
to soften; to cherish.

And what is strength, but an effect of youth,
which if time nurse, how can it ever cease?

Davies.

By what fate has vice so thriven amongst us,
and by what hands been nursed up into so uncontrolled a dominion? Locke.

NURSER. n. s. [from nurse.]

1. One that nurses. Not used.

See where he lies, inhered in the arms
Of the most bloody nurse of his harms.

Shakspeare.

2. A promoter; a fomentor.

NURSERY. n. s. [from nurse.]

1. The act or office of nursing.

I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. Shaks. K. Lear.

2. That which is the object of a nurse's care.

She went forth among her fruits and flowers,
To visit how they prosper'd, bud and bloom
Her nursery: by her at coming sprung,
And touch'd by their fair tendance gladder grew.

Milton, P. L.

3. A plantation of young trees to be transplanted to other ground.

Your nursery of stocks ought to be in a more barren ground than the ground is whereunto you remove them. Bacon.

My paper is a kind of nursery for authors, and some who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flourish under their own names.

Addison, Guardian.

4. Place where young children are nursed and brought up.

I th' swathing cloaths, the other from their nursery

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

You see before you the spectacle of a Planta-genet, who hath been carried from the nursery to the sanctuary, from the sanctuary to the direful prison, from the prison to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderness; for so the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the shape in which he plies
At miss's elbow when she lies;
Or stands before the nursery doors,
To take the naughty boy that roars. Prior.

They have public nurseries, where all parents are obliged to send their infants to be educated.

Swift.

5. The place or state where any thing is fostered or brought up, from a nursery of children, or whence any thing is to be removed from a nursery of trees.

This keeping of cows is of itself a very idle life, and a fit nursery for a thief. Spenser on Ireland.

To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakspeare.

A luxurious court is the nursery of diseases;
it breeds them, it encourages, nourishes, and entertains them. L'Estrange.

A nursery erects its head,

Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry.

Dryden.

- NURSLING. n. s. [from nurse.] One nursed up; a fondling.

Then was she held in sovereign dignity,
And made the nursing of nobility. Spenser.

I was his nursing once, and choice delight,
His destin'd from the womb. Milton, S. A.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare.

Dryden.

- NURTURE.† n. s. [contracted from nourriture, French.]

1. Food; diet.

For this did the angel twice descend,
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and sacred? Milton, S. A.

2. Education; institution.

She should take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not suffer them to come into bad hands. Spenser on Ireland.

The thorny point

Of bare distence hath ta'en from me the shew

Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture. Shaksp. As you like it.
Ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath;
but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Ephes. vi. 4.

To NUTRURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to train; to bring up.

Thou broughtest it up with thy righteousness, and nurturedst it in thy law, and reformedst it with thy judgment. 2 Esdr. viii. 12.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten. Wotton.

When an insolent despiser of discipline, nur- tured into impudence, shall appear before a church governour, severity and resolution are that gov-ernour's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity.

They suppose mother earth to be a great animal,
and to have nurtured up her young offspring with a conscious tenderness. Bentley.

To NUTSLE. v. a. To fondle; to cherish.
Corrupted from noursle. See To Nuz- zle. Ainsworth.

NUT. n. s. [hnut, Saxon; noot, Dutch;
noix, Fr.]

1. The fruit of certain trees; it consists of a kernel covered by a hard shell. If the shell and kernel are in the center of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a stone.

One chan'c'd to find a nut

In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this Fay, dear queen, be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril. Drayton, Nymphid.

Nuts are hard of digestion, yet possess some good medicinal qualities. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A small body with teeth, which correspond with the teeth of wheels.

This faculty may be more conveniently used by the multiplication of several wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are used for the roasting of meat. Wilkins.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move.

Ray on the Creation.

To NUT.* v. n. [from the noun.] To gather nuts.

A. W. went to angle with Will. Staine of Mert.
Coll. to Wheately bridge, and nuttid in Shotover
by the way.

A. Wood, Life of himself, (under 1652), p. 73.

NUTATION.* n. s. [nutatio, Lat.] A kind of tremulous motion of the axis of the earth.

What subject of human contemplation shall compare in grandeur with that, which — states
the tides, adjusts the nutations of the earth, &c.

Wakefield, Mem. p. 101.

NUTBROWN. adj. [nut and brown.] Brown
like a nut kept long.

Young and old come forth to play,
Till the live-long daylight fail,
Then to the spicy nutbrown ale. Milton, L'All.

When this nutbrown sword was out,
With stomach huge he laid about. Hudibras.

Two milk-white kids run frisking by her side,
For which the nutbrown lass, Erithasis,
Full often offer'd many a savoury kiss. Dryden.

King Hardicnutte, midst Danes and Saxons
stout,
Carous'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on grout.

King.

NUTCRACKERS. n. s. [nut and crack.] An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers.

Addison, Spect.

NUTGALL. n. s. [nut and gall.] Hard excrecence of an oak.

In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandish oak. Brown.

NUTHATCH. } n. s. [picus martius.] A NUTJOBBER. } bird. Ainsworth.

NUTHOOK.† n. s. [nut and hook.]

1. A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.

She's the king's nut-hook, that, when any filbert is ripe, pulls down the bravest boughs to his hand.
Comedy of Match me in London, (1631.)

2. It was anciently, I know not why, a name of contempt, Dr. Johnson here says; but, in a note on Shakespeare, considers it as the designation of a catchpoll. Other commentators believe it to be the reproachful name of a person who stole goods out at windows, by means of a pole with a hook at the end of it.

Nuthook, nuthook, you lie.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

NUTMEG.† n. s. [nut and muguet, Fr.
And so our old word is notemuge. See the citation from Chaucer.]

The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat,
the mace, before it is sent over to us;
except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweat-meat or as a curiosity. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male, which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatical flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. Hill.

Notemuge, to put in ale,
Whether it be moist or stale.

Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas.

The second integument, a dry and flosculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth, a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown.

I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. Sandys.

NUTSHELL. n. s. [nut and shell.]

1. The hard substance that incloses the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space. Shaksp. Hamlet.

It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nut- shell without a kernel. Locke.

2. It is used proverbially for any thing of little value.

A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell, I had never got off again.

L'Estrange.

NUT-TREE. n. s. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts; commonly a hazel.

Of trees you shall have the nut-tree and the
oak. Peacham.

Like beating nut-trees, makes a larger crop.
Dryden.

NUTRICATION. n. s. [nutricatio, Lat.] Manner of feeding or being fed.

Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutri- cation. Brown.

NUTRIMENT.† n. s. [nutriment, old French; nutrimentum, Lat.] That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment.

This slave

Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment?

Shaksppeare.

The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body. South.

Does not the body thrive and grow
By food of twenty years ago?

And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift, Miscell.

NUTRIMENTAL.† adj. [from nutriment.]
Having the qualities of food; alimental.

Much nutrimental store,
Thorough excess of humours perited.

The Silkworms, (1599.)

By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Arbuthnot.

NUTRITION. n. s. [from nutritio, nutrio,
Lat. nutrition, Fr.]

1. The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or encreasing growth.

New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed. Glanville, Scepis.

The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That which nourishes; nutriment. Less properly.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NUTRITIOUS. adj. [from nutrio, Latin.]
Having the quality of nourishing.

O may'st thou often see

Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain
Nutritious / secret nire lurks within. Philips.

The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious;
and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

NUTRITIVE.† adj. [nutritif, old French.]
Nourishing; nutrimental; alimental.

It cannot be very savoury, wholesome, or nu- tritive. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 97.

The fruits of the earth were not now so nutri- tive as they had been. Patrick on Gen. ix. 3.

While the secretory, or separating glands, are too much widened and extended, they suffer a great quantity of nutritive juice to pass through.

Blackmore.

NUTRITURE. n. s. [from nutrio, Latin.]
The power of nourishing. Not used.

Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutriture.

Harvey on Consumptions.

To NUTZLE.† v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from noursle; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it. See the verb neut- er, which Dr. Johnson had intermixed with the present verb.]

1. To nurse; to foster.

Old men long nuzzled in corruption, scorning them that would seek reformation. Sidney.

2. To nestle; to house, as in a nest. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

She [Wisdom] nuzzled herself in his bosom, cherisheth his soul.

Stafford's Niobe, P. ii. (1611,) p. 199.

To NUZZLE.† v. n. To go with the nose down like a hog.

He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbutnot, J. Bull.

Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arbutnot, J. Bull.

The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,

Drops to a third, who nuzzles close behind. Pope.

NYCTALOPS.* n. s. [νυκτάλωψ, Gr.] One who sees best in the night. Colles.

NYCTALOPY.* n. s. [nyctalopie, Fr. νυκτάλωψ, Gr.] A disease or indisposition of the eye, in which a person sees better by night than by day.

NYE of pheasants.* A brood of pheasants: So an eye is sometimes called. Perhaps nye is a corruption of nide. See NIDE. But eye is right; ey, Teut. an egg. See EYE.

NYMPH. n. s. [νύμφη; nympha, Lat.]

1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.

And as the moisture which the thirsty earth

Sucks from the sea, to fill her empty veins,

From out her womb at last doth take a birth,

And runs a nymph along the grassy plains. Davies.

2. A lady. In poetry.

This resolve no mortal dame,
None but those eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nymp I dare not, need not name. Waller.

NYMPHISH. adj. [from nymp.] Relating to nymphs; ladylike.

Tending all to *nymp*ish war.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 3.

NYMPHLY.* } adj. [from nymp; French,
NYMPHLIKE. } nympheux, "nymphly."

Cotgrave.] Resembling a nymph.

A thousand *nymp*hlike and enamour'd graces.

Drayton, Idea 3.

If chance with *nymp*hlike step fair virgin pass.

Milton, P. L.

NYS. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obsolete.

Thou findest fault, where nys to be found,

And buildest strong work upon a weak ground.

Spenser.

O.

O

O Has in English a long sound; as, drone, groan, stone, alone, cloke, broke, coal, droll; or short, got, knot, shot, prong, long. It is usually denoted long by a servile a subjoined; as, moan, or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone: when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as, droll, scroll; and even then sometimes short; as, loll.

O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation.

O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger!

Decay of Chr. Piety.

O! were he present, that his eyes and hands

Might see, and urge, the death which he commands. Dryden.

O.† n. s. Used with no great elegance by Shakspeare for a circle or oval. Dr. Johnson says; citing only the example from the Prologue to Shakspeare's Henry the Fifth. It is also used by Bacon; and indeed was common in Shakspeare's time.

Can this cockpit hold

The vasty field of France? or may we cram,

Within this wooden O, the very casques,

That did affright the air at Agincourt?

Shakspeare, Hen. V. Prol.

Yon fiery oes and eyes of light.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

The colours, that shew best by candle-light, are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and oes or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so are they of most glory.

Bacon, Ess. 27. (ed. 1632,) p. 225.

O A F

OAD.* n. s. Woad: a plant used in dying. See WOAD.

He must admit no difference between oad and frankincense, or the most precious balsamum and a tar-barrel. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

OAF.† n. s. [This word is variously written; auf, ofe, and oph; it seems a corruption of ouph, a demon or fairy; in German and Dutch alf, from which elf: and means properly the same with changeling; a foolish child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies in the place of one more witty, which they steal away. See AUF, and ELF.]

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies.

These, when a child plays to be got,

Which after proves an idiot,

When folk perceives it thriveth not,

The fault therein to smother:

Some silly doating brainless calf,

That understands things by the half,

Says that the fairy left this oaf;

And took away the other. Drayton, Nymphid.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot. Used in the north of England; and corrupted sometimes into goaf, goff, and gaff.

The fear of breeding fools

And ophs. Beavon, and Fl. Night Walker.

He, who when cool is a mere oaf, may be quite humorous in his cups.

Philos. Lett. on Physiognomy, p. 76.

OA'FISH. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltish.

OA'FISHNESS. n. s. [from oafish.] Stupidity; dullness.

O A K

OAK. n. s. [ac, æc, Saxon; which, says Skinner, to shew how easy it is to play the fool, under a shew of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from ἄκας, a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has shewn his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, says the grave critick, signified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci potest, from ἀκας, strength; by taking the three first letters and then sinking the λ, as is not uncommon; quercus.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small slender threads. The embryos, which are produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups; the leaves are sinuated. The species are five.

Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak.

Shakspeare.

He lay along

Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood.

Shakspeare.

No tree beareth so many bastard fruits as the oak: for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees, Shoots rising up and spreads by slow degrees : Three centuries he grows, and three he stays Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.

Pallas to their eyes

The mist objected, and condense'd the skies. Pope.

2. To propose as a charge criminal; or a reason adverse: often with to or against.

Were it not some kind of blemish to be like unto Infidels and Heathens, it would not so usually be objected; men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries.

Hooker.

The book requireth due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against such as are to be ordered.

Whitgift.

Men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and foretell difficulties; for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requireth a new work; which false point of wisdom is the bane of business.

Bacon.

The old truth was, object ingratitude, and ye object all crimes: and is it not as old a truth, is it not a higher truth, object rebellion, and ye object all crimes.

Holyday.

This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all.

Sprat.

It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like.

Dryden.

Others object the poverty of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies.

Addison, State of the War.

If there be no true liberty, but all things come to pass by inevitable necessity, then what are all interrogations and objurgations, and reprehensions and expostulations?

Bramhall.

Our Saviour replies shortly by way of objurgation or exprobration, as it were upbraiding his incredulity with indignation.

Knatchbull, Ann. N. Test. Tr. p. 51.

OBJURGATORY.† adj. [objurgatoire, old Fr. objurgatorius, Lat.] Reprehensory; culpatory; chiding.

Letters, though they be capable of any subject, yet commonly they are either narratory, objurgatory, consolatory, monitory, or congratulatory.

Howell, Lett. i. i. 1. (dat. 1625.)

The concluding sentence brings back the whole train of thoughts to the objurgatory question of the Pharisees.

Paley, Evid. of the Chr. Rel. ii. ch. 4.

OBLATE. adj. [oblatus, Latin.] Flatted at the poles. Used of a spheroid.

By gravitation bodies on this globe will press towards its centre, though not exactly thither, by reason of the oblate spheroidal figure of the earth, arising from its diurnal rotation about its axis.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

OBLATION. n. s. [oblation, French; oblatus, Latin.] An offering; a sacrifice; any thing offered as an act of worship or reverence.

She looked upon the picture before her, and straight sighed, and straight tears followed, as if the idol of duty ought to be honoured with such oblations.

Sidney.

Many conceive in the oblation of Jephtha's daughter, not a natural but a civil kind of death, and a separation from the world.

Brown.

The will gives worth to the oblation, as to God's acceptance, sets the poorest giver upon the same level with the richest.

South.

The kind oblation of a falling tear.
Behold the coward, and the brave,
All make oblations at this shrine.

Swift.

OBLETIONER.* n. s. [from oblation.] One who makes an offering as an act of worship or reverence.

He presents himself an oblationer before the Almighty.

More, Myst. of Godl. 1660. p. 423.

To OBLATRATE.* v. n. [oblato, Latin.] To bark or rail against any one.

Cockeram.

To OBLECTATE.* v. a. [oblecter, Fr. oblecto, Latin.] To delight.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

OBLECTATION.† n. s. [oblectatio, Latin.] Delight; pleasure.

Man that hath not experienced the contentment of innocent piety — will hardly believe there are such oblections that can be hid in goodness.

Feltham, Res. ii. 66.

To OBLIGATE. v. a. [obligho, Latin.] To bind by contract or duty.

OBLIGATION. n. s. [obligatio, from obligho, Latin; obligation, French.]

1. The binding power of any oath, vow, duty; contract.

Your father lost a father;

That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

There was no means for him as a Christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Nothing can be more reasonable than that such creatures should be under the obligation of accepting such evidence, as in itself is sufficient for their conviction.

Wilkins.

The better to satisfy this obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms.

Dryden.

No ties can bind, that from constraint arise,
Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies.

Granville.

2. An act which binds any man to some performance.

The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Holy Living.

3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.

Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself?

L'Estrange.

So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people.

South.

OBLIGATO.* [Italian.] A musical term, signifying necessary, on purpose, for the instrument named.

OBLIGATORY. adj. [obligatoire, French; from obligho.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive: with to or on.

And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to Christian princes and states.

Bacon.

As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Holy Living.

A people long used to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory.

Swift.

If this patent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void.

Swift.

To OBLIGE. v. a. [obliger, Fr. obligho, Latin.]

1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.

All these have moved me, and some of them obliged me to commend these my labours to your grace's patronage.

White.

The church hath been thought fit to be called Catholic, in reference to the universal obedience which it prescribeth; both in regard of the persons, obliging men of all conditions, and in relation to the precepts, requiring the performance of all the evangelical commands.

Pearson.

Religion obliges men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health.

Tillotson.

The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law.

Rogers.

2. To indebted; to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, must Oblige his honour with a boundless trust.

Waller.

Since love oblighes not, I from this hour Assume the right of man's despotic power.

Dryden.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But drop from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.
Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar,

And would not be obliged to God for more.

Dryden.

When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all the oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits or to the scaffold or the cell.

Pope.

To those-hills we are obliged for all our metals, and with them for all the conveniences and comforts of life.

Bentley.

3. To please; to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferior, than by disdaining him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it.

South.

Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged.

L'Estrange.

Happy the people, who preserve their honour. By the same duties that oblige their prince.

Addison, Cato.

OBLIGE'E.† n. s. [from oblige.] The person to whom another, called the obligor, is bound by a legal or written contract. See Cowel.

The bond had been taken in the obligee's own name, and not in the king's.

Sanderson, Cases of Cons. p. 85.

OBLIGEMENT. n. s. [obligement, French.] Obligation.

I will not resist, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligement, that you lay upon me.

Milton, Education.

Let this fair princess but one minute stay,
A look from her will your obligements pay.

Dryden.

OBLIGER.† n. s.

1. That which imposes obligation.

It is the natural property of the same hear to be a gentle interpreter, which is so noble an obliger.

Watson, Rem. p. 453.

2. One who binds by contract.

OBLIGING. part. adj. [obligeant, French; from obligho.] Civil; complaisant; respectful; engaging.

Nothing could be more obliging and respectful than the lion's letter was, in appearance; but there was death in the true intent.

L'Estrange.

Monseigneur Strozzi has many curiosities, and is very obliging to a stranger who desires the sight of them.

Addison.

Obliging creatures! make me see
All that disgrace'd my betters, met in me.
So obliging that he ne'er oblig'd.

Pope.

OBLIGINGLY. adv. [from obliging.] Civilly; complaisantly.

Eugenius informs me very obligingly, that he never thought he should have disliked any passage in my paper.

Addison.

I see her taste each nauseous draught,
And so obligingly am caught;
I bless the hand from whence they came,
Nor dare distort my face for shame.

Swift, Miscell.

OBLIGINGNESS.† n. s. [from obliging.]

1. Obligation; force.

Those legal institutions did consequently set a period to the obligingness of those institutions.

Hammond, Works, i. 432.

They look into them not to weigh the obligingness, but to quarrel with the difficulty of the injunctions: not to direct practice, but excuse prevarications. Decay of Chr. Piety.

2. Civility; complaisance.

His behaviour was with such condescension and obligingness to the meanness of his clergy, as to know and be known to most of them.

Walton, Life of Bp. Sanderson.

OBLI'GOR.* See OBLIGE.

OBLIQUA'TION n. s. [obliquatio, from obliquus, Latin.] Declination from straightness or perpendicularity; obliquity.

The change made by the obliquation of the eyes, is least in colours of the densest than in thin substances. Newton, Opt.

OBLI'QUE. adj. [oblique, French; obliquus, Latin.]

1. Not direct; not perpendicular; not parallel.

One by his view

Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the house of th' agonies. Spenser.

If sound be stopped and reperused, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heaven of an obliquer sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that burn. Prior.

Bavaria's stars must be accus'd which shone
That fatal day the mighty work was done,
With rays oblique upon the Gallic sun. Prior.
It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion. Cheyne, Phil. Prim.

Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views; which is as unjust, as to make a judgement of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it casts in such and such a position. Broome on the Odyssey.

2. Not direct; indirect; by a side glance.

Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him. Shakspeare.

3. [In grammar.] Any case in nouns except the nominative.

OBLI'QUELY. adv. [from oblique.]

1. Not directly; not perpendicularly.

Of meridian altitude, it hath but twenty-three degrees, so that it plays but obliquely upon us, and as the sun doth about the twenty-third of January. Brown.

Declining from the noon of day,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray. Pope.

2. Not in the immediate or direct meaning.

They haply might admit the truths obliquely levelled, which bashfulness persuaded not to enquire for. Fell.

His discourse tends obliquely to the detracting from others, or the extolling of himself.

Addison, Spect.

OBLI'QUENESS. } n. s. [obliquité, Fr. from OBLI'QUITY. } oblique.]

1. Deviation from physical rectitude; deviation from parallelism or perpendicularity.

Which else to several spheres thou must ascribe, Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milton, P. L.

2. Deviation from moral rectitude.

There is in rectitude, beauty; as contrariwise in obliquity, deformity. Hooker.

Count Rhodophill cut out for government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scale of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities. Howell.

For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity. South.
To OBLI'TERATE. v. a. [oblitero, ob and littera, Latin.]

1. To efface any thing written.

2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.

Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Let men consider themselves as ensnared in that unhappy contract, which has rendered them part of the Devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls. Decay of Chr. Piety.

These simple ideas, the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images, which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLITERA'TION. n. s. [obliteratio, Latin.] Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transmigrations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precedent at some time have yielded. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

OBLIVION.† n. s. [oblivion, old French; oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.
Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion? South.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;
But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

2. Amnesty; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished. Davies.

OBLI'VIOUS.† adj. [obliviosus, Latin; oblivieux, French.]

1. Causing forgetfulness.

Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The British souls
Exult to see the crowding ghosts descend
Unnumber'd; well aveng'd they quit the cares
Of mortal life, and drink the oblivious lake. Philips.

Oh born to see what none can see awake!
Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake. Pope.

2. Forgetful.

There was never thing that repented me more that ever I did, than doth the remembrance of my great and most oblivious negligence. Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

O'BLOCUTOR.* n. s. [oblocutor, Latin.] A gainsayer. Not in use.

There be dyverse (oblocutors) which, by report of his enemies, — says that he would never have set forth such things as he promysed. Bale, Pref. to Leland's Itinerary.

O'BLONG. adj. [oblong, Fr. oblongus, Latin.] Longer than broad; the same with a rectangle parallelogram, whose sides are unequal. Harris.

The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a descent. Temple, Miscell.

Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle. Bentley.

O'BLONGLY. adv. [from oblong.] In an oblong form.

The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spheroidal. Cheyne.

O'BLONGNESS. n. s. [from oblong.] The state of being oblong.

OBL'OQUIOUS.* adj. [from obloquy.] Reproachful. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

Emulations which are apt to rise and vent in obloquious acrimony.

Naunton, Fragm. Regal. Obs. on Q. Eliz.

O'BLOQUY. n. s. [obloquor, Lat.]

1. Censorious speech; blame; slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being deservedly subject unto that bitter kind of obloquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmless, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions; so we peradventure might be upbraided, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances. Hooker.

Here new aspersions, with new obloquies,
Are laid on old deserts. Daniel, Civil Wars.

Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn
The just decree of God, pronounce'd and sworn? Milton, P. L.

Shall names that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obloquy and detraction? Addison.

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true genies, if they were not sunk under the censure and obloquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants. Swift.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.

My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy 't the world
In me to lose. Shakspeare, All's Well.

OBLUCTA'TION.* n. s. [from obluator, Lat. to struggle against.] Opposition; resistance.

He hath not the command of himself, to use that artificial obluator, and facing out of the matter, which he doth at other times.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 125.

OBMUTE'SCENCE.† n. s. [from obmutescere, Lat.]

1. Loss of speech.

A vehement fear often produceth obmutescence. Brown.

2. Observation of silence.

Compare Christianity, as it came from Christ, with the same religion, after it fell into other hands: — with the extravagant merit very soon ascribed to celibacy, solitude, voluntary poverty; with the rigours of an ascetic, and the vows of a monastic life; the hair-shirt, the watchings, the midnight prayers, the obmutescence, the gloom and mortification of religious orders, and of those who aspired to religious perfection.

Paley, Ev. of the Chr. Rel. ii. P. ii. ch. 2.

OBNO'XIOUS. adj. [obnoxius, Lat.]

1. Subject.

I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the speculative discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws.

Bacon, Holy War.

2. Liable to punishment.

All are obnoxious, and this faulty land,
Like fainting Hester, Moes before you stand,
Watching your sceptre. Waller.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's severe justice, and that he is a God of mercy and hateth sin; and that we might not have the least suspicion of his unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only begotten Son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cursed death, to expiate our offences. Calamy.

Thy name, O Varus, if the kinder powers Preserve our plains, and shield the Mantuan towers,

Obnoxious by Cremona's neighbouring crime,
The wings of swans, and stronger pinion'd rhyme
Shall raise aloft. Dryden.

3. Reprehensible; not of sound reputation.

Conceiving it most reasonable to search for primitive truth in the primitive writers, and not to suffer his understanding to be preposset by the contrived and interested schemes of modern, and withal obnoxious authors. Fell.

4. Liable; exposed.

Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself, and more obnoxious to jealousies and dis-trusts. Hayward.

But what will not ambition and revenge
Descend to? who aspires, must down as low
As high he soar'd; obnoxious first or last,
To basest things. Milton, P. L.

Beasts lie down,
To dews obnoxious on the grassy floor. Dryden.
They leave the government a trunk naked, defenceless, and obnoxious to every storm. Davenant.

OBNO'XIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from obnoxious.]
Subjection; liahleness to punishment.

Every man is loth to be an informer, whether out of the office, or out of the conscience of his own obnoxiousness.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 2. C. 5.
Men, by incurring guilt and being exposed to vengeance, are subject to restless fears and stinging remorse of conscience; nor can they be exempted from such obnoxiousness otherwise than by the free grace and mercy of God.

Barrow on the Forgiveness of Sins.

OBNO'XIOUSLY. adv. [from obnoxious.] In a state of subjection; in the state of one liable to punishment.TO OBNU'BILATE.† v. a. [obnubilo, Latin; obnubiler, Fr.] To cloud; to obscure.

As a black and thick cloud covers the sun, and intercepts his beams and light; so doth this melancholy vapour obnubilate the mind.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 200.
But corporal life doth so obnubilate
Our inward eyes, that they be nothing bright.
More, Sleep of the Soul, C. 3. st. 10.

OBNUBILA'TION.* n. s. [from obnubilate.]
The act of making obscure.

Let others glory in their triumphs and trophies, in their obnubilation of bodies coruscant; that they have brought fear upon champions.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, p. 175.

O'BOLE. n. s. [obolus, Latin.] In pharmacy, twelve grains.OBRE'PTION.† n. s. [obreptio, Latin.]
The act of creeping in with secrecy or by surprise.

Sudden incursions and obreptions, sins of mere ignorance and inadvertency.

Cudworth, Serm. p. 81.

OBREPTI'TIOUS.* adj. [from obreption.]
Secretly obtained; done with secrecy.TO O'BROGATE. v. a. [obrogo, Latin.] To proclaim a contrary law for the dissolution of the former. *Dict.*OBSC'ENE. adj. [obscene, Fr. obscenus, Lat.]1. Immodest; not agreeable to chastity of mind; causing lewd ideas.

Chemos, the obscene dread of Moab's sons.

Words that were once chaste, by frequent use grow obscene and uncleanly. Milton, P. L.
Watts, Logick.

2. Offensive; disgusting.

A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire. Dryden.

Homé as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,
Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,
And of the sight obscene so lately view'd. Dryden.

3. Inauspicious; ill omened.

Care shuns thy walks, as at the cheerful light
The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take flight.
Dryden.

It is the sun's fate like your's to be displeasing to owls and obscene animals, who cannot bear his lustre. Pope, Lett.

OBSC'ENELY.† adv. [from obscene.] In an impure and unchaste manner.

That all words which are written in the law
obscenely, must be changed to more civil words

Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

Expos'd obscenely naked and asleep.

Dryden, Hind and Panther, P. iii.

OBSC'ENESS.† n. s. [obscenité, Fr. from OBSC'ENITY. } obscene.] Impurity of thought or language; unchastity; lewd-
ness.

We avoid loss by it, and escape obsceneness;
and gain in the grace and property which helps significance. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in wit. Dryden.

Those fables were tempered with the Italian severity, and free from any note of infamy or obsceneness. Dryden.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day,
To wash the obscenities of night away. Dryden.

No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind.

Pope.

OBSCURA'TION. n. s. [obscuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of darkening.

2. A state of being darkened.

As to the sun and moon, their obscuratio or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Burnet.

OBSCURE.† adj. [obscur, Fr. obscurus,
Lat. This word was formerly accented on the first syllable; as in the examples, which follow from Shakespeare, and Davies, and Beaumont and Fletcher.]1. Dark; unenlightened; gloomy; hindering sight.

Whoso curseth his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscur darkness. Prov. xx. 20.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And through the palpable obscur find out
His uncouth way? Milton, P. L.

2. Living in the dark.

The obscur bird clamour'd the live-long night.
Shakespeare.

3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.

I explain some of the most obscur passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryden.

4. Not noted; not observable.

My short-wing'd Muse doth haunt

None but the obscur corners of the earth.

Davies, Bien Venu, (1606.) C. 2.

The soldiers murmur

To see their warlike eagles mew their honours

In obscur towns. Beaumont and Fl.

He says that he is an obscur person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark. Alderbury.

TO OBSCU'RE. v. a. [obscur, Lat.]

1. To darken; to make dark.

They are all couched in a pit hard by Hearn's oak, with obscured lights; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakespeare.

Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,
And the winds whistle, and the surges roll
Mountains on mountains, and obscur the pole.
Pope.

2. To make less visible.

What must I hold a candle to any shames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Thinking by this retirement to obscur himself from God, he infringed the omniscience and essential ubiquity of his Maker. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. To make less intelligible.

By private consent it hath been used in dangerous times to obscur writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue. Holder.

There is scarce any duty which has been so ob- scured by the writings of learned men, as this.
Wake.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.

Think'st thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the
same,
And seest not sin obscures thy godlike frame;
I know thee now by thy ungrateful pride,
That shews me what thy faded looks did hide.
Dryden.

5. To conceal; to make unknown.

O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To sun or starlight, spread their umbrage broad.
Milton, P. L.

OBSCU'RELY.† adv. [from obscur.]1. Not brightly; not luminously; darkly.
The lightning's light is lost; it shines not clear,
But shoots obscurely through night's stormy air.

Through the thick shades obscurely might you
see Minotaurs, cyclopes. Crashaw, Susp. d'Herode.

2. Out of sight; privately; without notice;
not conspicuously.

After many years wandering obscurely through all the island. Milton, Hist. of Engl. B. 4.

Such was the rise of this prodigious fire,
Which in mean buildings first obscurely bred,
From thence did soon to open streets aspire.
Dryden.

There live retir'd,
Content thyself to be obscurely good.
Addison, Cato.

3. Not clearly; not plainly; darkly to the mind.

The woman's seed at first obscurely told,
Now ampler known, thy Saviour and thy Lord.
Milton, P. L.

OBSCU'RENESS. } n. s. [obscuritas, Lat. ob-OBSCU'RITY. } scurité, Fr.]

1. Darkness; want of light.

Lo! a day of darkness and *obscur*ity, tribulation and anguish upon the earth. Esther, xl. 8.
Should Cynthia quit thee, Venus, and each star,
It would not form one thought dark as mine are:

I could lend them obscurer now, and say,
Out of myself there should be no more day.

Donne.

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.

You are not for obscurity design'd,
But like the sun, must cheer all human kind.

Dryden.

3. Darkness of meaning.

Not to mention that obscurer that attends prophetic raptures, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure.

Boyle on Colours.

That this part of sacred Scripture had difficulties in it: many causes of obscurity did readily occur to me.

Locke.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undetermined confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would, it being too large for a finite capacity.

Locke.

OBSCURER.* n. s. [from obscurer.] Whatsoever or whoever obscures.

It was pity desolation and loneliness, should be such a waster and obscurer of such loveliness.

Lord's Hist. of the Banians, (1630,) p. 24.

TO OBSECRATE.* v. a. [obsecro, Lat.] To beseech; to intreat. Not now in use. Sir T. Wyatt somewhere employs it.

Cockeram.

OBSECRATION. n. s. [obsecratio, from obsecro, Lat.] Intreaty; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obsecration.

Stillingfleet.

OBSSEQUENT.* adj. [obsequens, Lat.] Obedient; dutiful; submitting to. A very useful word.

Unto himself he hath reserved an infinite power to put any form upon any matter; which he always findeth pliant, and obsequent to his pleasure, even against the propriety of its own particular nature.

Fotherby Athom. (1622,) p. 181.

OBSSEQUES.† n. s. [obsequies, French. I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequia, Latin: this word, however, is apparently derived from obsequium.]

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorilaus valiantly requiting his friend's help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies.

Sidney.

Fair Juliet, that with angels dost remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hand;
That living honour'd thee, and being dead,
With funeral obsequies adorn thy tomb.

Shakespeare.

I spare the widows' tears, their woeful cries,
And howling at their husbands' obsequies;
How Theseus at these funerals did assist,
And with what gifts the mourning dames dismiss.

Dryden.

His body shall be royally interr'd,

I will, myself

Be the chief mourner at his obsequies.

Dryden.

Alas! poor poll, my Indian talker dies,
Go birds and celebrate his obsequies.

Creech.

2. It is found in the singular, perhaps more properly.

M. Grindall, in his late funeral sermon at the obsequy of Ferdinandus, saith and confesseth, that it cannot be denied but that after S. Gregories time purgatory went with full sail.

Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 8. v.
In this last solemnity of obsequy unto his ever honoured sovereign and mistress, he was the most eminent person of the whole land, and principal mourner.

Sir G. Paul, Life of Abp. Whitgift, p. 116.

Or tune a song of victory to me,

Or to thyself, sing thine own obsequy.

Crashaw.

Him I'll solemnly attend,

With silent obsequy and funeral train,

Home to his father's house.

Milton, S. A.

OBSEQUIOUS. adj. [from obsequium, Latin.]

1. Obedient; compliant; not resisting.

Adore not so the rising sun, that you forget the father, who raised you to this height; nor be you so obsequious to the father, that you give just cause to the son to suspect that you neglect him.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

At his command the up-rooted hills retir'd

Each to his place; they heard his voice, and went Obsequious.

I follow'd her; she what was honour knew,

And with obsequious majesty approv'd

My pleaded reason.

Milton, P. L.

See how the obsequious wind and liquid air

The Theban swan does upward bear.

Cowley.

A genial cherishing heat acts so upon the fit and obsequious matter, as to organize and fashion it according to the exigencies of its own nature.

Boyle.

His servants weeping,

Obsequious to his orders, bear him hither.

Addison, Cato.

The vote of an assembly, which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been conceived in a private brain, afterwards supported by an obsequious party.

Swift.

2. In Shakspeare it seems to signify, funeral; such as the rites of funerals require.

Your father lost a father;

That father his; and the survivor bound

In filial obligation, for some term,

To do obsequious sorrow.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

OBSEQUIOUSLY. adv. [from obsequious.]

1. Obediently; with compliance.

They rise, and with respectful awe,

At the word given, obsequiously withdraw.

Dryden.

We cannot reasonably expect, that any one should readily and obsequiously quit his own opinion, and embrace ours with a blind resignation.

Locke.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies, with funeral rites; with reverence for the dead.

I a while obsequiously lament

The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

OBSEQUIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from obsequious.] Obedience; compliance.

No less famous for her liberty, than obsequiousness towards her husband.

Bacon, Hist. of Life and Death.

An heart — of singular obsequiousness towards your father.

Wolton, Paneg. to K. Charles I.

They apply themselves both to his interest and humour, with all the arts of flattery and obsequiousness, the surest and the readiest way to advance a man.

South.

OBSSEQUI.* n. s. [obsequium, Lat.]

1. Funeral ceremony. See OBSEQUES.

2. Obsequiousness; compliance. Not in use.

Sway'd by strong necessity,

3. Respectfully attentive; with of.

She now observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sun-set of thy various day. Pope.

4. Meantly dutiful; submissive.

How could the most base men attain to honour but by such an observant slavish course? Raleigh.

OBSERVANT.† n. s. [This word has the accent on the first syllable in Shakspeare.]

1. A slavish attendant. Not in use.

These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbour more craft and more corrupter ends,

Than twenty silly ducking observants

That stretch their duties nicely. Shaksp. K. Lear.

2. A diligent observer.

Such observants they are thereof, [of the law.]

Hooker, Ecc. Pol. i. § 4.

OBSERVATION.† n. s. [observatio, from observo, Latin; observation, Fr.]

1. The act of observing, noting, or remarking.

These cannot be infused by observation, because they are the rules by which men take their first apprehensions and observations of things; as the being of the rule must be before its application to the thing directed by it. South.

The rules of our practice are taken from the conduct of such persons as fall within our observation. Rogers.

2. Show; exhibition.

The kingdom of God cometh not with observation. St. Luke, xvii. 20.

3. Notion gained by observing; note; remark; animadversion.

5. To obey; to follow.

TO OBSERVE. v. n.

1. To be attentive.

Observing men may form many judgments by the rules of similitude and proportion, where causes and effects are not entirely the same.

Watts, Logick.

2. To make a remark.

I observe, that when we have an action against any man, we must for all that look upon him as our neighbour, and love him as ourselves, paying him all that justice, peace and charity, which are due to all persons. Kettellwell.

Wherever I have found her notes to be wholly another's, which is the case in some hundreds, I have barely quoted the true proprietor, without observing upon it. Pope, Lett.

OBSERVER. n. s. [from observe.]

1. One who looks vigilantly on persons and things; close remarker.

He reads much;

He is a great observer; and he looks

Quite through the deeds of men.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Angelo,

There is a kind of character in thy life,

That to the observer doth thy history

Fully unfold. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Careful observers may foretell the hour,

By sore prognostics when to dread a show'r. Swift.

2. One who looks on; the beholder.

If a slow-pac'd star had stol'n away,

From the observer's marking, he might stay

Three hundred years to see't again. Donne.

Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and therefore, if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of objects. South.

Sometimes purulent matter may be discharged from the glands in the upper part of the wind-pipe, while the lungs are sound and uninfected, which now and then has imposed on undistinguishing observers. Blackmore.

3. One who keeps any law, or custom, or practice.

Many nations are superstitious, and diligent observers of old customs, which they receive by tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles. Spenser.

The king after the victory, as one that had been bred under a devout mother, and was in his nature a great observer of religious forms, caused Te Deum to be solemnly sung in the presence of the whole army upon the place. Bacon.

He was so strict an observer of his word, that no consideration whatever could make him break it. Prior.

Himself often read useful discourses to his servants on the Lord's day, of which he was always a very strict and solemn observer. Atterbury.

OBSERVINGLY. adv. [from observing.]

Attentively; carefully.

OBSTRUCTION.* n. s. [obstructio, Latin; obstruction, French; from obstruct.]

1. Hindrance; difficulty.

Sure God by these discoveries did design,
That his clear light thro' all the world should shine;
But the obstruction from that discord springs,
The prince of darkness makes 'twixt Christian kings. Denham.

2. Obstacle; impediment; that which hinders.

All obstructions in parliament, that is, all freedom in differing in votes, and debating matters with reason and candour, must be taken away.

King Charles.

In his winter quarters the king expected to meet with all the obstructions and difficulties his enraged enemies could lay in his way. Clarendon.

Whenever a popular assembly free from obstructions, and already possessed of more power than an equal balance will allow, shall continue to think that they have not enough, I cannot see how the same causes can produce different effects among us, from what they did in Greece and Rome.

Swift.

3. [In physick.] The blocking up of any canal in the human body, so as to prevent the flowing of any fluid through it, on account of the increased bulk of that fluid, in proportion to the diameter of the vessel.

Quincy.

Obstructions are the cause of most diseases.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 10.

4. In Shakespeare it once signifies something heaped together.

Aye, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become A kneaded clod. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

OBSTRUCTIVE.* adj. [obstructif, French; from obstruct.] Hindering; causing impediment.

Having thus separated this doctrine of God's predetermining all events from three other things confounded with it, it will now be discernible how noxious and obstructive this doctrine is to the superstructing all good life. Hammond.

Being immoderately taken, it [flesh] is exceeding obstructive. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 10.

OBSTRUCTIVE. n. s. Impediment; obstacle.

1. Supplication; entreaty.

With which words, obtestations, and tears of Gissipus, Titus [was] constrained.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 124. b.

Our humblest petitions and obtestations at his feet.

Milton on the Art. of Peace.

2. Solemn injunction.

Let me take up that obtestation of the Psalmist, "O, all ye that love the Lord, hate the thing which is sin."

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 189.

We do by apostolical authority, under obtestation of the divine judgement, enjoin to thee, that, in Triers and Colen, thou shouldst not suffer any bishop to be chosen, before a report be made to our apostleship.

Barrow on the Pope's Suprem. Introdut.

OBTRACTATION.† n. s. [obtracto, Latin.]

Slander; detraction; calumny. Cockeram.

To use obloquy or obtraction.

Barrow, Serm. i. 206.

To OBTRUDE. v. a. [obtrudo, Lat.]

To thrust into any place or state by force or imposture; to offer with unreasonable importunity.

It is their torment, that the thing they shun doth follow them, truth, as it were, even obtruding itself into their knowledge, and not permitting them to be so ignorant as they would be. Hooker.

There may be as great a vanity in retiring and withdrawing men's conceits from the world, as in obtruding them.

Bacon.

Some things are easily granted; the rest ought not to be obtruded upon me with the point of the sword.

King Charles.

Who can abide, that against their own doctors six books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be, under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church?

Bp. Hall.

Why shouldst thou then obtrude this diligence in vain, where no acceptance it can find? Milton.

Whatever was not by them thought necessary, must not by us be obtruded on, or forced into that catalogue.

Hammond.

A cause of common error is the credulity of men; that is, an easy assent to what is obtruded, or believing at first ear what is delivered by others.

Brown.

The objects of our senses obtrude their particular ideas upon our minds, whether we will or no; and the operations of our minds will not let us be without some obscure notions of them.

Locke.

Whether thy great forefathers came
From realms that bear Vesputio's name;
For so conjectures would obtrude,
And from thy painted skin conclude.

Swift.

OBTRUDER. n. s. [from obtrude.] One that obtrudes.

Do justice to the inventors or publishers of the true experiments, as well as upon the obtruders of false ones.

Boyle.

To OBTRUNCATE.* v. a. [obtruncor, Lat.] To deprive of a limb; to lop.

An old word, (occurring in the vocabulary of Cockeram,) revived in a modern poem of great merit, where the participial adjective describes the mutilated limbs of the beggar.

Those props, on which the knees obtruncate stand;

That crutch, ill wielded in the widow's hand.
London Cries, or Pictures of Tumult and Distress (1805.)

OBTRUNCATION.* n. s. [obtruncatio, Lat.]

The act of lopping or cutting. Cockeram.

OBTRUSION. n. s. [from obtrusus, Lat.]

The act of obtruding.

No man can think it other than the method of slavery, by savage rudeness and inopportune obtrusions of violence, to have the mist of his error and passion dispelled.

K. Charles.

OBTRUSIVE. adj. [from obtrude.] Inclined to force one's self, or any thing else, upon others.

Not obvious, not obtrusive, but retir'd
The more desirable.

Milton, P. L.

To OBTRUND.† v. a. [obtrundo, Lat.] To blunt; to dull; to quell; to deaden.

He asks my opinion of John-a-Noakes and John-a-Stiles; and I answer him, that I, for my part, think John Dory was a better man than both of them; for certainly they were the greatest wranglers that ever lived, and have filled all our law-books with the obtrunding story of their suits and trials.

Milton, Colasterion.

The over quantity of ware, fretting too much upon the wood, is obtrunded or dulled by throwing in bran, sometimes loose, sometimes in bags.

Sir W. Petty, Syrat's Hist. R. S. p. 501.

Avicen countermands letting blood in choleric bodies, because he esteems the blood a bridle of gall, obtrunding its acrimony and fierceness.

Harvey on Consumptions.

OBTURATION.† n. s. [obturatio, Fr. from obtrusus, Lat.] The act of stopping up any thing with something smeared over it.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Obtusion of the senses, internal and external.

Harvey.

OBVENITION. n. s. [obvenio, Lat.] Something happening not constantly and regularly, but uncertainly; incidental advantage.

When the country grows more rich and better inhabited, the tythes and other obventions, will also be more augmented and better valued.

Spenser on Ireland.

OBVERSANT.* adj. [obversans, Latin.]

Conversant; familiar.

Example—transformeth the will of man into the similitude of that, which is most obversant and familiar towards it. Bacon, Disc. to Sir H. Savile.

To OBEVE'RT. v. a. [obverso, Lat.] To turn towards.

The laborant with an iron rod stirred the kindled part of the nitre, that the fire might be more diffused, and more parts might be obverted to the air.

A man can from no place behold, but there will be amongst innumerable superficialities, that look some one way, and some another, enough of them obverted to his eye to afford a confused idea of light.

An erect cone placed in an horizontal plane, at a great distance from the eye, we judge to be nothing but a flat circle, if its base be obverted towards us.

To O'BVIATE. v. a. [from obvius, Lat. obvier, Fr.] To meet in the way; to prevent by interception.

To lay down every thing in its full light, so as to obviate all exceptions, and remove every difficulty, would carry me out too far.

OB'VIOUS. adj. [obvius, Lat.]

1. Meeting any thing; opposed in front to any thing.

I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won.

2. Open; exposed.

Whether such room in nature unpossesst
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far
Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them, is obvious to dispute.

3. Easily discovered; plain; evident; easily found: Swift has used it harshly for easily intelligible.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as the eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd?
Entertain'd with solitude,
Where obvious duty ere while appear'd unsought.

They are such lights as are only obvious to every man of sense, who loves poetry and understands it.

I am apt to think many words difficult or obscure, which are obvious to scholars.
These sentiments, whether they be impressed on the soul, or arise as obvious reflections of our reason, I call natural, because they have been found in all ages.

All the great lines of our duty are clear and obvious; the extent of it understood, the obligation acknowledged, and the wisdom of complying with it freely confessed.

OB'VIOUSLY. adv. [from obvious.]

1. Evidently; apparently.

All purely identical propositions obviously and at first blush, contain no instruction.

2. Easily to be found.

For France, Spain, and other foreign countries, the volumes of their laws and lawyers have obviously particulars concerning place and precedence of their magistrates and dignities.

3. Naturally.

We may then more obviously, yet truly, liken the civil state to bulwarks, and the church to a city.

OB'VIOUSNESS. n. s. [from obvious.] State of being evident or apparent.

Slight experiments are more easily and cheaply tried: I thought their easiness or obviousness fitter to recommend than depreciate them.

To OBU'MBRATE. v. a. [obumbro, Lat.] To shade; to cloud.

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villerio, dispelled all those clouds which did hang over and obumbrate him.

OBUMBRA'TION. n. s. [obombration, Fr. from obumbro, Lat.] The act of darkening or clouding.

OCCA'SION. n. s. [occasion, Fr. occasio, Latin.]

1. Occurrence; casualty; incident.

The laws of Christ we find rather mentioned by occasion in the writings of the Apostles, than any solemn thing directly written to comprehend them in legal sort.

2. Opportunity; convenience.

Me unweeting, and unaware of such mishap,
She brought to mischief through occasion,
Where this same wicked villain did me light upon.

Because of the money returned in our sacks are we brought in, that he may seek occasion, fall upon us, and take us for bondmen.
Use not liberty for an occasion.

Let me not let pass
Occasion which now smiles.
I'll take th' occasion which he gives to bring Him to his death.
With a mind as great as theirs he came
To find at home occasion for his fame,
Where dark confusions did the nations hide.

From this admonition they took only occasion to redouble their fault, and to sleep again.
This one has occasion of observing more than once in several fragments of antiquity, that are still to be seen in Rome.

3. Accidental cause.

Have you ever heard what was the occasion and first beginning of this custom?
That woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool.

The fair for whom they strove,
Nor thought, when she beheld the light from far,
Her beauty was th' occasion of the war.
Concerning ideas lodged in the memory, and upon occasion revived by the mind, it takes notice of them as of a former impression.

4. Reason not cogent, but opportune.

Your business calls on you,
And you embrace the occasion to depart.

5. Incidental need; casual exigence.

Never master had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasions.
Antony will use his affection where it is:
He married but his occasion here.

My occasions have found time to use them to toward a supply of money.
They who are desirous of a name in painting, should read with diligence, and make their observations of such things as they find for their purpose, and of which they may have occasion.

Syllogism is made use of on occasion to discover a fallacy hid in a rhetorical flourish.
The ancient canons were very well fitted for the occasion of the church in its purer ages.

'God hath put us into an imperfect state, where we have perpetual occasion of each other's assistance.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array,
But with the occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, may, seem sometimes to fly.

To OCCA'SION. v. a. [occasionner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To cause casually.

Who can find it reasonable that the soul should, in its retirement, during sleep, never light on any of those ideas it borrowed not from sensation, preserve the memory of no ideas but such, which being occasioned from the body, must needs be less natural to a spirit.

The good Palamist condemns the foolish thoughts, which a reflection on the prosperous state of his affairs had sometimes occasioned in him.

2. To cause; to produce.

I doubt not, whether the great encrease of that disease may not have been occasioned by the custom of much wine introduced into our common tables.

A consumption may be occasioned by running sores, or sinous fistulas, whose secret caves and winding burrows empty themselves by copious discharges.

By its stytic quality it affects the nerves, very often occasioning tremors.

3. To influence.

If we enquire what it is that occasions men to make several combinations of simple ideas into distinct modes, and neglect others which have as much an aptness to be combined, we shall find the reason to be the end of language.

OCCA'SIONABLE.* adj. [from occasion.] That may be occasioned.

This practice, of constantly and carefully observing our hearts, will fence us against immoderate pleasure, occasionable by men's hard opinions or harsh censures passed on us.

OCCA'SIONAL. adj. [occasional, Fr. from occasion.]

1. Incidental; casual.

Thus much is sufficient out of Scripture, to verify our explication of the deluge, according to the Mosaic history of the flood, and according to many occasional reflections dispersed in other places of Scripture concerning it.

2. Producing by accident.

The ground or occasional original hereof, was the amazement and sudden silence the unexpected appearance of wolves does often put upon travellers.

3. Produced by occasion or incidental exigence.

Besides these constant times, there are likewise occasional times for the performance of this duty.

Those letters were not writ to all;
Nor first intended but occasional,
Their absent sermons.

OCCA'SIONALLY. adv. [from occasional.]

According to incidental exigence; incidentally.

Authority and reason on her wait,
As one intended first, not after made Occasionally.

I have endeavoured to interweave with the assertions some of the proofs whereon they depend, and occasionally scatter several of the more important observations throughout the work.

OCCA'SIONER. n. s. [from occasion.] One that causes, or promotes by design or accident.

She with true lamentations made known to the world, that her new greatness did no way comfort her in respect of her brother's loss, whom she studied all means possible to revenge upon every one of the occasioners.

Some men will load me as if I were a wilful and resolved occasioner of my own and my subjects' miseries.

In case a man dig a pit and leave it open, whereby it happeneth his neighbour's beast to fall thereinto and perish, the owner of the pit is to make it good, in as much as he was the occasioner of that loss to his neighbour. Sanderson.

OCCECA'TION. † n. s. [occacatio, from occæo, Lat.] The act of blinding or making blind; state of being blind.

It is an addition to the misery of this inward occacation. Bp. Hall, Occas. Medit. § 57.

We fall under the same occacation, which our Saviour upbraids to the Jews, that seeing we see not, neither do we understand.

Lively Oracles, &c. p. 199.

Those places speak of obduration and occacation, so as if the blindness that is in the minds, and hardness that is in the hearts of wicked men, were from God. Sanderson.

OCCIDENT. n. s. [from occidens, Latin.] The west.

The envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the tract
Of his bright passage to the occident.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

OCCIDENTAL. adj. [occidentalis, Latin.] Western.

Ere twice in murr and occidental damp,
Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp.

Shakespeare.

If she had not been drained, she might have tiled her palaces with occidental gold and silver.

Hovell.

East and west have been the obvious conceptions of philosophers, magnifying the condition of India above the setting and occidental climates.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

OCCIDUOUS. adj. [occidens, Lat.] Western.

OCCIPITAL. adj. [occipitalis, Lat.] Placed in the hinder part of the head.

OCCIPUT. n. s. [Latin.] The hinder part of the head.

His broad-brim'd hat

Hangs o'er his occiput most quaintly,
To make the knave appear more saintly. Butler.

OCCISION. † n. s. [from occisio, Lat.] The act of killing.

This kind of occision of a man, according to the laws of the kingdom, and in execution thereof, ought not to be numbered in the rank of crimes.

Hale, H. P. C. ch. 42.

To OCCLUDE. v. a. [occludo, Latin.]
To shut up.

They take it up, and roll it upon the earths, whereby occluding the pores they conserve the natural humidity, and so prevent corruption.

Brown.

OCCLU'SE. adj. [occlusus, Latin.] Shut up; closed.

The appulse is either plenary and occlude, so as to preclude all passages of breath or voice through the mouth; or else partial and previous, so as to give them some passages out of the mouth.

Holder on Speech.

OCCLU'SION. † n. s. [from occlusio, Latin.]
The act of shutting up.

The constriction and occlusion of the orifice.

Hovell, Lett. i. iii. 30.

OCCULT. adj. [occulte, Fr. occultus, Lat.]
Secret; hidden; unknown; undiscoverable.

An artist will play a lesson on an instrument without minding a stroke; and our tongues will run divisions in a tune not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere:
which effects are to be attributed to some secret act of the soul, which to us is utterly occult, and without the ken of our intellects. Glanville.

These instincts we call occult qualities; which is all one with saying that we do not understand how they work. L'Estrange.

These are manifest qualities, and their causes only are occult. And the Aristotelians give the name of occult qualities not to manifest qualities, but to such qualities only as they supposed to lie hid in bodies, and to be the unknown causes of manifest effects. Newton, Opt.

OCCULTA'TION. n. s. [occultatio, Lat.] In astronomy, is the time that a star or planet is hid from our sight, when eclipsed by interposition of the body of the moon, or some other planet between it and us. Harris.

OCCULTED.* adj. [from occult.] Secret.
Not in use.

If his occulted guilt

Do not itself unken in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

OCCULTNESS. n. s. [from occult.] Secret-ness; state of being hid.

OCCUPANCY. n. s. [from occupans, Latin.]
The act of taking possession.

Of moveables, some are things natural; others, things artificial. Property in the first is gained by occupancy, in the latter by improvement.

Warburton on Lib. Property.

OCCUPANT. † n. s. [occupans, Latin.] He that takes possession of any thing.

Of beasts and birds the property passeth with the possession, and goeth to the occupant; but of civil people not so. Bacon.

The number of the apostles was not yet full;
one room is left void for a future occupant.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 3.

To OCCUPATE. v. a. [occupo, Latin.] To possess; to hold; to take up.

Drunken men are taken with a plain destitution in voluntary motion; for that the spirits of the wine oppress the spirits animal, and occupate part of the place where they are, and so make them weak to move. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

OCCUPA'TION. n. s. [from occupation, Fr.
occupatio, Lat.]

1. The act of taking possession.
Spain hath enlarged the bounds of its crown within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans: I speak not of matches or unions, but of arms, occupations, invasions. Bacon.

2. Employment; business.
Such were the distresses of the then infant world; so incessant their occupations about provision for food, that there was little leisure to commit any thing to writing. Woodward.

In your most busy occupations, when you are never so much taken up with other affairs, yet now and then send up an ejaculation to the God of your salvation. Wake.

3. Trade; calling; vocation.
The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish. Shakespeare, Coriol.

He was of the same craft with them, and wrought, for by their occupation they were tent-makers. Acts, xviii. 3.

OCCUPIER. n. s. [from occupy.]

1. A possessor; one who takes into his possession.

If the title of occupiers be good in a land unpeopled, why should it be bad accounted in a country peopled thinly? Raleigh.

2. One who follows any employment.
Thy merchandise, and the occupiers of thy merchandise, shall fall into the midst of the seas.

Ezek. xxvii. 27.

To OCCUPY. v. a. [occupar, French; oc-cupo, Lat.]

1. To possess; to keep; to take up.
How shall he that occupieth the room of the un-learned say Amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?

1 Cor. xiv. 16.

Powder being suddenly fired altogether, upon this high rarefaction, requireth a greater space than before its body occupied. Brown, Vulg. Err.

He must assert infinite generations before that first deluge; and then the earth could not receive them, but the infinite bodies of men must occupy an infinite space. Bentley, Sermons.

2. To busy; to employ.

An archbishop may have cause to occupy more chaplains than six. Act of Hen. VIII.

They occupied themselves about the sabbath,
yielding exceeding praise to the Lord.

2 Mac. viii. 97.

How can he get wisdom that driveth oxen and is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bullocks? Ecc. xxxviii. 25.

He that giveth his mind to the law of the most high, and is occupied in the meditation thereof, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancient, and be occupied in prophecies. Ecclesi. xxxix. 1.

3. To follow as business.

They that go down to the sea in ships, and occupy their business in deep waters.

Ps. 107. Comm. Prayer.

Mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise.
Ex. xxvii. 9.

4. To use; to expend.

All the gold occupied for the work, was twenty and nine talents. Exodus, xxxviii. 24.

To OCCUPY. v. n. To follow business.
He called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy, till I come. St. Luke, xix. 13.

To OCCUR. v. n. [occurro, Latin.]

1. To be presented to the memory or attention.

There doth not occur to me any use of this experiment for profit. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The mind should be always ready to turn itself to the variety of objects that occur, and allow them as much consideration as shall be thought fit. Locke.

The far greater part of the examples that occur to us, are so many encouragements to vice and disobedience. Rogers.

2. To appear here and there.

In Scripture though the word heir occur, yet there is no such thing as heir in our author's sense. Locke.

3. To clash; to strike against; to meet.

Bodies have a determinate motion according to the degrees of their external impulse, their inward principle of gravitation, and the resistance of the bodies they occur with. Bentley.

4. To obviate; to intercept; to make opposition to. A Latinism.

Before I begin that I must occur to one specious objection against this proposition. Bentley.

OCCURRENCE. n. s. [occurrence, Fr. from occur: this was perhaps originally oc-curents.]

1. Incident: accidental event.

In education most time is to be bestowed on that which is of the greatest consequence in the ordinary course and occurrences of that life the young man is designed for. Locke.

2. Occasional presentation.

Voyages detain the mind by the perpetual occurrence and expectation of something new. Watts.

OCCURRENT. n. s. [occurrens, Fr. occurens, Latin.] Incident; any thing that happens.

Contentions were as yet never able to prevent two evils, the one a mutual exchange of unseemly and unjust disgraces, the other a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work upon all occurents, with most advantage in private. Hooker's Dedication.

He did himself certify all the news and occurents in every particular, from Calice, to the mayor and aldermen of London. Bacon, Hen. VII.

OCCURSE.* n. s. [occursus, Lat.] Meeting.

If any thing at unawares shall pass from us, a sudden accident, occurse, or meeting, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. 7th ed. p. 208.

OCCURSION. n. s. [occursus, Latin.] Clash; mutual blow.

In the resolution of bodies by fire, some of the dissipated parts may, by their various occursion occasioned by the heat, stick closely.

Boyle.

Now should those active particles, ever and anon jumbled by the occursion of other bodies, so orderly keep their cells without alteration of site.

Glanville, Scepiss.

OCEAN.† n. s. [ocean, Fr. oceanus, Latin; Ὠκεανός, Greek, from ὠκέω, valere, to flow or slide swiftly.] Eustathius. Others say, that the Greeks adopted the Phenician word og, which denotes the circumference of the ocean, and which is derived from the Hebrew hohg, it surrounds.]

1. The main; the great sea.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The golden sun salutes the morn,

And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,

Gallops the zodiack.

Tit. Andronicus.

2. Any immense expanse.

Time, in general, is to duration, as place to expansion. They are so much of those boundless oceans of eternity and immensity, as it set out and distinguished from the rest, to denote the position of finite real beings, in those uniform, infinite oceans of duration and space.

Locke.

OCEAN.† adj. [This is not usual, though conformable to the original import of the word, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Milton, Nothing, however, was more usual among our old writers.] Pertaining to the main or great sea.

At forty miles beyond the city, it falleth into the ocean sea.

Robinson, Tr. of More's Utopia, (1551), ch. 2. To burst the billows of the ocean sea.

Hist. of Orlando Furioso, (1599.)

And too long painted on the ocean streams.

Drummond, Poems, P. ii. (1616.)

In bulk as huge as that sea-beast

Leviathan, which God of all his works

Created hugest that swim the ocean stream.

Milton, P. L.

Bounds were set

To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave.

Milton, P. L.

OCEANICK.† adj. [from ocean.] Pertaining to the ocean.

Dict.

No one yet knows, to what distance any of the oceanic birds go to sea.

Cook's Voyage.

OCELLATED. adj. [ocellatus Latin.] Resembling the eye.

The white butterfly lays its offspring on cabbage leaves; a very beautiful reddish ocellated one.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

OCHLOCRATY.* n. s. [ὀχλοκρατία, Greek.] Government by a mob.

If any form of policy degenerate, it must be either into a tyranny, an oligarchy, or a dissolute ochlocraty.

Downing, Disc. of the State, Eccl. (1633), p. 22. If it begin to degenerate into an ochlocraty, then it turns into a most headstrong intolerable tyranny.

Ibid. p. 15.

OCCHRE.† n. s. [ochre, ocre, Fr. ocre, Gr. perhaps from ὀχρῶς, pale.]

The earths distinguished by the name of ochres are those which have rough or naturally dusty surfaces, are but slightly coherent in their texture, and are com-

Brown.

OCULARLY.† adv. [from ocular.] To the observation of the eye.

Great desire I had to inform myself ocularly of the state and practice of the Roman church; the knowledge whereof might be of no small use to me in my holy station.

Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

The same is ocularly confirmed by Vives upon Austin.

Brown.

O'ULATE. adj. [oculatus, Lat.] Having eyes, knowing by the eye.

5 x

O'CULIST. n. s. [from oculus. Lat.] One who professes to cure distempers of the eyes.

If there be a speck in the eye, we take it off; but he were a strange oculist who would pull out the eye. Bacon.

I am no oculist, and if I should go to help one eye and put out the other, we should have an untoward business. L'Estrange.

O'CULUS beli. [Latin.]

The oculus beli of jewellers, probably of Pliny, is an accidental variety of the agat kind; having a grey horny ground, circular delineations, and a spot in the middle, resembling the eye; whence its name. Woodward.

ODD. adj. [udda, Swedish. Dr. Johnson and others. Junius thinks it to be derived from added. Mr. H. Tooke contends, that it is the participle owed, ow'd. "Thus," he says, "when we are counting by couples, or by pairs, we say, one pair, two pairs, &c. and one owed, ow'd, to make up another pair. It has the same meaning when we say, an odd man, or an odd action: it still relates to pairing; and we mean — without a fellow, unmatched, not such another, one owed to make up a couple." Div. of Purley, ii. 38. This specious etymon will hardly be received. A later writer carries it to the Greek ὀδός, "which signifies every thing that can relate to the unity, if I may so express myself, of a being. ὀδός, say the ordinary lexicographers, peculiaris, sui generis, suus, privatus." Whiter, Etym. Mag. p. 478. Our word is thus to be traced to the first syllable (id) of the Greek word; but the same etymologist also notices the Arab, ahd, the term for one.]

1. Not even; not divisible into equal numbers.

This is the third time; I hope Good luck lies in odd numbers. Shakespeare.

What verity there is in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man by even and odd; ascribing the odd unto the right side, and the even unto the left; and so by parity, or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. More than a round number; indefinitely exceeding any number specified.

The account of the profits of Ulster, from the fifth year of Edward III. until the eighth, do amount but to nine hundred and odd pounds.

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was destroyed in a deluge of water. Burnet, Theology.

The year, without regard to days, ends with an odd day, and odd hours, odd minutes, and odd seconds of minutes; so that it cannot be measured by any even number of days, hours, or minutes. Holder on Time.

3. Particular; uncouth; extraordinary; not like others; not to be numbered among any class. In a sense of contempt or dislike.

Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense, Such a dependency of thing on thing, As e'er I heard in madness. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white, To make up my delight, Locke.

No odd becoming graces, Black eyes, or little know not what's in faces. Suckling.

When I broke loose from writers who have employed their wit and parts in propagating of vice, I did not question but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Spectator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought; He made his list'n'g scholars stand, Their mouth still cover'd with their hand: Else, may be, some odd thinking youth, Might have refus'd to let his ears Attend the musick of the spheres. Prior.

This blue colour being made by nothing else than by reflexion of a speculat superficies, seems so odd a phenomenon and so difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it deserved to be taken notice of. Newton, Opticks.

So proud I am no slave, So impudent I own myself no knave, So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave. Pope. To counterpoise this hero of the mode, Some for renown are singular and odd; What other men dislike is sure to please, Of all mankind these dear antipodes. Young.

4. Not noted; not taken into the common account; unheeded.

I left him cooling of the air with sighs, In an odd angle of the isle. Shakespeare, Tempest.

There are yet missing some few odd lads that you remember not. Shakespeare, Tempest.

5. Strange; unaccountable; fantastical.

How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself, As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet, To put an antic disposition on. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

It is an odd way of uniting parties to deprive a majority of part of their ancient right, by conferring it on a faction, who had never any right at all. Swift. Patients have sometimes coveted odd things which have relieved them; as salt and vinegar. Arbutnot on Aliments.

With such odd maxims to thy flocks retreat, Nor furnish mirth for ministers of state. Young.

O'DDITY.* n. s. [from odd.] Singularity; particularity: applied both to persons and things. I should not ridicule a squinting eye, a stammering voice; a provincial dialect, the peculiarities of a profession, or indeed any oddity, or deformity, that was not strictly immoral. Amusements of Clergymen, p. 138.

O'DDLY. adv. [from odd.] This word and oddness, should, I think, be written with one d; but the writers almost all combine against it.]

1. Not evenly.

2. Strangely; particularly; irregularly; unaccountably; uncouthly; contrarily to custom.

How oddly will it sound, that I Must ask my child forgiveness. Shakespeare, Tempest.

One man is pressed with poverty, and looks somewhat oddly upon it. Collier on the Spleen.

The dreams of sleeping men are made up of the waking man's ideas, though for the most part oddly put together. Locke.

This child was near being excluded out of the species of man barely by his shape. It is certain a figure a little more oddly turned had cast him, and he had been executed. Locke.

The real essence of substances we know not; and therefore are so undetermined in our nominal essences, which we make ourselves, that if several men were to be asked concerning some oddly-shaped fetus, whether it were a man or no? one should meet with different answers. Locke.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated; She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

As masters in the clare obscure, With various light your eyes allure; A flaming yellow here they spread; Draw off in blue, or charge in red; Yet from these colours oddly mix'd, Your sight upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

They had seen a great black substance lying on the ground very oddly shaped. Swift.

Fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped, according to the modification of their constituent salts, or the cavities they are formed in. Bentley.

O'DDNESS. n. s. [from odd.]

1. The state of being not even.

Take but one from three, and you not only destroy the oddness, but also the essence, of that number. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 307.

2. Strangeness; particularity; uncouthness; irregularity.

Coveting to recommend himself to posterity, Cicero begged it as an alms of the historians, to remember his consulship: and observe the oddness of the event; all their histories are lost, and the vanity of his request stands recorded in his own writings. Dryden.

A knave is apprehensive of being discovered; and this habitual concern puts an oddness into his looks. Collier.

My wife fell into a violent disorder, and I was a little discomposed at the oddness of the accident. Swift.

ODDS. n. s. [from odd.]

1. Inequality; excess of either compared with the other.

Between these two cases there are great odds. Hooker.

The case is yet not like, but there appeareth great odds between them. Spenser on Ireland.

I will lay the odds that ere this year expire, We bear our civil swords and native fire, As far as France. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I chiefly who enjoy So far the happier lot, enjoying thee Pre-eminent by so much odds. Milton, P. L.

Shall I give him to partake Full happiness with me? or rather not; But keep the odds of knowledge in my power Without copartner? Milton, P. L.

Cromwel, with odds of number and of fate, Remov'd this bulwark of the church and state. Wallar.

All these, thus unequally furnished with truth, and advanced in knowledge, I suppose of equal natural parts; all the odds between them has been the different scope that has been given to their understandings to range in. Locke.

Judging is balancing an account, and determining on which side the odds lie. Locke.

2. More than an even wager; more likely than the contrary.

Since every man by nature is very prone to think the best of himself; and of his own condition; it is odds but he will find a shrewd temptation. South.

The presbyterian party endeavoured one day to introduce a debate about repealing the test clause, when there appeared at least four to one odds against them. Swift.

Some bishop bestows upon them some inconsiderable benefice, when 'tis odds they are already encumbered with a numerous family. Swift, Miscell.

3. Advantage; superiority.

And though the sword, some understood,
In force had much the odds of wood,
'Twas nothing so; both sides were balanc'd
So equal, none knew which was valiant'st.

Hudibras.

4. Quarrel; debate; dispute.

I can't speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds.

Shakespeare, Othello.

What is the night?

Almost at odds with the morning, which is which.

Shakespeare.

He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three;
Until the goose came out of door,
And staid the odds by adding four.

Shakespeare, L. Lab. Lost.

Gods of whatsoe'er degree,
Resume not what themselves have given,
Or any brother god in heav'n;
Which keeps the peace among the gods,
Or they must always be at odds.

Swift, Miscell.

ODE.† n. s. [ode, Fr. ode, Gr. ὕμνη, from αἰδέω], to sing. Ronsard is said to have introduced the word into the French language. A poem written to be sung to music; a lyric poem; the ode is either of the greater or less kind. The less is characterised by sweetness and ease; the greater by sublimity, rapture, and quickness of transition.

A man haunts the forests that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

O run, prevent them with thy humble ode,
And lay it lowly at his blessed feet.

Milton, Ode.

What work among you scholar gods!
Phœbus must write him am'rous odes;
And thou, poor cousin, must compose
His letters in submissive prose.

Prior.

O'DIBLE.† adj. [from odi.] Hateful. Dict.

Apes, howlettes, meremaydes, and other odible monsters. Bale on the Rev. P. iii. (1550.) A a. 4.

ODIOUS. adj. [odieux, Fr. odiosus, Lat.]1. Hateful; detestable; abominable.

For ever all goodness will be most charming;
for ever all wickedness will be most odious.

Synat.

Hatred is the passion of defence, and there is a kind of hostility included in its very essence. But then, if there could have been hatred in the world, when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object.

South.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince:
Expel from Italy that odious name.

Dryden.

She breathes the odious fume
Of nauseous steams, and poisons all the room.

Granville.

2. Exposed to hate.

Another means for raising money, was, by inquiring after offences of officers in great place, who as by unjust dealing they became most odious,
so by justice in their punishments the prince acquired both love and applause.

Hayward.

He had rendered himself odious to the parliament.

Clarendon.

3. Causing hate; invidious.

The seventh from thee,
The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore so beset
With foes, for daring single to be just,
And utter odious truth that God would come
To judge them with his saints.

Milton, P. L.

4. A word expressive of disgust: used by women.

Green fields and shady groves, and crystal springs,

And larks and nightingales, are odious things;
But smoke, and dust, and noise, and crowds delight.

Young.

O'DIOUSLY. adv. [from odious.]1. Hatefully; abominably.

Had thy love, still odiously pretended,
Been as it ought, sincere, it would have taught thee

Far other reasonings.

Milton, S. A.

2. Invidiously; so as to cause hate.

Arbitrary power no sober man can fear, either from the king's disposition or his practice; or even where you would odiously lay it, from his ministers.

Dryden.

O'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from odious.]1. Hatefulness.

Have a true sense of his sin, of its odiousness,
and of its danger.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. The state of being hated.

There was left of the blood royal, an aged gentleman of approved goodness, who had gotten nothing by his cousin's power but danger from him, and odiousness for him.

Sidney.

O'DIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Invidiousness; quality of provoking hate.

The odium and offences which some men's ri-gour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I was resolved to have expiated.

K. Charles.

She threw the odium of the fact on me,
And publicly avow'd her love to you.

Dryden.

Projectors, and inventors of new taxes being hateful to the people, seldom fail of bringing odium upon their master.

Davenant.

ODONTALGICK. adj. [ὀδὼν and ἀλγος.] *Pertaining to the tooth-ach.O'DORAMENT. n. s. [odoramentum, Lat.]

A perfume; any strong scent.

To these you may add odorsaments, perfumes,
and suffumigations. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 387.

O'DORATE.† adj. [odoratus, Lat. odorato, Ital.]

Scented; having a strong scent, whether fetid or fragrant.

Smelling is with a communication of the breath, or vapour of the objects odorate, Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Some oriental kind of lignum—producing a sweet and odorate bush of flowers.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 9.

ODORIFEROUS. adj. [oderifer, Lat.]

Giving scent; usually, sweet of scent;
fragrant; perfumed.

A bottle of vinegar so buried, came forth more lively and odoriferous, smelling almost like a violet.

Bacon.

There stood in this room presses that enclosed
Robes odoriferous.

Chapman.

Gentle gales

Fanning their odoriferous wings dispense
Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole
These balmy spoils.

Milton, P. L.

Smelling bodies send forth effluvia of steams, without sensibly wasting. A grain of musk will send forth odoriferous particles for scores of years, without its being spent.

Locke.

ODORIFEROUSNESS. n. s. [from odoriferous.]

Sweetness of scent; fragrance.

O'DOROUS.† adj. [odorus, Lat. odoreux, old French. Milton has once placed the accent on the second syllable of this word; which, Mr. Nares says, is a license found only in this passage, and, if the etymology were considered, would be accounted right. But this accentuation is not peculiar to Milton.] Fragrant; perfumed; sweet of scent.

Such fragrant flowers do give most odorous smell

But her sweet odour did them all excel. Spenser.

Their private roofs on odorous timber borne,
Such as might palaces for kings adorn. Wallar.

The bright consummate flower

Spirits odorous breathes. Milton, P. L. v. 482.

The hills, and dales, that plants odorous bare.

Transl. of Marino, by T. R. (1675.) p. 60.

We smell, because parts of the odorous body touch the nerves of our nostrils.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

O'DOUR. n. s. [odor, Lat. odeur, Fr.]1. Scent, whether good or bad.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, sent for loaves of new bread, which having opened and poured a little wine into them, he kept himself alive with the odour till a certain feast was past.

Bacon.

Infusions in air, for so we may call odours,
have the same diversities with infusions in water;
in that the several odours which are in one flower or other body, issue at several times, some earlier, some later.

Bacon.

They refer sapor unto salt, and odour unto sulphur; they vary much concerning colour.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Where silver riv'lets play thro' flow'ry meads,
And woodbines give their sweets, and limes their shades,

Black kennels absent odours she regrets,
And stops her nose at beds of violets.

Young.

2. Fragrance; perfume; sweet scent.

Me seem'd I smelt a garden of sweet flow'rs
That dainty odours from them threw around,
For damsels fit to deck their lovers' bow'rs.

Spenser.

By her intercession with the king she would lay a most seasonable and popular obligation upon the whole nation, and leave a pleasant odour of her grace and favour to the people behind her.

Clarendon.

The Levites burned the holy incense in such quantities as refreshed the whole multitude with its odours, and filled all the region about them with perfume.

Addison.

OE. This combination of vowels does not properly belong to our language, nor is ever found but in words derived from the Greek, and not yet wholly conformed to our manner of writing: oe has in such words the sound of E.ECONOMICKS. n. s. pl. [οικονομικαί; economy, Fr. from economy.] Both it and its derivatives are under economy. Management of household affairs.

A prince's leaving his business wholly to his ministers, is as dangerous an error in politics, as a master's committing all to his servant, is in economicks.

L'Estrange.

EUMENICAL. adj. [εὐμενικαί; from εὐμενία.] General; respecting the whole habitable world.

This Nicene council was not received as an ecumenical council in any of the eastern patriarchates, excepting only that of Constantinople.

Stillind fleet.

We must not make a computation of the Catholic church from that part of it which was within the compass of the Roman empire, though called ecumenical.

Lestie.

EDEMATA.† n. s. [εἰδημα, from αἰδέω, to swell.] The word is edeme, in the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor, 1656, and must have been in use long before, as it occurs among the words requiring explanation in Sylvester's Du Bartas, 1621.] A tumour. It is now and commonly by surgeons confined to a white, soft, insensible tumour, proceeding from cold and aqueous humours, such as happen to hydropick constitutions.

Quincy.

CEDEMA'TICK. } adj. from œdema.] Per-CEDEMATOUS. } taining to an œdema.

It is primarily generated out of the effusion of melancholick blood, or secondarily out of the dregs and remainder of a phlegmonous or œdematick tumour.

Harvey.

The great discharge of matter, and the extremity of pain, wasted her, œdematus swellings arose in her legs, and she languished and died. Wiseman.

CE'LIAD. n. s. [from œil, French.]

Glance; wink; token of the eye.

She gave œliads and most speaking looks

To noble Edmund, Shakespeare, K. Lear.

O'ER, contracted from over. See OVER.

His tears defac'd the surface of the well,

With circle after circle as they fell,

And now the lovely face but half appears,

O'er-run with wrinkles and defac'd with tears.

Addison.

CE'SOPHAGUS. n. s. [from ὀσφ, wicker, from some similitude in the structure of this part to the texture of that; and φάγω to eat.] The gullet; a long, large, and round canal, that descends from the mouth, lying all along between the windpipe and the joints of the neck and back, to the fifth joint of the back, where it turns a little to the right, and gives way to the descending artery; and both run by one another, till at the ninth the œsophagus turns again to the left, pierces the midriff, and is continued to the left orifice of the stomach.

Quincy.

Wounds penetrating the œsophagus and aspera arteria, require to be stitched close, especially those of the œsophagus, where the sustenance and saliva so continually presseth into it.

Wiseman, Surgery.

OF.† prep. [af, Goth. of, Icel. of, Saxon.

This word is sometimes redundantly placed after the participle active; and should be avoided. Some have objected to the ternary exhibition, in one sentence, of this word: "She [Great Britain] sits in the midst of a mighty affluence of all the necessaries and conveniences of life." Addison, State of the War. The image in this sentence, bishop Hurd has observed, is fine; but the expression somewhat exceptionable on the account of three of's coming together. Others see no inelegance in this accumulation; and cite Genesis, iii. 2. "We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden."

1. It is put before the substantive that follows another in construction; as, of these part were slain; that is, part of these.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross

Of full three thousand ducats.

He to his natural endowments of a large invention, a ripe judgement, and a strong memory, has joined the knowledge of the liberal arts.

Dryden.

All men naturally fly to God in extremity, and the most atheistical person in the world, when forsaken of all hopes of any other relief, is forced to acknowledge him.

Tillotson.

The rousing of the mind with some degrees of vigour, does set it free from those idle companions.

Locke.

The value of land is raised only by a greater plenty of money.

Locke.

They will receive it at last with an ample accumulation of interest.

Smalbridge.

2. It is put among superlative adjectives.

The most renowned of all are those to whom the name is given Philippinæ.

Abbot, Desc. of the World.

We profess to be animated with the best hopes of any men in the world.

Tillotson.

At midnight the most dismal and unseasonable time of all other, all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps.

Tillotson.

We are not to describe our shepherds as shepherds at this day really are, but as they may be conceived then to have been, when the best of men followed the employment.

Pope.

Peace, of all worldly blessings, is the most valuable.

Small.

3. From.

The captain of the Helots, with a blow whose violence grew of fury, not of strength, or of strength proceeding of fury, struck Palladius upon the side of the head.

Sidney.

you

To morning's holy office. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

6. Formulary of devotions.

Whosoever hath children or servants, let him take care that they say their prayers before they begin their work: the Lord's prayer, the ten commandments, and the creed, is a very good office for them, if they are not fitted for more regular offices. Bp. Taylor.

7. Rooms in a house appropriated to particular business.

What do we but draw anew the model

In fewer offices? at least desert

To build at all. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Let offices stand at distance, with some low galleries to pass from them to the palace itself. Bacon.

8. [Officina, Latin.] Place where business is transacted.

What shall good old York see there, But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls, Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones? Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Empson and Dudley, though they could not but bear of these scruples in the king's conscience, yet as if the king's soul and his money were in several offices, that the one was not to intermeddle with the other, went on with as great rage as ever. Bacon, Hen. VII.

He had set up a kind of office of address; his general correspondencies by letters. Fell.

To O'FFICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to discharge; to do.

I will be gone, although

The air of Paradise did fan the house,

And angels offic'd all. Shakspeare, All's well.

O'FFICER. n. s. [officier, French.]

1. A man employed by the publick.

'Tis an office of great worth,

And you an officer fit for the place. Shakspeare.

Submit you to the people's voices,

Allow their officers, and be content

To suffer lawful censure. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The next morning there came to us the same officer that came to us at first to conduct us to the stranger's house. Bacon.

If it should fall into the French hands, all the princes would return to be the several officers of his court. Temple.

As a magistrate or great officer he locks himself up from all approaches. South, Sermon.

Birds of prey are an emblem of rapacious officers.

A superior power takes away by violence from them that which by violence they took away from others. L'Estrange.

Since he has appointed officers to hear it, a suit at law in itself must needs be innocent. Kettleworth.

2. A commander in the army.

If he did not nimbly ply the spade,

His rusty officer ne'er fail'd to crack

His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden.

I summon'd all my officers in haste,

All came resolv'd to die in my defence. Dryden.

The bad disposition he made in landing his men, shews him not only to be much inferior to Pompey as a sea officer, but to have had little or no skill in that element. Arbutnot.

3. One who has the power of apprehending criminals, or men accountable to the law.

The thieves are posset with fear

So strongly, that they dare not meet each other;

Each takes his fellow for an officer. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

We charge you

To go with us unto the officers. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

O'FFICERED. adj. [from officer.] Commanded; supplied with commanders.

What could we expect from an army officered by Irish papists and outlaws. Addison, Freeholder.

OFFICIAL. adj. [official, French; from office.]

1. Conducive; appropriate with regard to use.

In this animal are the guts, the stomach, and other parts official unto nutrition, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, their provisions had been superfluous. Brown.

2. Pertaining to a publick charge.

The tribunes

Endue you with the people's voice. Remains

That, in th' official marks invested, you

Anon do meet the senate. Shakspeare, Coriol.

OFFICIAL. n. s.

Official is that person to whom the cognizance of causes is committed by such as have ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

Ayliffe.

A poor man found a priest over familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him before the bishop's official for defamation.

Camden.

OFFICIALLY.* adv. [from official.]

1. By authority.

Some bitterness is officially squeezed into every man's cup for his soul's health.

Sterne, Sermon on Penances.

2. Agreeably to the duties of an office; by virtue of an office.

OFFICIALTY. n. s. [officialité, French; from official.] The charge or post of an office.

The office of an officialty to an archdeacon;

Ayliffe.

To OFFICIATE. v. a. [from office.] To give in consequence of office.

All her number'd stars that seem to roll Spaces incomprehensible, for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light
Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot.

Milton, P. L.

To OFFICIATE. v. n.

1. To discharge an office, commonly in worship.

No minister officiating in the church, can with a good conscience omit any part of that which is commanded by the aforesaid law.

Sanderson.

Who of the bishops or priests that officiates at the altar, in the places of their sepulchres, ever said we offer to thee Peter or Paul?

Stillingfleet.

To prove curates no servants, is to rescue them from that contempt which they will certainly fall into under this notion; which considering the number of persons officiating this way, must be very prejudicial to religion.

Collier.

2. To perform an office for another.

OFFICIAL.† adj. [from officina, a shop.]

Used in a shop, or belonging to it: thus official plants and drugs are those used in the shops.

I had always, in my official state, been kept in awe by lace and embroideries.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 123.

OFFICIOUS. adj. [officieux, French; officiosus, Latin.]

1. Kind; doing good offices.

Yet, not to earth are those bright luminaries
Officious; but to thee earth's habitant.

Milton, P. L.

2. Importunately forward.

You are too officious

In her behalf that scorns your services. Shakespeare.
At Taunton they killed in fury an officious and eager commissioner for the subsidy.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Cato, perhaps

I'm too officious, but my forward cares
Would fain preserve a life of so much value.

Addison.

OFFICIOUSLY.† adv. [from officious.]

1. Importunately forward.

This was the rare morsel so officially snatched up.

Milton, Areopagitica.

The most corrupt are most obsequious grown,
And those they scorn'd, officially they own.

Dryden.

Flat'ring crouds officially appear,
To give themselves, not you, an happy year.

Dryden.

2. Dutifully; with proper service.

Trusting only upon our Saviour, we act wisely and justly, gratefully and officially.

Barrow, vol. iii. § 1.

3. Kindly; with unasked kindness.

Let thy goats officially be nurst,
And led to living streams to quench their thirst.

Dryden.

OFFICIOUSNESS. n. s. [from officious.]

1. Forwardness of civility, or respect, or endeavour. Commonly in an ill sense.

I shew my officiousness by an offering, though I betray my poverty by the measure.

South.

2. Service.

In whom is required understanding as in a man, courage and vivacity as in a lion, service and ministerial officiousness as in the ox, and expedition as in the eagle.

Brown.

OFFING.† n. s. [from off.] The act of steering to a distance from the land.

Dr. Johnson.—Offing implies out at sea, or at a competent distance from the shore. Dr. Hawkesworth.
We had by noon a pretty good offing.

Cartier's Voyage.

OFFSET. n. s. [off and set.] Sprout; shoot of a plant.

They are multiplied not only by the seed, but many also by the root, producing offsets or creeping under ground.

Ray.

Some plants are raised from any part of the root, others by offsets, and in others the branches set in the ground will take root.

Locke.

OFFSCOURING. n. s. [off and scour.] Re-cement; part rubbed away in cleaning any thing.

Thou hast made us as the offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people.

Lam. iii. 45.

Being accounted, as St. Paul says, the very filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things.

Kettlewell.

OFFSCUM.* adj. [off and scum.] Refuse; vile.

A most vile game, devised by the offscum rascals of men.

Tr. of Boccacini, (1626), p. 207.

OFFSPRING.† n. s. [off and spring.] Sax. offspring.

Spenser has placed the accent on the last syllable, F. Q. iii. ix. 44.]

1. Propagation; generation.

All things coveting to be like unto God in being ever, that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seem to continue itself by offspring and propagation.

Hooker.

2. The thing propagated or generated; children; descendants.

When the fountain of mankind

Did draw corruption, and God's curse, by sin;
This was a charge, that all his heirs did bind,
And all his offspring grew corrupt therein.

Davies.

To the gods alone

Our future offspring, and our wives are known.

Dryden.

His principal actor is the son of a goddess, not to mention the offspring of other deities.

Addison, Spect.

3. Production of any kind.

Though both fell before their hour,
Time on their offspring hath no power;
Nor fire nor fate their days shall blast,
Nor death's dark veil their days o'ercast.

Denham.

To OFFUSCATE.† v. a. [offusco, Latin; offusquer, French.] To dim; to cloud; to darken.

Disdaining and despising all vice and laziness, which offuscate and difflame the children of good houses.

Wodroephe, Fr. Gramm. (1623), p. 364.

OFFUSCATION.† n. s. [from offuscate.]

The act of darkening.

It is this honour which man hath by being a little world, that he hath these earthquakes in himself, sudden shakings; these lightnings, sudden flashes; these thunders, sudden noises; these eclipses, sudden offuscations and darknings of his senses, &c. &c.

Donne, Devot. p. 6.

OFT.† adv. [oft, Saxon; ofta, Goth. oft, Icel. from of, oft, too much.] Often; frequently; not rarely; not seldom.

In labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft.

2 Cor. ii. 23.

It may be a true faith, for so much as it is; it is one part of true faith, which is oft mistaken for the whole.

Hammond.

Glory and popular praise,

Rocks, whereon greatest men have oft wreck'd.

Milton, P. R.

Favours to none, to all she smiles extends,
Oft she rejects, but never once offends.

Pope.

OFTEN.† adv. [from oft, Saxon; in the comparative, oftener, oftner; superlative, oftenest, oftnest.] Oft; frequently; many times; not seldom.

The queen that bore thee,

Oftner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

In journeying often.

2 Cor. ii. 26.

He sent for him the oftener.

Acts, xxiv. 26.

A lusty black-brow'd girl, with forehead broad and high,

That often had bewitcht the sea-gods with her eye.

Drayton.

Who does not more admire Cicero as an author, than as a consul of Rome, and does not oftner talk of the celebrated writers of our own country in former ages, than of any among their contemporaries?

Addison, Freeholder.

OFTEN.* adj. Frequent.

Our merciful God first visited this people in great and often mercy.

Alph. Sanday, Sermon.

Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities.

1 Tim. v. 23.

See, by often trials, what turn they take.

Locke on Educat. § 66.

OFTENNESS.* n. s. [from often.] Frequency.

Degrees of well-doing there could be none, except in the seldomness and oftenness of doing well.

Hooker.

OFTENTIMES. adv. [often and times.] From the composition of this word it is reasonable to believe, that oft was once an adjective, of which often was the plural; which seems retained in the phrase thine often infirmities: See OFTEN.] Frequently; many times; often.

Is our faith in the blessed Trinity a matter needless, to be so oftentimes mentioned and opened in the principal part of that duty which we owe to God, our publick prayer?

Hooker.

The difficulty was by what means they could ever arrive to places oftentimes so remote from the ocean.

Woodward.

It is equally necessary that there should be a future state, to vindicate the justice of God, and solve the present irregularities of Providence, whether the best men be oftentimes only, or always the most miserable.

Atterbury.

OFTTIMES. adv. [oft and times.] Frequently; often.

Oftimes nothing profits more

Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd.

Milton, P. L.

Oftimes before I hither did resort,
Charm'd with the conversation of a man

Who led a rural life.

Dryden and Lee.

OGDOASTICH.* n. s. [ὀδοῖς and στιχῶς, Gr.] A poem of eight lines.

His request to Diana in an hexastich, and her answer in an ogdoastich, hexameters and pentameters,—are in the British story.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 1.
It will not be much out of the bias to insert, in this ogdoastich, a few verses of the Latin which was spoken in that age.

Howell, Instr. For. Trav. p. 143.

OGE† n. s. [ogive, augive, Fr. Cot-Ogi† v. a. grave.] A sort of moulding in architecture, consisting of a round and a hollow; almost in the form of an S, and is the same with what Vitruvius calls cima. Cima reversa, is an ogee with the hollow downwards. Harris.

OGGAN† n. s. [ogganno, Lat.] The act of snarling like a dog; murmuring; grumbling.

Nor will I abstain, notwithstanding your ogganition, to follow the steps and practice of antiquity.

Montagu, App. to Cæs. (1625.) p. 288.

O'GHAM.* n. s. A particular kind of steganography, or writing in cipher, practised by the Irish.

King Charles I. corresponded with the earl of Glamorgan, when in Ireland, in the ogham cipher. Askle, Orig. and Prog. of Writing, ch. 6.

To O'GLE. v. a. [oggh, an eye, Dutch.] To view with side glances, as in fondness; or with a design not to be heeded. From their high scaffold with a trumpet cheek, And ogling all their audience, then they speak.

Dryden.

Whom is he ogling yonder? himself in his looking glass.

Arbutnot.

O'GLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A side glance.

I teach the church ogle in the morning, and the playhouse ogle by candle-light. I have also brought over with me a new flying ogle fit for the ring. Addison, Spect. No. 46.

O'GLER. n. s. [oggheler, Dutch.] A sly gazer; one who views with side glances. Upon the disuse of the neck-piece, the tribe of oglers stared the fair sex in the neck rather than in the face. Addison.

Jack was a prodigious ogler; he would ogle you the outside of his eye inward, and the white upward. Arbutnot.

O'GLING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Practice of viewing with side glances.

If the female tongue will be in motion, why should it not be set to go right? Could they talk of the different aspects and conjunctions of planets, they need not be at the pains to comment upon oglings, and clandestine marriages. Addison.

If we inspect into the usual process of modern courtship, we shall find it to consist in a devout turn of the eyes, called ogling. Swift, Fragment.

The speech from the throne, in the opening of the session in 1795, threw out oglings and glances of tenderness. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

O'GLIO. n. s. [from olla, Spanish.] A dish made by mingling different kinds of meat; a medley; a hotchpotch.

These general motives of the common good, I will not so much as once offer up to your lordship, though they have still the upper end; yet, like great oglios, they rather make a shew than provoke appetite. Suckling.

Where is there such an oglio or medley of various opinions in the world again, as those men entertain in their service, without any scruple as to the diversity of their sects and opinions? King Charles.

He that keeps an open house, should consider that there are oglios of guests, as well as of dishes, and that the liberty of a common table is as good as a tacit invitation to all sorts of intruders.

L'Esrange.

O'GRE.* n. s. [ogre, French.] An imaginary monster of the East.

The prince heard enough to convince him of his danger, and then perceived that the lady, who called herself the daughter of an Indian king, was an ogress; wife to one of those savage demons, called ogres; who stay in remote places, and make use of a thousand wiles to surprize and devour passengers.

Transl. of Arabian Nights' Entertainments.

O'GRESSES.† n. s. [In heraldry.] Cannon balls of a black colour. Ainsworth.

Argent two bends sable betwix two ogresses.

Ashmole, Berk. ii. 417.

Oh. interject. An exclamation denoting pain, sorrow, or surprise.

Oh me! all the horse have got over the river, what shall we do? Walton, Angler.

My eyes confess it,

My every action speaks my heart aloud;
But, oh, the madness of my high attempt Speaks louder yet! Dryden, Span. Friar.

OIL.† n. s. [æ], Saxon; aleu, Goth. from ala, ignem sustentare. Ihre, and Serenius. Oel, Teut. oleum, Lat. ἔλαιον, Gr.]

1. The juice of olives expressed.

Bring pure oil olive beaten for the light.

Ex. xxvii. 20.

2. Any fat, greasy, unctuous, thin matter.

In most birds there is only one gland; in which are divers cells, ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

3. The juices of vegetables, whether expressed or drawn by the still, that will not mix with water.

Oil with chemists called sulphur, is the second of their hypostatical, and of the true five chymical principles. It is an inflammable, unctuous, subtle substance, which usually rises after the spirit. The chemists attribute to this principle all diversity of colours. There are two sorts of oil; one, which will swim upon water, as oil of anniseed and lavender, which the chemists call essential; and another kind, which probably is mixt with salts, and will sink in water, as the oil of guaiacum and cloves.

Harris.

After this expressed oil, we made trial of a distilled one; and for that purpose made choice of the common oil or spirit.

Boyle.

A curious artist long inur'd to toils

Of gentler sort, with combs, and fragrant oils,
Whether by chance, or by some god inspir'd,
So touch'd his curls, his mighty soul was fir'd.

Young.

To OIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear or lubricate with oil.

The men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Wotton.

Amber will attract straws thus oiled, it will convert the needles of dials, made either of brass or iron, although they be much oiled, for in those needles consisting free upon their centre there can be no adhesion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Swift oils many a spring which Harley moves.

Swift.

OILCOLOUR. n. s. [oil and colour.] Colour made by grinding coloured substances in oil.

Oilcolours, after they are brought to their due temper, may be preserved long in some degree of softness, kept all the while under water. Boyle.

OILER.* n. s. [from oil.] One who trades in oils and pickles. This word is in Huloet. We now say oilman.

OILINESS. n. s. [from oil.] Unctuousness; greasiness; quality approaching to that of oil.

Basil hath fat and succulent leaves; which oiliness, if drawn forth by the sun, will make a very great change. Bacon.

Wine is inflammable, so as it hath a kind of oiliness. Bacon.

Smoke from unctuous bodies and such whose oiliness is evident, he nameth nidor.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Chyle has the same principles as milk, viscosity from the caseous parts, an oiliness from the butyaceous parts, and an acidity from the tartareous.

Floyer.

The flesh of animals which live upon other animals, is most antiaid; though offensive to the stomach sometimes by reason of their oiliness.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

OILMAN. n. s. [oil and man.] One who trades in oils and pickles.

OILSHOP. n. s. [oil and shop.] A shop where oils and pickles are sold.

OILY. adj. [from oil.]

1. Consisting of oil; containing oil; having the qualities of oil.

The cloud, if it were oily or fatty, will not discharge; not because it sicketh faster, but because air preyeth upon water and flame, and fire upon oil. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Watry substances are more apt to putrify than oily. Bacon.

Flame is grosser than gross fire, by reason of the mixture with it of that viscous oily matter, which, being drawn out of the wood and candle, serves for fuel. Digby.

2. Fatty; greasy.

This *oil*ly rascal is known as well as Paul's; Go call him forth. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

OILYGRAIN. n. s. A plant. Miller.

OILYPALM. n. s. A tree. It grows as high as the mainmast of a ship. The inhabitants make an oil from the pulp of the fruit, and draw a wine from the body of the trees, which inebriates; and with the rind of these trees they make mats to lie on. Miller.

To OINT.† v. a. [ointer, ointer, old Fr. from unctus, Lat.] To anoint; to smear with something unctuous. Huloet.

Ointing [them] with honey in the sun.

Blount, Voyage to the Levant, (1650.) p. 94.

They oint their naked limbs with mother d'oil, Or from the founts where living sulphurs boil, They mix a medicine to foment their limbs.

Dryden.

Ismarus was not wanting to the war,
Directing ointed arrows from afar;
And death with poison arm'd. Dryden, Æn.

OINTMENT. n. s. [from oint.] Unguent; unctuous matter to smear any thing.

Life and long health that gracious ointment gave,
And deadly wounds could heal, and rear again
The senseless corpse appointed for the grave.

Spenser.

O'KER. n. s. [See OCHRE.] A colour.

And Klaius taking for his younglings cark,
Lest greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
Busy with oker did their shoulders mark. Sidney.

Red oker is one of the most heavy colours; yellow oker is not so, because it is clearer.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

OLD.† adj. [ealb, alb, ylb, Saxon; from ylbān, ylbān, senescere. See ELD.]

1. Past the middle part of life; not young.

To old age since you yourself aspire,
Let not old age disgrace my high desire. Sidney.
He woos high and low, young and old. Shakspeare.
Wanton as girls, as old wives fabulous. Cowley.
'Tis greatly wise to know, before we're told,
The melancholy news that we grow old. Young.

2. Decayed by time.

Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee.

Deut. viii. 4.

3. Of long continuance; begun long ago.
When Gardiner was sent over as ambassador into France, with great pomp, he spoke to an old acquaintance of his that came to take his leave of him. Camden, Rem.

4. Not new.

Ye shall eat of the old store. Levit. xxvi. 10.
The vine beareth more grapes when it is young;
but grapes that make better wine when it is old;
for that the juice is better concocted.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. Ancient; not modern.

The Genoese are cunning, industrious, and inured to hardship; which was the character of the old Ligurians. Addison.

6. Of any specified duration.

How old art thou? Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing; nor so old to doat on her for any thing. I have years on my back forty-eight. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Plead you to me, fair dame, I know you not,
In Ephesus I am but two hours old,
As strange unto your town as to your talk.

Shakspeare.

He did enfold

Within an ox-hide, flea'd at nine years old,
All the airie blasts, that were of stormie kinds.

Chapman.

Any man that shall live to see thirty persons descended of his body alive together, and all above three years old, makes this feast, which is done at the cost of the state. Bacon.

7. Subsisting before something else.

Equal society with them to hold,
Thou need'st not make new songs, but sing the old. Cowley.

The Latian king, unless he shall submit,
Own his old promise, and his new forget,
Let him in arms the power of Turnus prove.

Dryden.

He must live in danger of his house falling about his ears, and will find it cheaper to build it from the ground in a new form; which may not be so convenient as the old. Swift.

8. Long practised.

Then said I unto her that was old in adulteries, will they now commit whoredoms with her?

Ezek. xxiii. 43.

9. A word to signify, in burlesque language, more than enough. Dr. Johnson.—It is a common expression, in the middle and northern parts of England, for great, without burlesque intention.

I shall have old laughing.

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)
Here will be old utis; it will be an excellent stratagem. Shakspeare.

Here's a knocking indeed; if a man were porter of hell gate, he should have old turning the key. Shakspeare.

10. Of old. Long ago; from ancient times.

These things they cancel, as having been instituted in regard of occasions peculiar to the times of old, and as being now superfluous. Hooker.

Whether such virtue spent of old now fail'd
More angels to create. Milton, P. L.

A land there is, Hesperia nam'd of old,
The soil is fruitful, and the men are bold;
Now call'd Italia, from the leader's name. Dryden.

In days of old there liv'd of mighty fame,
A valiant prince, and Theseus was his name.

Dryden.

O'LDEN. adj. [from old; perhaps the Saxon plural.] Ancient. This word is not now in use.

Blood hath been shed ere now, i'th' olden time,
Ere human statute purg'd the gen'ral weal.

Shakspeare.

OLDFASHIONED. [old and fashion.] Formed according to obsolete custom.

Some are offended that I turned these tales into modern English; because they look on Chaucer as a dry, oldfashioned wit, not worth reviving.

Dryden.

He is one of those oldfashioned men of wit and pleasure, that shews his parts by railery on marriage. Addison.

O'LDISH.* adj. [from old.] Somewhat old. Sherwood.

O'LDNESS.† n. s. [from old.] Old age; antiquity; not newness; quality of being old.

This policy and reverence of ages, makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us till our oldness cannot relish them. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

We should serve in newness of spirit, not in oldness of the letter. Rom. vii. 6.

OLEAGINOUS. adj. [oleaginus, Lat. from oleum, oleagineus, Fr.] Oily; unctuous.

The sap when it first enters the root, is earthy, watery, poor, and scarce oleaginous.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

OLEAGINOUSNESS. n. s. [from oleaginous.]
Oiliness.

In speaking of the oleaginousness of urinous spirits, I employ the word most rather than all.

Boyle.

OLEANDER. n. s. [oleandre, Fr.] The plant noyau.

OLEASTER. n. s. [Latin.] Wild olive;
a species of olive. It is a native of Italy, but will endure the cold of our climate, and grow to the height of sixteen or eighteen feet. It blooms in June, and perfumes the circumambient air to a great distance. Miller.

O'LEOSE. } adj. [oleosus, Lat.] Oily.

O'LEOUS. }
Rain water may be endued with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleose particles it contains.

Ray on the Creation.

olfactory nerves. Locke.

O'LD. } adj. [oldus, Latin.] Stink-
O'LDIOUS. } ing; fetid.

In a civit cat a different and offensive odour proceeds partly from its food, that being especially fish, whereof this humour may be a garous excretion and oldious separation. Brown.

The fixt salt would have been not unlike that of men's urine; of which old and despicable liquor I choose to make an instance, because chemists are not wont to take care for extracting the fixt salt of it. Boyle.

OLIGA'RHICAL.* adj. [from oligarchy.]
Belonging to or denoting an oligarchy.

I cannot by royal favour, or by popular delusion, or by oligarchical cabal, elevate myself above a certain very limited point.

Burke, Speech in Parl. (1782.)

OLIGARCHY. n. s. [ὀλιγαρχία.] A form of government which places the supreme power in a small number; aristocracy.

The worst kind of oligarchy, is, when men are governed indeed by a few, and yet are not taught to know what those few be, whom they should obey. Sidney.

We have no aristocracies but in contemplation;
all oligarchies, wherein a few men domineer, do what they list. Burton.

After the expedition into Sicily, the Athenians chose four hundred men for administration of affairs, who became a body of tyrants, and were called an oligarchy, or tyranny of the few; under which hateful denomination they were soon after deposed. Swift.

O'LIO. n. s. [olla, Span.] A mixture; a medley. See OGlio.

Ben Jonson, in his Sejanus and Catiline, has given us this olio of a play, this unnatural mixture of comedy and tragedy.

Dryden, on Dram. Poetry.

I am in a very chaos, to think I should so forget myself: but I have such an olio of affairs, I know not what to do. Congreve, Way of the World.

O'LITORY. n. s. [olitor, Latin.] Belonging to the kitchen garden.

plexion. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 45.

O'LIVE.† n. s. [olive, Fr. olea, Lat. from the Greek ὀλίβα, having the digamma inserted, i. e. ὀλίβα. Morin. The tree was brought into Europe from Greece.]
A plant producing oil; the emblem of peace; the fruit of the tree.

The leaves are for the most part oblong and evergreen; the flower consists of one leaf, the lower part of which is hollowed, but the upper part is divided into four parts; the ovary, which is fixed in the centre of the flower cup, becomes an oval, soft, pulpy fruit, abounding with a fat liquor inclosing an hard rough stone. Miller.

To thee the heavens, in thy nativity, Adjung'd an olive branch and laurel crown, As likely to be blest in peace and war.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
In the purlieus of this forest, stands
A sheepcote fence'd about with olive trees.

OMINA'TION,† n. s. [from ominor, Latin.] Prognostick.

The falling of salt is an authentick presagement of ill luck, yet the same was not a general prognostick of future evil among the ancients; but a particular omination concerning the breach of friendship. Brown.

Ominations by words, names, places, times, in so many several chapters full of elaborate vanity. Spenser on Prodiges, p. 102.

O'MINOUS, adj. [from omen.]

1. Exhibiting bad tokens of futurity; foreshewing ill; inauspicious.

Let me be duke of Clarence;
For Glo'ster's dukedom is ominous. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Pomfret, thou bloody prison,
Fatal and ominous to noble peers. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

These accidents the more rarely they happen, the more ominous are they esteemed, because they are never observed but when sad events do ensue. Hayward.

Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields,
[He] last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milton, Comus.

As in the heathen worship of God, a sacrifice without an heart was accounted ominous; so in the christian worship of him, an heart without a sacrifice is worthless. South.

Pardon a father's tears,
And give them to Charinus' memory;
May they not prove as ominous to thee. Dryden.

2. Exhibiting tokens good or ill.

Though he had a good ominous name to have made a peace, nothing followed. Bacon, Hen. VII.

It brave to him, and ominous does appear,
To be oppos'd at first, and conquer here. Cowley.

OMINOUSLY,† adv. [from ominous.] With good or bad omen.

Even from the time that heavenly infant sprung

In my chaste womb! Old Simeon this reveal'd,
And in my soul the deadly wound beheld.

Sandy's Christ's Passion, p. 65.
We see then how credible an author Manetho is, and what truth there is like to be in the account of ancient times given by the Egyptian historians, when the chief of them so lamentably and ominously stumbles in his very entrance into it.

Shillingfleet, Orig. Sac. i. 2.
O'MINOUSNESS,† n. s. [from ominous.]

The quality of being ominous.

When the day, set for his audience, came, there happened to be such an extraordinary thunder, and such deluges of rain, as disgraced the show, and heightened the opinion of the ominousness of this embassy. Burnet, Hist. of his own Times, (an. 1687.)

OMISSION, n. s. [omissus, Lat.]

1. Neglect to do something; forbearance of something to be done.

Whilst they were held back purely by doubts and scruples, and want of knowledge without their own faults, their omission was fit to be conniv'd at. Kettwell.

If he has made no provision for this change, the omission can never be repaired, the time never redeemed. Rogers.

2. Neglect of duty, opposed to commission or perpetration of crimes.

Omission to do what is necessary, Seals a commission to a blank of danger. Shakespeare.

The most natural division of all offences, is into those of omission and those of commission. Addison, Freeholder.

OMISSIVE,* adj. [omissus, Lat.] Leaving out; overpassing.

This silence is no argument of their existence, because we find him omissive in other particulars of the like nature. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bible, B. 7. ch. 4.

To OMIT, v. a. [omitto, Lat.]

1. To leave out; not to mention.

And after him the surer messenger,
A dove, sent forth once and again to spy
Green trees and green ground. Milton, P. L.

Once every morn' he march'd, and once at night. Cowley.

You came out like some great monarch, to take a town but once a year, as it were for your division, though you had no need to extend your territories. Dryden.

O virgin! daughter of eternal night,
Give me this once thy labour, to sustain
My right, and execute my just disdain. Dryden.

In your tuneful lays,
Once more resound the great Apollo's praise. Pope.

2. A single time.

Who this heir is, he does not once tell us. Locke.

3. The same time.

At once with him they rose:
Their rising all at once was as the sound
Of thunder heard remote. Milton, P. L.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast,
And on the lips a burning kiss impress'd. Dryden.

4. At a point of time indivisible.

Night came on, not by degrees prepared,
But all at once; at once the winds arise,
The thunders roll. Dryden, Cim. and Iphig.

Now that the fixed stars, by reason of their immense distance, appear like points, unless so far as their light is dilated by refraction, may appear from hence, that when the moon passes over them and eclipses them, their light vanishes, not gradually like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton.

5. One time, though no more.

Fuscious, those ill deeds that sully fame,
In blood once tainted, like a current run
From the lewd father to the lewder son. Dryden.

6. At the time immediate.

This hath all its force at once upon the first impression, and is ever afterwards in a declining state. Atterbury.

7. Formerly; at a former time.

Thereon his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.

My soul had once some foolish fondness for thee, Addison.

8. At a future time. Obsolete.

The wisdom of God thought fit to acquaint David with that court which we shall once govern. Bp. Hall, Contempl.

9. Once seems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective: as, this once, that once.

ONE. adj. [an, æn, Saxon; een, Dutch;
ein, German; è, Gr.]

1. Less than two; single; denoted by an unit.

The man he knew was one that willingly,
For one good look would hazard all. Daniel.

Pindarus the Poet, and one of the wisest, acknowledged also one God, the most high, to be the father and creator of all things. Raleigh.

Love him by parts in all your numerous race,
And from those parts form one collected grace;
Then when you have refin'd to that degree,
Imagine all in one, and think that one is he. Dryden.

2. Indefinitely : any ; some one.

We shall

Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days. Shakespeare.

I took pains to make thee speak, taught thee
each hour

One thing or other. Shakespeare, Tempest.

3. It is added to any.

When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. St. Matt. xiii. 19.

If any one prince made a felicity in this life, and left fair fame after death, without the love of his subjects, there were some colour to despise it.
Suckling.

4. Different ; diverse : opposed to another.

What a precious comfort to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes.

Shakespeare.

It is one thing to draw outlines true, the features like, the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable, and another thing to make all these graceful. Dryden.

Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile. Burnet.

It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay our thoughts before others with advantage and clearness. Locke.

My legs were closed together by so many wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Addison.

There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other. Smalbridge.

Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file produce a fetid smell.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

At one time they keep their patients so warm, as almost to stifle them, and all of a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker on Learning.

5. One of two opposed to the other.

Ask from the one side of heaven unto the other,
whether there hath been any such thing as this.

Deut. iv. 32.

Both the matter of the stone and marbasite,
had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marbasite, first growing hard, the other, as being yet of a more yielding consistence, accommodated itself to the harder's figure. Boyle.

6. Not many ; the same.

The church is therefore one, though the members may be many ; because they all agree in one faith. There is one Lord and one faith, and that truth once delivered to the saints, which whosoever shall receive, embrace, and profess, must necessarily be accounted one in reference to that profession ; for if a company of believers become a church by believing, they must also become one church by believing one truth. Pearson.

7. Particularly one.

One day when Phoebe fair,

With all her band was following the chase,
This nymph quite tir'd with heat of scorching air,
Sat down to rest. Spenser.

One day, in turning some uncultured ground,
In hopes a free-stone quarry might be found,
His mattock met resistance, and behold
A casket burst, with diamonds fill'd, and gold.

Hart.

8. Some future.

Heaven waxeth old, and all the spheres above
Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay ;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
Only the soul survives and lives for aye. Davies.

ONE. n. s. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps be considered as consistent with the nature of an adjective, the substantive being un-understood.]

1. A single person.

If one by one you wedded all the world,
She you kill'd would be unparallel'd. Shaksp.

Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfections of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be sought and earnestly thirsted for. Hooker.

From his lofty steed he flew,
And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
To comfort each. Dryden, Kw. Tale.

If one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my Lord, within whose faithful breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best.

Dryden.

When join'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,
Descends to view the muse's humble seat.

Granville.

2. A single mass or aggregate.

It is one thing only as a heap is one. Blackmore.

3. The first hour.

Till 'tis one o'clock, our dance of custom
Let us not forget. Shaksp. M. Wives of Wind.

4. The same thing.

I answer'd not again :

But that's all one. Shakespeare.

To be in the understanding, and not to be understood, is all one as to say any thing is, and is not in the understanding. Locke.

5. A person, indefinitely and loose.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging human affairs.

Watts, Logick.

6. A person by way of eminence.

Ferdinand

My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one,

The wisest prince that there had reign'd. Shaksp.

7. A distinct or particular person.

That man should be the teacher is no part of the matter ; for birds will learn one of another.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

No nations are wholly aliens and strangers the one to the other. Bacon, Holy War.

The obedience of the one to the call of grace, when the other, supposed to have sufficient, if not an equal measure, obeys not, may reasonably be imputed to the humble, malleable, melting temper.

Hammond.

One or other sees a little box, which was carried away with her, and so discovers her to her friends.

Dryden.

8. Persons united.

As I have made ye one, lords, one remain :

So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.

Shakespeare.

9. Concord ; agreement ; one mind.

The king was well instructed how to carry himself between Ferdinando and Philip, resolving to keep them at one within themselves.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

He is not at one with himself what account to give of it. Tillotson.

10. [On, Ton, French. It is used some- times as a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men ; as, they live obscurely, men know not how ; or die obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham. For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when ;

or it is not known how.] Any person ;
any man indefinitely.

It is not so worthy to be brought to heroical effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working.

Sidney.

One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither sets forth what Erone is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death.

Sidney.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease, affluence, and power ;
not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages.

Arbury.

For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first. Arbutnot on Aliments.

For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroë's comment. Baker.

11. A person of particular character.

Then must you speak

Of one that lov'd not wisely but too well ;
Of one not easily jealous ; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme. Shakespeare, Othello.

With lives and fortunes trusting one
Who so discreetly us'd his own. Waller.

Edward I. was one who very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it. Hale.

One who contemned divine and human laws.

Dryden.

Forgive me, if that title I afford

To one, whom Nature meant to be a lord. Harte.

12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely ;
as, the great ones of the world ; or when it relates to something going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of speech, whether singular or plural, is in my ear not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.

Be not found here ; hence with your little ones.

Shakespeare.

Does the son receive a natural life ? The subject enjoys a civil one : that's but the matter, this the form. Holiday.

These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood.

Granville.

He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false ones, error being infinite.

Tillotson.

The following plain rules and directions, are not the less useful because they are plain ones.

Arbury.

There are many whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones.

Addison, Spect.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority limited by law.

Addison, Freeholder.

This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears, the dunces are all in conspiracy against him. Swift.

13. One another, is a mode of speech very frequent ; as, they love one another ;
that is, one of them loves another : the storm beats the trees against one another ; that is, one against another.

In democratical governments, war did commonly unite the minds of men ; when they had enemies abroad, they did not contend with one another at home. Devenant.

O'NEBERRY. n. s. [aconitum, Lat.] Wolf's-bane.

ONEEYED. adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The mighty family
Of one-eyed brothers hasten to the shore. Addison.

ONEIROCRITICAL. adj. [oneirocritique, French; δνειροκριτικός, Gr.; it should therefore according to analogy be written oneirocritical and oneirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.

If a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in that new kind of observation which my oneirocritical correspondent has directed him to make. Addison, Spect.

ONEIROCRITICK. n. s. [δνειροκριτικός, Greek.] An interpreter of dreams.

Having surveyed all ranks and professions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams. Addison, Spect.

ONEIROCRITICKS.* n. s. pl. Interpretations of dreams.

A pretence as groundless and silly as the dreaming oneirocriticks of Artemidorus and Astrampsyschus, or the modern chirography and divinations of gipsies. Bentley, Sermon. 4.

ONEIROMAC'NY.* n. s. [δνειρος and μακρία, Greek.] Divination by dreams.

These rude observations were at last licked into an art, physical oneiromancy; in which physicians, from a consideration of the dreams, proceeded to a crisis of the disposition of the person.

Spenser on Prod. (1665.) p. 297.

O'NEMENT.* n. s. [from one.] State of being one; union. Not in use.

Ye witless gallants, I beshrew your hearts,
That sets such discord 'twixt agreeing parts,
Which never can be set at onement more.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 7.

O'NESS. n. s. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.

Our God is one, or rather very oneness and mere unity, having nothing but itself in itself, and not consisting, as all things do besides God, of many things. Hooker.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases, is the one eternal indivisible divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity, and his consubstantiality with the Father when he came down from Heaven and was incarnate. Hammond.

O'NERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. oneraire, Fr.] Fitted for carriage or burthens; comprising a burthen.

To O'NERATE. v. a. [onero, Latin.] To load; to burthen.

ONERATION. n. s. [from onerate.] The act of loading. Dict.

O'NEROUS.† adj. [onereux, French; onerousus, Latin.] Burthensome; oppressive.

Overcome and tormented with worldly cares, and onerous business.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 171.

A banished person, absent out of necessity, retains all things onerous to himself, as a punishment for his crime. Ayliffe.

O'NION.† n. s. [oignon, French; unian, Su. Goth. unio, Latin. Perhaps all from the Celtic: wynwyn is the Welsh word.] A plant.

If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.
I an ass, am onion-eyed.

This is ev'ry cook's opinion.
No savoury dish without an onion;
But lest your kissing should be spoil'd,
Your onions must be thoroughly boil'd. Swift.
O'NLY.† adj. [from one, only, or onelike; ætlic, Saxon.]

1. Single; one and no more.

Of all whom fortune to my sword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.

2. This and no other.

The only child of shameful Saverlake. Drayton.
The logic now in use has long possessed the chair, as the only art taught in the schools for the direction of the mind in the study of the sciences. Locke.

3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for musick.

Whose only joy was to relieve the needs
Of wretched souls. Spenser, F. Q.
His only heart-sore, and his only foe. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Alone.

With the only twinkle of her eye
She could or save or spill. Spenser, F. Q.
The only sound
Of leaves and fuming rills. Milton, P. L.

O'NLY.† adv. [supposed by some to be an abbreviation of alonely. See ALONELY.]

1. Simply; singly; merely; barely.

I propose my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.
The posterity of the wicked inherit the fruit of their father's vices; and that not only by a just judgement, but from the natural course of things. Tillotson.
All who deserve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himself, needs only to be known. Dryden.

The practice of virtue is attended not only with present quiet and satisfaction, but with comfortable hope of a future recompence. Nelson.
Nor must this contrition be exercised by us, only for grosser evils; but when we live the best. Wake.

2. So and no otherwise.

Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Gen. vi. 5.

3. Singly without more; as, only begotten.

O'NOMANCY. n. s. [δνομα and μανία.] Divination by a name.

Destinies were superstitiously, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were suitable, and fatal necessities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Camden.

ONOMANTICAL. adj. [δνομα and μανία.] Predicting by names.

Theodatus, when curious to know the success of his wars against the Romans, an onomantical or name-wisard Jew, willed him to shut up a number of swine and give some of them Roman names, others Gothic names with several marks, and there to leave them. Camden.

O'NSET.† n. s. [on and set.]

1. Attack; storm; assault; first brunt.

As well the soldier dieth, which standeth still,
as he that gives the bravest onset. Sidney.
All breathless, weary, faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And killing new his courage, seeming quaint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great constraint
He made him stoop. Spenser, F. Q.

The shout
Of battle now began, and rushing sound
Of onset. Milton, P. L.

Sometimes it gains a point; and presently it finds itself baffled and beaten off; yet still it renews the onset, attacks the difficulty afresh; plants this reasoning and that argument, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obstinate enclosed truth. South.

Without men and provisions it is impossible to secure conquests that are made in the first onsets of an invasion. Addison.

Observe
The first impetuous onsets of his grief;
Use every artifice to keep him steadfast. Philips.

2. Something added or set on by way of ornamental appendage. This sense, says Nicholson, is still retained in Northumberland, where onset means a tuft. Dr. Johnson. — The northern meaning is not disputed; but the word in the tragedy of Titus Andronicus, which Dr. Johnson cites as an example of that meaning, signifies simply a beginning; "an inchoation or ONSET," as Hakewill in his Apology for Providence illustrates it, p. 86. ed. 1630.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleness;
And for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empress. Tit. Andronicus.

To O'NSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To set upon; to begin. Not used.

This for a while was hotly onsettled and a reasonable price offered, but soon cooled again. Carew.

O'NSLAUGHT.† n. s. [on and slay. Sax. onslagan. See ANSLAUGHT, and SLAUGHTER.] Attack; storm; onset. Not in use.

They made a halt
To view the ground, and where t' assault;
Then call'd a council, which was best,
By siege or onslought, to invest
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By storm and onslought to proceed. Hudibras.

The several duels, onsloughts, storms, and military appearances. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 19.

O'NSTEAD.* n. s. [on and steð, locus, Sax.] A single farm-house. North. Grose. Buildings on a farm; a stead near the house for cattle or stacks. See Brockett's N. C. Words.

ONTOLOGIST. n. s. [from ontology.] One who considers the affections of being in general; a metaphysician.

ONTOLOGY. n. s. [οντα and λογος.] The science of the affections of being in general; metaphysics.

The modes, accidents, and relations that belong to various beings, are copiously treated of in metaphysics, or more properly ontology. Watts, Logic.

O'NWARD. adv. [onþearf, Saxon.]

1. Forward; progressively.

My lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye. Shakspeare.
Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
The monster moving onward came as fast,
With horrid strides. Milton, P. L.
Him through the spicy forest onward come
Adam discern'd, as in the door he sat
Of his cool bowber. Milton, P. L.
Not one looks backward, onward still he goes,
Yet ne'er looks forward farther than his nose. Pope.

2. In a state of advanced progression.

You are already so far onward of your way, that you have forsaken the imitation of ordinary converse. Dryden.

3. Somewhat farther.

A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To these dark steps, a little farther on.

Milton, S. A.

ONWARD.* adj. [from the adverb.]

1. Advanced; increased; improved.

Philoxenus came to see how onward the fruits were of his friend's labour. Sidney.

2. Conducting; leading forward to perfection.

Sincerity,
Thou first of virtues, let no mortal leave
Thy onward path! Home, Trag. of Douglas.
In agonies of grief they curse the hour,
When first they left Religion's onward way.
Glynn, Day of Judgement.

ONWARDS.* adv. In progression.

Onwards, that such separation may not be made of man and wife for heresy or misbelief, we need no other conviction than that peremptory and clear determination of our Saviour, which we have formerly insisted on

Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. D. 4. C. 2.

ONYCHA. n. s. It is found in two different senses in Scripture. — The odoriferous snail or shell, and the stone onyx. The greatest part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous shell. The onyx is fished for in the Indies, where grows the spicanardi, the food of this fish and what makes its shell so aromatic.

Calmet.

Take sweet spices, onycha, and galbanum.

Ex. xxx. 34.

ONYXX. n. s. [ὄνυξ.] The onyx is a semi-pellucid gem, of which there are several species, but the bluish white kind, with brown and white zones, is the true onyx legitima of the ancients.

Hill, Mat. Med.

Nor are her rare endowments to be sold,

For glittering sand by Ophir shown,

The blue-eyed sapphire, or rich onyx stone. Sandys.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white, there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish or fresh colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonxy.

Woodward on Fossils.

OOZE.† n. s. [either from eaux, waters, Fr. or pæz, wetness, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius refers to the Su. Goth. os, the mouth of a river, "kaell-os, locus uliginosus;" and to the German asche, flowing water; which Wachter pronounces a Celtick word. See Asche in Wachter.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; slime.

My son if the ooze be bedded. Shaksp. Tempest.
Some carried up into their grounds the ooze or salt water mud, and found good profit thereby.

Curew.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head,
Deep in his ooze he sought his sedgey bed,
And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

2. Soft flow; spring. This seems to be the meaning in Prior.

From his first fountain and beginning ooze.
Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows.

Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat. [See Wachter in ASCHÉ.]

Before the bark of the oak is used, it is ground to powder, and the infusion of it in water is by the tanners termed ooze.

Woodland Companion, p. 4.

To Ooze, v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by stealth; to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, even then

A wat'rish humour swell'd and oozed agen.

Dryden.

The lily drinks

The latent rill, scarce oozing through the grass.

Thomson.

O'OOZ.† adj. [from ooze.] Miry; muddy; slimy.

His rustick crew with mighty poles
Would drive his prey out from their oozy holes,
And so pursue them down the rolling flood.

King, The Fisherman.

The oozy places and holes, which, it must be supposed, the sea left behind it.

Leslie, Short Meth. with the Deists.

From his oozy bed

Old father Thames advanc'd his reverend head.

Pope.

To OPA'CATE. v. a. [opaco, Latin.] To shade; to cloud; to darken; to obscure.

The same corpuscles upon the unstopping of the glass, did opacate that part of the air they moved in.

Boyle.

OPA'CITY. n. s. [opacitè, Fr. opacitas, Latin.] Cloudiness; want of transparency.

Can any thing escape eyes in whose optics there is no opacity?

Brown.

Had there not been any night, shadow, or opacity, we should never have had any determinate conceit of darkness.

Glanville.

How much any body bath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit is it to transmit the species.

Ray on the Creation.

The least parts of almost all bodies, are in some measure transparent; and the opacity of those bodies ariseth from the multitude of reflexions caused in their internal parts.

Newton.

OPA'COUS. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; obscure; not transparent.

When he perceives that opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffusion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more subtle far than they, and consequently, divisible into lesser atoms; and having lesser pores, gives less scope to our eyes to miss light.

Digby.

Upon the firm opacous globe

Of this round world, whose first convex divides

The luminous inferior orbs, inclos'd

From chaos, and the inroad of darkness old,

Satan alighted.

Milton, P. L.

OPA'COUSNESS.* n. s. [from opacous.]

The state of being opaque.

Mysteries, which (without these coverings) even the opacousness of the place were not obscure enough to conceal.

Evetyne, B. iv. § 8.

O'PAL.† n. s. [opalus, Lat.] A gem of great beauty, of a milky hue, and remarkable for the changes of colour belonging to other gems, which it exhibits, as it is variously turned about.

Thy mind is a very opal. Shaksp. Tw. Night.

The empyreal heaven, extended wide

In circuit, undetermin'd square or round;

With opal towers, and battlements adorn'd

Of living sapphire. Milton, P. L.

We have this stone from Germany, and is the same with the opal of the ancients.

Woodward on Fossils.

OPA'QUE.† adj. [opacus, Lat. Written also opake.] Dark; not transparent; cloudy.

The night's nimble net,

That doth encompass every opake ball.

Morse, Life of the Soul, iii. 2.

They

Shot upward still direct, whence no way round Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton, P. L.

These disappearing fixt stars were actually extinguished and turned into more opaque and gross planet-like bodies. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

OPA'QUE.* n. s. Opacity.

Through this opacity of nature and of soul,

This double night.

Young, Night Th. 1.

Vivid green,

Warm brown, and black opaque, the foreground bears

Conspicuous. Mason.

OPA'QUENESS.* n. s. [from opaque.] State of being opaque.

The earth's opakeness, enemy to light.

Morse, Immortal. of the Soul, i. ii. § 1.

To OPE. } v. a. [open, Saxon; op, Ice-
To O'PEN. } landick, oþ, Gr. a hole.

Ope is used only in poetry, when one syllable is more convenient than two.]

1. To uncloset; to unlock; to put into such a state as that the inner parts may be seen or entered; the contrary to shut.

The world's mine oyster,

Which I with sword will open.

Shakspere, M. Wives of Windsor.

Before you fight, open this letter.

Shakspere, K. Lear.

They consent to work us harm and woe,

To ope the gates, and so let in our foe. Fairfax.

If a man open a pit and not cover it, and an ox fall therein, the owner of the pit shall make it good.

Ex. xxi. 23.

Let us pass through your land, and none shall do you any hurt: howbeit they would not open unto him.

1 Mac. v. 48.

Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all such politick opiniators should. South.

OPINIA'TRE. † adj. [French.] Obstinate; stubborn; inflexible.

Spare yourself, lest you bejude the good gallo-way, your own opiniatre wit, and make the very conceit itself blush with spurgalling.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

What in common life would denote a man rash, fool-hardy, hair-brained, opiniatre, crazed, is recommended in this scheme as the true method in speculation. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 15.

Instead of an able man, you desire to have him an insignificant wrangler, opiniatre in discourse, and priding himself in contradicting others. Locke.

OPINIA'TRE.* n. s. One fond of his own notions; one stiff in his own opinions.

To be termed a foppish simpleton, a clownish singularist, or non-conformist to ordinary usage, a stiff opiniatre, are opprobrious names, which divert many persons from their duty.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. 34.

OPINIA'TRETY. n. s. [opiniatreté, Fr.]

OPINIATRETY. } Obstinacy; inflexibility; determination of mind; stubbornness.

This word, though it has been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.

Least popular opiniatre should arise, we will deliver the chief opinions. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The one sets the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling, and opiniatre.

Locke on Education.

So much as we ourselves comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, make us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true: what in them was science, is in us but opiniatrety. Locke.

I can pass by opiniatre and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing.

Woodward, Lett.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatrety in leaving me; but he shall not get rid so. Pope.

OPINION. † n. s. [opinion, Fr. opinio, Latin.]

1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. B. Jonson.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees discover and unmask that fallacy of ungrounded persuasions; but confirms the dictates and sentiments of nature. Wilkins.

Best be the princes who have fought

For pompous names, or wide dominion,

Since by their error we are taught,

That happiness is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgement; notion.

Where no such settled custom hath made it law, there it hath force only according to the strength of reason and circumstances joined with it, or as it shews the opinion and judgement of them that made it; but not at all as if it had any commanding power of obedience. Selden.

Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here? South.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philosophers are of opinion, that infinite space is possessed by God's infinite omnipresence. Locke. A story out of Boccacini sufficiently shews us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the critics. Addison.

3. Favourable judgement.

In actions of arms small matters are of great moment, especially when they serve to raise an opinion of commanders. Hayward.

Howsoever I have no opinion of those things; yet so much I conceive to be true, that strong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon.

If a woman had no opinion of her own person and dress, she would never be angry at those who are of the opinion with herself. Law.

4. Reputation.

Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

You have the opinion

Of a valiant gentleman, one that dares

Fight, and maintain your honour against odds.

Shirley, Gamester.

To OPIN'ION. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The Stoicks opinioned the souls of wise men dwell about the moon, and those of fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicureans held nothing after death. Brown.

That the soul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, is generally opinioned.

Glanville, Scepis.

OPI'NIONED.* adj. Attached to particular opinions; conceited.

He may cast him upon a bold self-opinioned physician, worse than his distemper.

South, Serm. i. 298.

OPI'NIONATE.* † adj. [from opinion.] Ob-opinionated. } stinate; inflexible in opinion.

Are you so simple as not to discern between the choleric of some few opinionate men, and the consequence of their opinions?

Bp. Bedell, Lett. to Mr. Wadsworth, (about 1620), p. 325.

People of clear heads are what the world calls opinionated. Shenstone.

OPINIONATELY.* adv. [from opinionate.] Obviously; conceitedly; in one's own opinion.

Self-conceited people never agree well together: they are wilful in their brawls, and reason cannot reconcile them: where either are only opinionately wise, hell is there; unless the other be a patient merely. Feltham, Res. i. 85.

OPINIONATIST.* n. s. [from opinionate.] One who is obstinate or conceited.

If we would hearken to the pernicious counsels of some such opinionatists. Fenton, Sermon before the Univ. of Oxf. (1720), p. 11.

OPINIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion.] Fond of preconceived notions; stubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative assurance, would be no hindrance to the world's improvement. Glanville.

One would rather chuse a reader without art, than one ill-instructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgement. Burnet, The. of the Earth.

OPINIONATIVELY. adv. [from opinionative.] Stubbornly.

OPINIONATIVENESS. n. s. [from opinionative.] Obstinacy.

OPINIONIST.† n. s. [opinioniste, Fr. from opinion.] One fond of his own notions.

Every conceited opinionist sets up an infallible chair in his own brain. Glanville to Albion.

This was never called into question, till the conceited opinionist Jovinian, among his other paradoxes, ventured to broach the contrary doctrine. Bp. Bull, Works, i. 399.

OPIPAROUS. adj. [opiparus, Lat.] Sumptuous. Dict.

OPIPAROUSLY.* adv. [from opiparus.] Sumptuously; abundantly.

The compilers of them were not men meanly bred, or loosely seen in arts, but opiparously accomplished. Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653), p. 93.

OPITULATION. n. s. [opitulatio, Lat.] An aiding; a helping. Dict.

OPPIUM.† n. s. [ὀππιον, from ὀπός, Gr. juice.] Our old word was opie. "Narcotikes, and opie of Thebes fine." Chaucer. A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or masses, very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid. It is brought from Natolia, Egypt, and the East Indies, produced from the white garden poppy; with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green, and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid consistence. The finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. What we generally have is the mere crude juice, worked up with water, or honey sufficient to bring it into form. Externally applied it is emollient, relaxing, and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram, but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful; it removes melancholy, and dissipates the dread of danger; the Turks always take it when they are going to battle: it afterwards quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on drunkenness, cheerfulness, and loud laughter, at first, and after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium, are apt to be faint, idle, and thoughtless; they lose their appetite, and grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forsook and given me o'er
To death's benumbing opium as my only cure.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

O'PLE-TREE. n. s. [opulus, Lat.] A sort of tree; the witch-hazel. Ainsworth.

OPOBA'LSAMUM. n. s. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPODE'LDON.* n. s. [In medicine.] The name of a plaster; and also of a popular operation.

OPOPONAX. n. s. [Latin.] A gum resin in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taste; brought to us from the East, and known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. Hill.

OPO'SSUM.* n. s. An American animal. Here is likewise that singular animal, called the opossum, which seems to be the wood-rat, mentioned by Charlevoix, in his history of Canada. Guthrie.

O'PPIDAN.† n. s. [oppidanus, Lat.] A townsman; an inhabitant of a town.

The oppidans, in the mean time, were not wanting to trouble us; and particularly the bailiffs. A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1528.

O'PPIDAN.* adj. Relating to a town. Touching the temporal government of Rome, and oppidan affairs, there is a pretor, and some choice citizens, who sit on the capitol. Howell, Lett. i. j. 39.

To O'PPI'NERATE. v. a. [oppignero, Lat.] To pledge; to pawn. Not in use.

The duke of Gaise Henry was the greatest usurer in France, for that he had turned all his estate into obligations; meaning that he had sold and oppignorated all his patrimony, to give large donations to other men. Bacon.

Ferdinando merchanted with France, for the restoring Roussillon and Perpignan, oppignorated to them. Bacon.

To O'PILATE.† v. a. [oppilo, Latin; oppiler, Fr.] To heap up obstruction.

Cockeram, and Sherwood.

OPILATION.† n. s. [opilation, Fr. from opilate.] Obstruction; matter heaped together.

Nothing is worse than to feed on many dishes, or to protract the time of meats longer than ordinary: from thence proceed our infirmities: — thence, saith Fernelius, come crudities, wind, opulations. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 71.

The ingredients prescribed in their substance actuate the spirits, reclude opulations, and munnify the blood. Harvey.

O'PILATIVE.† adj. [opilative, Fr.] Obstructive. Sherwood.

OPPLE'TED. adj. [oppletus, Lat.] Filled; crowded.

To OPPO'NE.* v. a. [oppono, Lat.] To oppose. Not in use.

What can you not do
Against lords spiritual or temporal,
That shall oppono you? B. Jonson, Alchemist.

OPPO'NENCY.* n. s. [opponens, Lat.] The opening an academical disputation; the proposition of objections to a tenet: an exercise for a degree. See the second meaning of OPPONENT.

OPPO'NENT. adj. [opponens, Lat.] Opposite; adverse.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid,
It was opponent to our search ordain'd,
That joy, still sought, should never be attain'd. Prior.

OPPO'NENT. n. s. [opponens, Lat.] 1. Antagonist; adversary.

2. One who begins the dispute by raising objections to a tenet, correlative to the defendant or respondent.

Inasmuch as ye go about to destroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impose on us that which we think not ourselves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiff's or opponent's part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator! More.

OPPORTUNE. adj. [opportun, Fr. opportunus, Lat.] Seasonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliss, and the perpetual constancy of his prosperous successes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will lift us up in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence with neighb'ring arms

And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton, P. L.
Consider'd every creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles; and found
The serpent subtlest beast of all the field. Milton, P. L.

To OPPORTU'NE.* v. a. To suit. Not in use.

The pronoun opportunes us: some copies have vobis, but the most and best have nobis. Dr. Clarke, Sermon. (1687), p. 483.

OPPORTU'NELY. adv. [from opportune.] Seasonably; conveniently; to opportunity either of time or place.

He was resolved to chuse a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being situate so opportune to annoy England either for coast or trade. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Against these there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity; whereof I am therefore *opportune*ly induced to say somewhat.

Wotton, Architecture.

The experiment does opportunitely supply the deficiency. Boyle.

OPPORTUNITY. n. s. [opportunité, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit time; fit place; time; convenience; suitability of circumstances to any end.

A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds. Men's behaviour should be like their apparel, not too strait, but free for exercise. Bacon.

Opportunity, like a sudden gust, Hath swell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempest.—
Accused opportunity!

That work't our thoughts into desires, desires
To resolutions; those being ripe and quicken'd, Thou giv'st them birth, and bring'st them forth to action. Denham.

Though their advice be good, their counsel wise,
Yet length still loses opportunities. Denham.

I had an opportunity to see the clouds descend, and after it was past, to ascend again so high as to get over part of the mountain. Brown, Trav.

Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy desire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterbury.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long descriptions of the night. Broomie.

OPPOSAL.* n. s. [from oppose.] Opposition.

The castle gates opened, fearless of any further opposal. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 81.

To OPPOSE. v. a. [opposer, French; oppono, Latin.]

1. To act against; to be adverse; to hinder;
to resist.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness; and my desire
All continent impediments would o'rbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. To put in opposition; to offer as an antagonist or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am sure all slaves are; and then I may, without presumption, oppose my single opinion to his. Locke.

3. To place as an obstacle.

Since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury. Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.

I through the seas pursu'd their evil'd race,
Engag'd the heavens, oppos'd the stormy main;
But billows roar'd and tempests rag'd in vain.
Dryden.

4. To place in front; to place over against.

Her grace sat down
In a rich chair of state; opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people. Shaksp.

To OPPOSE. v. n.

1. To act adversely.

A servant, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He practis'd to dispatch such of the nobility as were like to oppose against his mischievous drift, and in such sort to encumber and weaken the rest, that they should be no impediments to him.
Hayward.

2. To object in a disputation; to have the part of raising difficulties against a tenet supposed to be right.

OPPOSELESS. adj. [from oppose.] Irresistible; not to be opposed.

I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills.
Shakespeare.

OPPOSER. n. s. [from oppose.] One that opposes; antagonist; enemy; rival.

Now the fair goddess Fortune
Fall deep in love with thee, and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers' swords: bold gentleman!
Prosperity be thy page. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Brave wits that have made essays worthy of immortality; yet by reason of envious and more popular opposers, have submitted to fate, and are almost lost in oblivion. Glanville.

I do not see how the ministers could have continued in their stations, if their opposers had agreed about the methods by which they should be ruined.
Swift.

A hardy modern chief,
A bold opposer of divine belief. Blackmore.

OPPOSITE. adj. [opposite, Fr. oppositus, Lat.]

1. Placed in front; facing each other.

To the other five,
Their planetary motions and aspects,
In sextile, square, trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton, P. L.

2. Adverse; repugnant.

Nothing of a foreign nature, like the trifling novels, by which the reader is misled into another sort of pleasure, opposite to that which is designed in an epic poem. Dryden.

This is a prospect very uneasy to the lusts and passions, and opposite to the strongest desires of flesh and blood. Rogers.

3. Contrary.

In this fallen state of man religion begins with repentance and conversion, the two opposite terms of which are God and sin. Tillotson.

Particles of speech have divers, and sometimes almost opposite significations. Locke.

OPPOSITE. n. s. Adversary; opponent; antagonist; enemy.

To the best and wisest, while they live, the world is continually a froward opposite, a curious observer of their defects and imperfections; their virtues it afterwards as much admireth. Hooker.

He is the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could have found in Illyria. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

The knight whom fate or happy chance
Shall grace his arms so far in equal fight,
From out the bars to force his opposite,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.

OPPOSITELY. adv. [from opposite.]

1. In such a situation as to face each other.

The lesser pair are joined edge to edge, but not oppositely with their points downward, but upward. Grew.

2. Adversely.

I oft have seen, when corn was ripe to mow,
And now in dry, and brittle straw did grow,
Winds from all quarters oppositely blow. Mays, Virg.

OPPOSITENESS. n. s. [from opposite.] The state of being opposite.

OPPOSITION. n. s. [opposition, Fr. oppositio, Lat.]

1. Situation so as to front something opposed; standing over against.

2. Hostile resistance.

Virtue, which breaks through all opposition,
And all temptation can remove,
Most shines, and most is acceptable above. Milton, S. A.

He considers Lausus rescuing his father at the hazard of his own life, as an image of himself when he took Anchises on his shoulders, and bore him safe thro' the rage of the fire and the opposition of his enemies. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Contrariety of affection.

They who never tried the experiment of a holy life, measure the laws of God not by their intrinsic

sical goodness, but by the reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts. Tillotson.

4. Contrariety of interest; contrariety of measures.

When the church is taken for the persons making profession of the christian faith, the catholic is often added in opposition to heretics and schismatics. Pearson.

5. Contrariety of meaning; diversity of meaning.

The parts of every true opposition do always both concern the same subject, and have reference to the same thing, such otherwise they are but in shew opposite, not in truth. Hooker.

The use of language and custom of speech, in all authors I have met with, has gone upon this rule, or maxim, that exclusive terms are always to be understood in opposition only to what they are opposed to, and not in opposition to what they are not opposed to. Waterland.

6. Inconsistency; contradiction.

Reason can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident, nor allow it to entertain probability in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

7. The collective body of members of both houses of parliament who oppose the ministry, or the measures of government.

He has never omitted a fair occasion, with whatever detriment to his interest as a member of opposition, to assert the very same doctrines which appear in that book. Burke.

OPPOSITIVE.* adj. [from opposite.] Capable of being put in opposition.

Here not without some oppositive comparison; not Moses, not Elias, but This; Moses and Elias were servants; This, a son. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

To OPPRESS. v. a. [oppressus, Lat.]

1. To crush by hardship or unreasonable severity.

Israel and Judah were oppressed together, and all that took them captives held them fast, they refused to let them go. Jer. i. 33

Alas! a mortal most oppress of those Whom fate has loaded with a weight of woes. Popc.

2. To overpower; to subdue.

We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

In blazing height of noon,
The sun oppress'd, is plung'd in thickest gloom. Thomson.

OPPRESSION. n. s. [oppression, Fr. from oppress.]

1. The act of oppressing; cruelty; severity.

If thou seest the oppressions of the poor, marvel not at the matter, for he that is higher than the highest regardeth. Eccles. v. 8.

2. The state of being oppressed; misery.

Famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppression stare within thine eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back. Shakespeare.

Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. Shaksp. Ant. & Cleop.

3. Hardship; calamity.

We are all subject to the same accidents; and when we see any under particular oppression, we should look upon it as the common lot of human nature. Addison.

4. Dulness of spirits; lassitude of body.

Drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot on Aliments.

OPPRESSIVE. adj. [from oppress.]

1. Cruel; inhuman; unjustly exactious or severe.

2. Heavy; overwhelming.

Alicia, reach thy friendly arm,
And help me to support that feeble frame,
That nodding totters with oppressive woe,
And sinks beneath its load. Roué, Jane Shore.
To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state. Pope.

OPPRESSIVELY.  adv.* [from oppressive.]
In an oppressive or severe manner.

Her taxes are more injudiciously and more oppressively imposed, more vexatiously collected.
Burke on the State of the Nation, (1769.)

OPPRESSOR. n. s. [oppressor, Fr. from oppress.] One who harasses others with unreasonable or unjust severity.

I from oppressors did the poor defend,
The fatherless, and such as had no friend. Sandys.
The cries of orphans, and th' oppressor's rage,
Had reach'd the stars. Dryden.
Power when employed to relieve the oppressed,
and to punish the oppressor, becomes a great blessing. Swift.

OPPROBRIOUS. adj. [from opprobrium, Lat.]

1. Reproachful; disgraceful; causing infamy; scurrilous.

Himself pronounceth them blessed, that should for his name sake be subject to all kinds of ignominy and opprobrious malediction. Hooker.
They see themselves unjustly aspersed, and vindicate themselves in terms no less opprobrious than those by which they are attacked.
Addison, Freeholder.

2. Blasted with infamy.

I will not here defile
My unstain'd verse with his opprobrious name. Daniel.

Solomon he led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God,
On the opprobrious hill. Milton, P. L.

OPPROBRIOUSLY. adv. [from opprobrious.]
Reproachfully; scurrilously.

Think you, this little prating York
Was not incensed by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously?
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

OPPROBRIOUSNESS. n. s. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfulness; scurrility.

OPPROBRIUM.  n. s.* [Latin. We had formerly the harsh English word opprobrie, which is in Sherwood's dictionary. Opprobrium has long been in use, though Dr. Johnson has overpassed it; and continues to be. Dr. Johnson himself too has used the word opprobry.] Disgrace; infamy.

He there saith, among other opprobries put upon Luther, that he could not have committed a sin of higher nature.

Hayne's Life of Luther, (1644,) p. 62.

Whoever presumes to give check to our insolence, is sure to be made the mark of our malice, and to be persecuted with all the reproach and opprobrium that the most inveterate rancour can invent.

Scott, Sermon before the Lord Mayor, (1683,) Works, ed. fol. ii. 37.

Patch was in old language a term of opprobry.
Dr. Johnson, Note on Shakspeare, M. N. Dream.

OPPROBRY.  See the preceding word.*
To OPPU'GN. † v. a. [oppugn, old Fr. oppugno, Lat.] To oppose; to attack; to resist.

Not so subtle to invent false matters to oppugn the truth.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) sign. B. i. b.
For the ecclesiastical laws of this land we are led by a great reason to observe, and ye be by no necessity bound to oppugn them. Hooker.

This is to oppugn nature, and to make a strong body weak. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 227.
They said the manner of their impeachment they could not but conceive did oppugn the rights of parliament. Clarendon.

If nothing can oppugn love,
And virtue envious ways can prove,
What cannot he confide to do
That brings both love and virtue too? Hudibras.
The ingredients reclude opitations, munday the blood, and oppugn putrefaction. Harvey.

OPPU'GNANCY. n. s. [from oppugn.] Opposition.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And bark what discord follows, each thing meets
In meer oppugnancy. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

OPPU'GNANT.  adj.* [oppugnans, Latin.] Opposing; resisting; repugnant.

It is directly oppugnant to the laws established.
Darce's Annals of Q. Eliz. p. 36.

OPPU'GNATION.  n. s.* [old Fr. oppugnation.] Resistance. Hulot.

Which being done by way of tithes in those countries wherein they obtain, there is just cause of thankfulness to God for so meet a provision, none for a just oppugnation.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 3. C. 7.

OPPU'GNER. † n. s. [from oppugn.] One who opposes or attacks.

I know these sports have many *oppugn*ers.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 272.
He was a strong *oppugn*er of the Pelagian heresy. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 4.

In words the fathers, but in their deeds the *oppugn*ers, of the truth.

*Milton, Apol. for Smectymn*us.

The modern and degenerate Jews be, upon the score of being the great patrons of man's free will, not causelessly esteemed the great *oppugn*ers of God's free grace. Boyle.

OPSI'MATHY. † n. s. [ὑψημαθία.] Late education; late erudition.

Opsimathie, which is too late beginning to learn, was counted a great vice, and very unseemly amongst moral and natural men.

Holcs, Rem. p. 218.

OPSONA'TION. n. s. [opsonatio, Latin.] Catering; a buying provisions. Dict.

This optative infinity in the soul of man.
W. Montague, Dev. Ess. P. I. (1648,) p. 196.

2. Belonging to that mood of a verb which expresses desire.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation to signify wishing, which is called the optative mood. Clarke.

O'PTICAL. adj. [ὀπτικός.] Relating to the science of optics.

It seems not agreeable to what anatomists, and optical writers deliver, touching the relation of the two eyes to each other. Boyle.

OPTICIAN. † n. s. [from optick.]

1. One skilled in optics.

How it is that, by means of our sight, we learn to judge of such distances, opticians have endeavoured to explain in several different ways.

A. Smith on the External Senses.

2. One who makes or sells optic glasses.
Opticians have daily experience of the truth of these observations. Adams on Vision.

O'PTICK. adj. [ὀπτικός, Gr.; optique, Fr.]

1. Visual; producing vision; subservient to vision.

May not the harmony and discord of colours arise from the proportions of the vibrations propagated through the fibres of the optick nerves into the brain, as the harmony and discord of sounds arise from the proportions of the vibrations of the air? Newton, Opt.

2. Relating to the science of vision.

Where our master handleth the contractions of pillars, we have an optick rule, that the higher they are, the less should be always their diminution aloft, because the eye itself doth contract all objects, according to the distance. Wotton.

O'PTICK. n. s. An instrument of sight; an organ of sight.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of the eyes which were before light, and in whose opticks there is no opacity? Brown.

Our corporeal eyes we find
Dazzle the opticks of our mind. Denham.

You may neglect, or quench, or hate the flame,
Whose smoke too long obscur'd your rising name,
And quickly cold indifference will ensue,
When you love's joys through honour's optick view. Prior.

Why has not man a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly.

Say what the use, were finer opticks given,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heaven? Pope.

O'PTICKS. n. s. pl. [ὀπτικαί.] The science of the nature and laws of vision.

No spherical body of what bigness soever illuminates the whole sphere of another, although it illuminate something more than half of a lesser, according unto the doctrine of opticks.

Those who desire satisfaction must go to the admirable treatise of opticks by Sir Isaac Newton. Cheyne.

O'PTIMACY. † n. s. [optimates, Latin.] Nobility; body of nobles; men of the highest rank.

The government of every city in time becomes corrupt: principally changeth into tyranny; the optimacy is made the government of the people; and the popular estate turns to licentious disorder.

Raleigh, Arts of Emp. ch. 26.

Sometimes an optimacy of a few, all prime, equal in their power; and sometimes a democracy, or popular state, a whole Egypt full of locusts in one breast. Hammond, Works, iv. 529.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Hoswell.

O'PTIMISM.  n. s.* [from optimus, Lat.] The doctrine that every thing in nature is ordered for the best.

Voltaire has, in many parts of his works, besides his Candide and his Philosophical Dictionary, exerted the utmost efforts of his wit and argument to depreciate and destroy the doctrine of optimism, and the idea that "The eternal art educues good from ill."
Dr. Walton, Ess. on Pope.

OPTIMITY. n. s. [from optimus, Lat.] The state of being best.

O'PTION. † n. s. [optio, Lat.]

1. Choice; election; power of choosing.

Transplantation must proceed from the option of the people, else it sounds like an exile; so the colonies must be raised by the leave of the king, and not by his command. Bacon.

He decrees to punish the contumacy finally, by assigning them their own options. Hammond.

Which of these two rewards we will receive, he hath left to our option. Smalrigue.

2. Wish. Cockeram.
I shall conclude this epistle with a pathetick option, O that men were wise!

The Layman's Def. of Christ. (about 1730,) p. 23.

3. A choice of preferment belonging to the patronage of suffragans, made by the archbishops of Canterbury and York, on the promotion of the person to a bishoprick.

The archbishop of Canterbury hath a right, upon the promotion of every bishop in his grace's province, [and so has the archbishop of York, except with regard to the see of Durham,] to choose any one ecclesiastical preferment, prebend, or benefice, in the gift of such bishop, which is called the archbishop's option; which is even at the disposal of the executors of the archbishop, if the bishop that is promoted doth not die before the option becometh vacant. Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull, p. 357.

- OPTIONAL. adj. [from option.] Leaving somewhat to choice.

Original writs are either optional or peremptory.

Blackstone.

- O'PULENCE. } n. s. [opulence, Fr.; opulentia, Lat.] Wealth; riches; affluence.

It must be a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulency. Shakespeare, Tim.
After eight years spent in outward opulency, and inward murmur that it was not greater; after vast sums of money and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented. Clarendon.

He had been a person not only of great opulency, but authority. Atterbury.

There in full opulence a banker dwelt,
Who all the joys and pangs of riches felt;
His side-board glitter'd with imagin'd plate,
And his proud fancy held a vast estate. Swift.

- O'PULENT. adj. [opulent, Fr.; opulentus, Lat.] Rich; wealthy; affluent.

He made him his ally, and provoked a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel. Bacon.

To begin with the supposed policy of gratifying only the rich and opulent. Does our wise man think, that the grandee whom he courts does not see through all the little plots of his courtship? South.

- O'PULENTLY. adv. [from opulent.] Richly; with splendour.

- OR.† conjunc. [oðep, Sax.]

1. A disjunctive particle, marking distribution, and sometimes opposition.

Inquire what the ancients, thought concerning this world, whether it was to perish or no; whether to be destroyed or to stand eternally? Burnet.

He may muse's homage should receive,
If I could write, or Holles could forgive. Garth.

By intense study, or application to business that requires little action, the digestion of foods will soon proceed more slowly, and with more uneasiness. Blackmore.

Every thing that can be divided by the mind into two or more ideas, is called complex.

Watts, Logic.

2. It corresponds to either; he must either fall or fly.

At Venice you may go to any house either by land or water. Addison.

3. It sometimes, but rather inelegantly, stands for either.

For thy vast bounties are so numberless,
That them or to conceal, or else to tell,
Is equally impossible. Cowley.

4. Sometimes for whether, or whether it be.

Whatever draws me,
Or sympathy, or some connatural force.

Milton, P. L.

5. Or is sometimes redundant, but is then more properly omitted.

How great soever the sins of any unreformed person are, Christ died for him because he died for all; only he must reform and forsake his sins, or else he shall never receive benefit of his death. Hammond.

6. [Op, or æpe, Sax.] Before. Or and ere were formerly indiscriminately used. Then or, ever, or e'er, combined; a form not yet disused; though Dr. Johnson has pronounced it obsolete. The spirited lines from a modern poem, now cited, exhibit the application of it.

Or we go to the declaration of this psalm, it shall be convenient to shew who did write this psalm. Bp. Fisher.

The dead man's knell

Is there scarce ask'd for whom, and good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps,

Dying or e'er they sicken. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Learn before thou speak, and use physick or ever thou be sick. Eccles. xviii. 19.

The shepherds on the lawn,

Or e'er the point of dawn,

Sat simply chatting in a rustic row. Milton, Ode Nativ.

Awake, for shame! or e'er thy nobler sense

Sink in the oblivious pool of indolence!

Must wit be found alone on falsehood's side,

Unknown to truth, to virtue unallied?

Arise, nor scorn thy country's just alarms;

Wield in her cause thy long-neglected arms. Poetry of the Anti-Jacobin.

- OR. n. s. [French.] Gold. A term of heraldry.

The show'ry arch

With listed colours gay, or, azure, gules,
Delights and puzzles the beholders' eyes. Philips.

- O'RACH. n. s. [atriplex.] There are thirteen species; garden orach was cultivated as a culinary herb, and used as spinach, though it is not generally liked by the English, but still esteemed by the French. Miller.

- O'RACLE. n. s. [oracle, Fr.; oraculum, Lat.]

1. Something delivered by supernatural wisdom.

The main principle whereupon our belief of all things therein contained dependeth, is, that the Scriptures are the oracles of God himself. Hooker.

2. The place where, or person of whom the determinations of heaven are enquired.

Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

God hath now sent his living oracle

Into the world to teach his final will,

And sends his spirit of truth henceforth to dwell

In pious hearts, an inward oracle,

To all truth requisite for men to know. Milton, P. R.

3. Any person or place where certain decisions are obtained.

There mighty nations shall enquire their doom,
The world's great oracle in times to come. Pope.

4. One famed for wisdom; one whose determinations are not to be disputed.

To O'RACLE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To utter oracles. A word not received, Dr. Johnson observes; citing only the passage from Milton. But Milton did not introduce this word into the language.

Hence so many corruptions of divine text, because men endeavour to make it speak their own sense; use it as their pleader, not counsellor: if it will speak for us, none so ready to fee it, as it were, with the resignation of our reasons or will; but if it oracle contrary to our interest or humour, we will create an amphiboly, a double meaning where there is none; and make it speak our meaning, or conclude it defective.

Whitlock, Mann, of the Eng. (1654,) p. 254.

No more shalt thou by oracings abuse
The Gentiles. Milton, P. R.

ORACULAR.† } adj. [from oracle.]
ORACULOUS. }

1. Uttering oracles; resembling oracles.

Corycian nymphs and hill-gods he adores,
And Themis then, oraculous, implores. Sandys, Ovid.

Thy counsel would be as the oracle of Urim and Thummim, those oraculous gems

On Aaron's breast, or tongue of seers old

Infallible. Milton, P. R.

Here Chere contrives the ordering of his states,

Here he resolves his neighbouring princes' fates;
What nation shall have peace, where war be made,

Determin'd is in this oraculous shade. Waller.

They have something venerable and oracular, in that unadorned gravity and shortness in the expression. Pope.

The oraculous seer frequents the Pharian coast,
Proteus a name tremendous o'er the main. Pope.

2. Positive; authoritative; magisterial; dogmatical.

Though their general acknowledgements of the weakness of human understanding looks like cold and sceptical discouragements; yet the particular expressions of their sentiments are as oraculous as if they were omniscient. Glanville, Sceptis.

3. Obscure; ambiguous; like the answers of ancient oracles.

As for equivocations, or oraculous speeches, they cannot hold out long. Bacon, Ess. 6.

He spoke oraculous and sly,
He'd neither grant the question, nor deny. King.

ORACULARLY.† } adv. [from oraculous.]
ORACULOUSLY. }

1. In manner of an oracle.

The testimonies of antiquity, and such as pass oraculously amongst us, were not always so exact as to examine the doctrine they delivered. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Hence rise the branching beech and vocal oak,
Where Jove of old oraculously spoke. Dryden.

2. Authoritatively; positively.

An awful judge delivering oraculary the law.
Burke, Speech on the Powers of Juries in Libels.

ORACULOUSNESS. n. s. [from oracular.] The state of being oracular.

O'RAISON.† n. s. [oraison, Fr.; oratio, Lat.] Prayer; verbal supplication; or oral worship: more frequently written orison, and accented on the first syllable by our oldest and best poets. Dyer has placed the accent on the second syllable of oraison; and so has Cotton on that of orison, for the sake of his rhyme. See ORISON. Temple uses the French form of the word before us.

They were commonly called the judgements of God, and performed with solemn oraisons, and other ceremonies.

Temple, Intr. Hist. of Eng. (1695,) p. 248.

Here, at dead of night,
The pilgrim oft, mid his oration, hears
Aghast the voice of time, departing towers,
Tumbling all precipitate down dash'd.

Dyer, Ruins of Rome.

O'RAL. adj. [oral, Fr.; os, oritis, Lat.]
Delivered by mouth; not written.

Oral discourse, whose transient faults dying with the sound that gives them life, and so not subject to a strict review, more easily escapes observation.

Locke on Education.

St. John was appealed to as the living oracle of the church; and as his oral testimony lasted the first century, many have observed, that by a particular providence several of our Saviour's disciples, and of the early converts, lived to a very great age, that they might personally convey the truth of the gospel to those times which were very remote.

Addison.

O'RALLY. † adv. [from oral.]

1. By mouth; without writing.

Oral tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws of a kingdom, because they are complex, not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages.

Hale, Common Law.

2. In the mouth.

The priest did sacrifice, and orally devour it whole.

Bp. Hall, Epist. D. i. E. 5.

That which is externally delivered in the sacrament, and orally received by the communicant.

Abp. Usher, Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 32.

O' RANGE. † n. s. [orange, Fr. the aureum malum, or golden apple of the ancients: low Lat. aurantium, an orange.] The leaves have two lobes or appendages at their base like ears, and cut in form of a heart; the fruit is round and depressed, and of a yellow colour when ripe, in which it differs from the citron and lemon. The species are eight.

Miller.

The notary came aboard, holding in his hand a fruit like an orange, but of colour between orange-tawny and scarlet, which cast a most excellent colour, and is used for a preservative against infection.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

The ideas of orange colour and azure, produced in the mind by the same infusion of lignum nephriticum, are no less distinct ideas than those of the same colours taken from two different bodies.

Locke.

Fine oranges, sauce for your veal,
Are charming when squeez'd in a pot of brown ale.

Swift.

The punick granate op'd its rose-like flowers;
The orange breath'd its aromatic powers.

Harte.

O'RANGERY. n. s. [orangerie, Fr.] Plantation of oranges.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangerie, or artificial green house.

Spectator.

O'RANGEMUSK. n. s. A species of pear.

O'RANGEWIFE. n. s. [orange and wife.] A woman who sells oranges.

You wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fossot seller.

Shakspeare.

O' RANGETAWNY. † n. s. [orange and lawny.] A colour so called.

Holding in his hand a fruit of that country, like an orange, but of colour between orange-tawny and scarlet.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

Baronets, or knights of Nova Scotia, are commonly distinguished from others by a ribbon of orange-tawny.

Heylyn.

O' RANGETAWNY.  adj.* Of a colour resembling an orange; nearly red.

Usurers should have orangerawny bonnets, because they do judaize.

Bacon, Ess. 41.

I will discharge it in your straw-coloured beard, your orangerawny beard.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Great is my patience to forbear thee thus, —
Uncivil, orangerawny-coated clerk!

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

ORATION. n. s. [oration, Fr. oratio, Lat.] A speech made according to the laws of rhetoric; a harangue; a declamation.

There shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

This gives life and spirit to every thing that is spoken, awakens the duller spirits, and adds a singular grace and excellency both to the person and his oration.

Watts.

TO ORATION.  v. n.* [from the noun.] To make a speech; to harangue. Not in use.

They gave answers with great sufficiency touching all difficulties concerning their own law, and had marvellous promptitude both for orating and giving judgement.

Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 80.

O'RATOR. n. s. [orateur, French; orator, Lat.]

1. A publick speaker; a man of eloquence.

Poor queen and son! your labour is but lost;
For Warwick is a subtle orator.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

As when of old some orator renown'd,
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause address'd,

Stood in himself collected; while each part,
Motion, each act, won audience.

Milton, P. L.

It would be altogether vain and improper in matters belonging to an orator to pretend to strict demonstration.

Wilkins.

The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point.

Swift.

I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence.

Swift.

Both orators so much renown'd,
In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd.

Dryden.

2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.

ORATORICAL. † adj. [from orator.] Rhetorical; befitting an orator.

He that hath written the tales of Nereus, cardinal Baronius's oratorical patron.

Favour, Antiq. Tr. over Novelty, (1619), p. 339.

Running out with much oratorical liberty upon the weakness of those men's arguments.

Clarke, Lett. to Dodwell, p. 50.

Where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal way.

Watts.

ORATORIAL.  } adj.* [oratorius, Latin.]
ORATORIOUS. } Rhetorical; befitting an orator.

What error is so rotten and putrid, which some oratorious varnish hath not sought to colour over with shews of truth and piety?

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 29.

The oratorial part of these gentlemen seldom vouchsafe to mention fewer than fifteen hundred or two thousand people, to be maintained in this hospital, without troubling their heads about the fund.

Swift, on Maintaining the Poor.

He [Dr. Bathurst] endeavour'd, at the command of the king, to introduce a more graceful and oratorial manner of delivering the public sermons at St. Mary's.

Warton, Life of Bathurst, p. 88.

ORATORIALLY.  } adv.* [from the adj.]
ORATORIOUSLY. } In a rhetorical manner.

Nor do they oppose things of this nature argumentatively, so much as oratoriously.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 115.

ORATORIO.  n. s.* [Italian.] A kind of sacred drama, the subject of it being generally taken from the Scriptures, set to musick.

Sorry I am to accuse the greatest English composer Purcell, and the best adopted one Handel, of being the cause of this innovation, [the mixture of the violin with the organ:] the former by adding violin accompaniments to some of his anthems and services; the latter by erecting an organ on the play-house stage, with a view undoubtedly to difference as much by its dignified form as by its solemn tones, that semi-dramatic species of composition the oratorio from a genuine opera.

Mason on Church Mus. p. 73.

O'RATORY. † n. s. [oratoria ars, Lat.] 1. Eloquence; rhetorical expression.

Each pasture stored with sheep feeding with sober security, while the pretty lambs with bleating oratory craved the dams' comfort.

Sidney.

When a world of men
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd.

Shakspeare.

When my oratory grew tow'rd end,
I bid them that did love their country's good,
Cry, God save Richard.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable, which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
Thou loudest oratory.

Milton, P. L.

By this kind of oratory, and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were still surprised.

Clarendon.

Hammond's subjects were such as had greatest influence on practice, which he prest with most affectionate tenderness, making tears part of his oratory.

Fell.

The former, who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, laid the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments.

Swift.

Come harmless characters, that no one hit,
Come Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit.

Pope.

2. Exercise of eloquence.

The Romans had seized upon the fleet of the Antiates, among which there were six armed with rostra, with which the consul Menenius adorned the publick place of oratory.

Arbutnot.

3. [Oratoire, French.] At first it signified a cloister; then, a private place, allotted for prayer alone; and also, a place for publick worship.

They should first remove all company from them; and in a secret oratorie, or privy chamber, themselves assemble all the powers of their wits to remember these seven articles.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 85.

They began to erect to themselves oratories, not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor estate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them.

Hooker.

Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements.

Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Christians had oratories, or houses of Christian worship.

Mede on Churches, p. 56.

Within these oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery.

Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

O'RATRESS.* } n. s. [oratrix, Latin, from O'RATRIX. } orator. Cockeram gives the English oratrix.] A female orator.

I see love's oratrix pleads tediously to thee.

Warner, Albion's England, (1602), ch. 9.

I fight not with my tongue : this is my oratrix.

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

ORB. n. s. [orbe, Fr. orbis, Latin.]

1. Sphere ; orbicular body.

A mighty collection of water inclosed in the bowels of the earth, constitutes an huge orb in the interior or central parts ; upon the surface of which orb of water the terrestrial strata are expanded. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Circular body.

They with a storm of darts to distance drive
The Trojan chief ; who held at bay from far,
On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war. Dryden.

3. Mundane sphere ; celestial body ; light of heaven.

In the floor of heaven

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,

But in his motion like an angel sings,

Sill quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims.

Shakespeare.

4. Wheel ; any rolling body.

The orbs

Of his fierce chariot roll'd as with the sound

Of torrent floods. Milton, P. L.

5. Circle ; line drawn round.

Does the sun learn action from the father ? Yet all his activity is but in the epicycle of a family :
whereas a subject's motion is in a larger orb.

Holyday.

6. Circle described by any of the mundane spheres.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed for their conceit eccentricities and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs, though no such things were. Bacon.

With smiling aspect you serenely move

In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love.

Dryden.

7. Period ; revolution of time.

Self-begot, self-rai'd,

By our own quickening power, when fatal course

Had circled his full orb, the birth mature

Of this our native heaven. Milton, P. L.

8. Sphere of action.

Will you again unknit

This churlish knot of all-aborred war,

And move in that obedient orb again,

Where you did give a fair and natural light ?

Shakespeare.

9. It is applied by Milton to the eye, as being luminous and spherical.

A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,

Or dim suffusion veil'd. Milton, P. L.

To ORB.* v. a. [from the noun.] To round ; to form into a circle.

Truth and Justice then

Will down return to men,

Orb'd in a rainbow, and like glories wearing.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

Our happiness may orb itself into a thousand vagranacies of glory and delight, and with a kind of eccentrical equation be (as it were) an invariable planet of joy and felicity.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

A golden axle did the work uphold,
Gold was the beam, the wheels were orb'd with gold. Addison.

ORBAT'ION.† n. s. [orbatio, Latin.] Privation of parents or children ; any privation ; poverty.

O'RBED.† adj. [from orb.] Round ; circular ; orbicular. See To ORB.

VOL. II.

All those sayings will I overwear,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As doth that orb'd continent the fire,
That severs day from night.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Let each

Fit well his helm, gripe fast his orb'd shield.

Milton, P. L.

O'RBICK,* adj. [orbicus, Lat.] Circular ;
spherical.

How the body of this orbick frame

From tender infancy so big became.

Bacon, Pan or Nature.

ORBI'CLAR. adj. [orbiculaire, Fr. orbiculatus, Lat.]

1. Spherical.

He shall monarchy with thee divide

Of all things, parted by the empyreal bounds,

His quadrature from thy orbicular world.

Milton, P. L.

2. Circular ; approaching to circularity.

The form of their bottom is not the same ; for whereas before it was of an orbicular make, they now look as if they were pressed.

Addison, Guardian.

By a circle I understand not here a perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth, and which as to sense may seem circular. Newton.

ORBI'CLARLY. adv. [from orbicular.]

Spherically ; circularly.

ORBI'CLARNESS. n. s. [from orbicular.]

The state of being orbicular.

ORBI'CLATED. adj. [orbiculatus, Latin.]

Moulded into an orb.

ORBICLA'TION.* n. s. [orbiculatus, Lat.]

State of being moulded into an orb or circle.

It might have been more significantly called orbiculation, seeing this circumsfusion makes not only a circle, but fills a sphere.

More, Song of the Soul, Int. Gen. p. 424.

O'RBIT. n. s. [orbite, Fr. orbita, Lat.]

1. The line described by the revolution of a planet.

Suppose more suns in proper orbits roll'd,

Dissolv'd the snows, and chas'd the polar cold.

Blackmore.

Suppose the earth placed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury ;
there the whole ocean would even boil with extremity of heat, and be all exhaled into vapours ;
all plants and animals would be scorched. Bentley.

2. A small orb. Not proper.

Attend, and you discern it in the fair

Conduct and finger, or reclaim a hair ;

Or roll the lucid orbit of an eye ;

Or in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

O'RBITUDE.† n. s. [orbitudo, and orbitas,

O'RBITY.† n. s. Latin. The former of these words occurs in Cockeram's vocabulary ; the latter is noticed by Dr.

Johnson, with the name of Bacon following an imperfect definition, but without any example.] Loss or want of parents or children ; loss of husband or wife ; any privation.

Old age and orbity were those two things that emboldened him. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

She's in orbity ;

At once receiver, and the legacy.

Donne, Poems, p. 333.

Considering the frequent mortality in friends and relations, in such a term of time, he may pass away divers years in sorrow and black habits, and leave none to mourn for himself ; orbity may be his inheritance. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 22.

O'RBV. adj. [from orb.] Resembling an
orb. Not used.

It smote Atides orbie targe ; but runne not through the brasse. Chapman.

When, now arraid

The world was with the spring ; and orbie houres
Had gone the round againe, through hebes and flowers. Chapman.

ORC.† n. s. [orca, Lat. ἰπρυα.] A sea-fish ;
a species of whale.

Orks, that for their lord the ocean wooe.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

Proteus' herds, and Neptune's orks.

B. Jonson, Masques.

An island salt and bare,

The haunt of seals and orcs, and sea-mews clang.

Milton, P. L.

O'RCHAL. n. s. A stone from which a blue colour is made. Ainsworth.

O'RHANET. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

O'RCHARD.† n. s. [either hortyard or wortyard, says Skinner ; ortzgarb, Sax.
Junius, and Dr. Johnson. — Hortyard, or ortyard, seems to be the true word ;

artigards, Goth. jurtagard, Icel. It signified formerly a garden in general ;

urt, Goth. an herb, and gard, a hedge ;

hortus, Lat. Milton writes the word, orchat ; probably from the Greek ὄρχος.

See HORTYARD.] A garden of fruit-trees.

Planting of orchards is very profitable, as well as pleasurable. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

They overcome their riches, not by making

Baths, orchards, fish-pools. B. Jonson.

His parsonage-house from an incommodious ruin he had rendered a fair and pleasant dwelling, with the conveniences of gardens and orchards.

Fell.

Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side,

To lawless sylvans all access deny'd. Pope.

O'RCHARDING.* n. s. Cultivation of orchards.

All land is not fit for orcharding.

Evelyn, Pom. ch. 5.

Trench grounds for orcharding.

Ib. Kal. Hort. Oct.

O'RCHARDIST.* n. s. One who cultivates orchards.

However expert the orchardist may be, much will depend on soil. Trans. Adelphi Soc. xiii. 24.

O'RCHESTRE.† n. s. [French ; ὀρχήστρα, ORCHESTRA.† n. s. from ὀρχήσθαι, to dance ; the Grecian orchestra being the places in which dances were publicly performed ; and orchestra (which form of the word is not noticed by Dr. Johnson) was at first used by us in this sense. Sir John Davies published, in 1599, a poem on the antiquity and excellency of dancing, entitled Orchestra.]

A place for public exhibition ; the place where the musicians are set at a publick show ; the band of musicians.

Praise but orchestra, and the skipping art.

Marston, Sat. iii. 11.

Devotion, when lukewarm, is undevout ;

But when it glows, its heat is struck to heaven ;

To human hearts her golden harps are strung ;

High heaven's orchestra chaunts Amen to man.

Young, Night Th. 4.

He very precipitately made his retreat out of one of the doors under the orchestra.

Student, i. 143.

The different degrees of precision, with which the music of the orchestra can accommodate itself to each of these diversities, must depend upon the taste, the sensibility, the fancy, and imagination of the composer. A. Smith on the Imit. Arts, P. ii.

When the orchestre interrupts, as it frequently does, either the recitative or the air, it is in order either to enforce the effect of what had gone before, or to put the mind in the mood which fits it for hearing what is to come after.

A. Smith on the Imit. Arts, P. ii.

O'RHIS.* n. s. A plant, of which several sorts grow wild in England. The flowers of some are thought to resemble flies.

I here saw a great many of the small red and yellow tulip, — and many beautiful kinds of the orchis, some representing bees and flies so naturally as to deceive at first sight.

Swinnburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 29.

ORD.† n. s. An edge or sharpness; as in ordhelm, ordbright, &c. and in the Icelandic tongue, ord signifies a spear or dart. Gibson.

Ord, in old English, signified beginning; whence probably the proverbial phrase odds [ords] and ends, for scraps or remnants, and perhaps orts for waste provision. Dr. Johnson. — Ord is certainly our old word for beginning; and Chaucer uses ord and end. See Lye also in the Saxon Op. opb. But orts have no connection whatever with ord. See ORTS.

To ORDA'IN. v. a. [ordino, Lat. ordonner, Fr.]

5. Mandate; precept; command.

Give order to my servants, that they take No note of our being absent. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

If the lords of the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, presently some nobleman published a protestation against those orders and proclamations. Clarendon.

Upon this new fright, an order was made by both houses for disarming all the papists in England; upon which, and the like orders, though seldom any thing was after done, yet it served to keep up the apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to discipline them from any reverence or affection to the queen. Clarendon.

When Christians became a distinct body, courts were set up by the order of the apostles themselves, to minister judicial process. Kettleworth.

I have received an order under your hand for a thousand pounds in words at length. Trotter.

6. Rule; regulation.

The church hath authority to establish that for an order at one time, which at another time it may abolish, and in both do well. Hooker.

7. Regular government.

The night, their number, and the sudden act, Would dash all order, and protect their fact. Daniel.

As there is no church, where there is no order, no ministry; so where the same order and ministry is, there is the same church. Pearson.

8. A society of dignified persons distinguished by marks of honour.

Elves,

The several chairs of order look you scour, With juice of balm and ev'ry precious flow'r. Shakspeare.

If any of the family be distressed, order is taken for their relief and competent means to live. Bacon.

14. [In architecture.] A system of the several members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column; so as to form one beautiful whole; or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which some of the parts ought to have, on the account of the proportions that are given them. There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek, viz. the Dorick, Ionick, and Corinthian; and two Italian, viz. the Tuscan and Composite. The whole is composed of two parts at least, the column and the entablature, and of four parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the columns, and one acroter or little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts; the base, the shaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.

In the Tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters. By diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two; the column with base and capital, seven; and the entablature one and three quarters.

In the Dorick order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedestal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.

In the Ionick order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half; the pedestal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.

In the Corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half; the pedestal having three, the column nine and a half; and the entablature two.

In the Composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.

In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or space between columns in the Tuscan order, is four diameters. In the Dorick order, two and three quarters; in the Ionick order, two and a quarter; in the Corinthian order, two; and in the Composite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

In the body, when the principal parts, the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferior smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South, Sermon.

ORDINABILITY.* n. s. [from ordinable.]

Capability of being appointed.

Our obedience to God ought to be such, as that it may have, though not a merit of condignity to deserve everlasting bliss, (that being, as I have shewn you, utterly impossible,) yet an ordinability, as a great doctor of our church expresseth it, that is, a meetness, fitness, and due disposition toward the obtaining it. Bp. Bull, Works, i. 367.

O'RDINABLE.† adj. [ordino, Lat.] That may be appointed.

All the ways of economy God hath used toward a rational creature, to reduce mankind to that course of living which is most perfectly agreeable to our nature, and by the mercy of God ordinable to eternal bliss. Hammond.

If we look upon ourselves as men, we are free agents, and therefore capable of doing good or evil, and consequently ordinable unto reward or punishment. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 11.

O'RDINAL. adj. [ordinal, French; ordinalis, Latin.] Noting order; as, second, third.

The moon's age is thus found: add to the exact day of the month and the ordinal number of that month from March inclusive, because the epoch begins at March, and the sum of those, casting away thirty or twenty-nine, as often as it ariseth, is the age of the moon. Holder.

O'RDINANCE. n. s. [ordonnance, French.]

1. Law; rule; prescript.

It seemeth hard to plant any sound ordinance, or reduce them to a civil government; since all their ill customs are permitted unto them. Spenser on Ireland.

Let Richard and Elizabeth,
The true succeders of each royal house,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together! Shakspeare.

2. Observance commanded.

One ordinance ought not to exclude the other, much less to disparage the other, and least of all to undervalue that which is the most eminent. Bp. Taylor.

3. Appointment.

Things created to shew bare heads,
When one but of my ordinance stood up,
To speak of peace or war. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. A cannon. It is now generally written for distinction ordnance; its derivation is not certain; perhaps when the word cannon was first introduced, it was mistaken for canon, and so not improperly translated ordnance. It is commonly used in a collective sense for more cannons than one.

Caves and wombly vaultages of France,
Shall chide your trespass and return your mock,
In second accent to his ordinance. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

O'RDINANT.* adj. [ordinans, Latin.] Ordaining; decreeing. Not in use.

Why, even in that was heaven ordinant.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

O'RDINARYLY. adv. [from ordinary.]

1. According to established rules; according to settled method.

We are not to look that the church should change her public laws and ordinances, made according to that which is judged ordinarily, and commonly fittest for the whole, although it chance that for some particular men the same be found inconvenient.

Hooker.

Springs and rivers do not derive the water which they ordinarily refund from rain.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Commonly; usually.

The instances of human ignorance were not only clear ones, but such as are not so ordinarily suspected.

Glanville.

Prayer ought to be more than ordinarily fervent and vigorous before the sacrament.

South.

O'RDINARY. adj. [ordinarius, Lat.]

1. Established; methodical; regular.

Though in arbitrary governments there may be a body of laws observed in the ordinary forms of justice, they are not sufficient to secure any rights to the people; because they may be dispensed with.

Addison, Freeholder.

The standing ordinary means of conviction failing to influence them, it is not to be expected that any extraordinary means should be able to do it.

Atterbury.

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life, as by the ordinary means of grace we should have power to avoid.

Lau.

2. Common; usual.

ORE. n. s. [Ope, or opa, Saxon; oor, Dutch, a mine.]

1. Metal unrefined; metal yet in its fossil state.

Round about him lay on every side
Great heaps of gold that never would be spent;
Of which some were rude ore not purify'd
Of Mulciber's devouring element. Spenser, F. Q.
They would have brought them the gold ore aboard their ships. Raleigh, Apol.

A hill not far,
Shone with a glossy scurf, undoubted sign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
The work of sulphur.

Milton, P. L.

Who have labour'd more
To search the treasures of the Roman store,
Or dig in Grecian mines for purer ore?

Roscommon.

Quicksilver ore of this mine is the richest of all ores I have yet seen, for ordinarily it contains in it half quicksilver, and in two parts of ore, one part of quicksilver, and sometimes in three parts of ore, two parts of quicksilver.

Brown.

We walk in dreams on fairy land,
Where golden ore lies mixt with common sand.

Dryden.

Those who unripe veins in mines explore,
On the rich bed again the warm turf lay,
Till time digests the yet imperfect ore,
And know it will be gold another day. Dryden.
Those profounder regions they explore,
Where metals ripen in vast casks of ore. Garth.

2. Metal.

The liquid ore he drain'd
First his own tools; then what might else be wrought,
Fusile, or grav'n in metal.

Milton, P. L.

embroidered.

Life of Sir T. Pope, by Warton, p. 349.

ORGAL. n. s. Lees of wine.

ORGAN.† n. s. [organe, Fr. ὄργανον.]

1. Natural instrument; as the tongue is the organ of speech, the lungs of respiration.

When he shall hear she died upon his words,

The ever lovely organ of her life

Shall come apparel'd in more precious habit,

Than when she liv'd indeed. Shakspeare.

For a mean and organ, by which this operative virtue might be continued, God appointed the light to be united, and gave it also motion and heat. Raleigh.

The aptness of birds is not so much in the conformity of the organs of speech, as in their attention. Bacon.

Wit and will

Can judge and choose without the body's aid;

Tho' on such objects they are working still,

As through the body's organs are convey'd. Davies.

2. An instrument of musick consisting of pipes filled with wind, and of stops, touched by the hand. [Orgue, Fr. "instrument de musique fort ancien." Roquefort. "Navarr saith, that the use of organs was not received in Thomas Aquinas's time; who was born in the year 1221. But Bale and Mantuan attribute the bringing in of organs to the pope Vitalian. Then it must be about the year 660. But to make short, the organ is not of the western, but the eastern invention. Aymon saith, that the first organ they had in France was made more Græcorum,—after the year
813.—But Marianus Scotus, Martin
Polonus, Platina, the Annals of France,
Aventine, and the Pontifical itself, all agree, that the first organ that ever was seen in the west, was sent over into France to king Pepin from the Greek emperor Constantinus Copronymus, about the year 766. Res adhuc Ger-manis et Gallis incognita, saith Aventine,
instrumentum musica maximum; orga-num appellat; cicutis ex albo plumbis compactum est, simul et foliis inflatur, et manuum pedumque digitis pulsatur.
Annal. Boiorum, lib. 3. fol. 300. And so we have the antiquity of organs in the west. But in the east they cannot be less ancient than the Nicene council itself, as appeareth by the emperor Julian's epigram upon the instrument.

Εἰς ὈΡΓΑΝΟΝ. Ἀλλοῖον ὄργανον, &c. Gregory's Posthuma, or Learned Tracts,
1650, p. 49.]

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes in the world, and making every one sound a particular note. Keil.

While in more lengthen'd notes, and slow,
The deep, majestic, solemn organs blow. Pope.

To ORGAN. v. a. [from the noun.] To form organically. Not in use.

Would'st thou be treated with in the ineffable dialect of heaven? Alas! fond creature, thou art elemented and organ'd for other apprehensions,
for a lower commerce of perception.

Mannyngham, Disc. (1681,) p. 89.

ORGANICAL. } adj. [organique, Fr. orga-
ORGANICK. } niscus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of various parts co-operating with each other.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick
notes

In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;

Which, if they did not die, might seem to be

A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

He with serpent tongue

Organick, or impulse of vocal air,
His fraudulent temptation thus began.

Milton, P. L.

The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they live and move, and are vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent being. Bentley.

2. Instrumental; acting as instruments of nature or art, to a certain end.

Read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fitted style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton on Education.

3. Respecting organs.

She could not produce a monster of any thing that hath more vital and organical parts than a rock of marble. Ray.

They who want the sense of discipline, or hearing, are by consequence deprived of speech, not by any immediate organical indisposition, but by want of discipline. Holder.

ORGANICALLY. adv. [from organical.]
By means of organs or instruments; by organical disposition of parts.

All stones, metals, and minerals, are real vegetables; that is, grow organically from seeds, as well as plants. Locke.

ORGANICALNESS. n. s. [from organical.]
State of being organical.

ORGANISM. n. s. [from organ.] Organical structure.

How admirable is the natural structure or organism of bodies! Grew, Cosmol. Sac.

ORGANIST. n. s. [organiste, Fr. from organ.]
One who plays on the organ.

An organist serves that office in a public choir.

Bayle.

ORGANIZA'TION. n. s. [from organize.]
Construction in which the parts are so disposed as to be subservient to each other.

Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations. Glanville, Scepstis.

That being then one plant, which has such an organization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organization. Locke.

To ORGANIZE. v. a. [organiser, Fr. from organ.] To construct so as that one part co-operates with another; to form organically.

As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member that substance, quantity, and shape, which nature seeth most expedient, so the inward grace of sacraments may teach what serveth best for their outward form. Hooker.

A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter, wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter organized could never produce. Ray on the Creation.

The identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeing particles in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

ORGANLOFT. n. s. [organ and loft.] The loft where the organ stands.

Five young ladies, who are of no small fame for their great severity of manners,—would go no where with their lovers but to an organloft in a church, where they had a cold treat and some few opera songs. Tatler, No. 61.

ORGANPIPE. n. s. [organ and pipe.] The pipe of a musical organ.

The thunder,

That deep and dreadful organpipe, pronounc'd
The name of Prosper. Shakspeare, Tempest.

ORGANY.† n. s. [organe, Saxon; organu- num, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

Organie healeth scabs.

Gerarde's Herbal, (1597,) p. 542.

ORGASM. n. s. [orgasme, Fr. ὄργασμος.]
Sudden vehemence.

This rupture of the lungs, and consequent spitting of blood, usually arises from an orgasm, or immoderate motion of the blood. Blackmore.

By means of the curious lodgement and in-solation of the auditory nerves, the orgasms of the spirits should be allayed, and perturbations of the mind quieted. Derham.

ORGEAT.* n. s. [French.] A liquor extracted from barley and sweet almonds. Mason.

ORGEIS. n. s. A sea-fish, called likewise organling. Both seem a corruption of the orkenyng, as being taken on the Orkney coast. Ainsworth.

ORGIES.† n. s. [orgies, Fr. orgia, Lat.
ὄργια, Gr. from ὄργη, rage.] Mad rites of Bacchus; frantick revels. I find this word used in the singular.

It would have resembled an orgy to Bacchus.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 118.

These are nights

Solemn to the shining rites

Of the fairy prince and knights,

While the moon their orgies lights. B. Jonson.

She feign'd nocturnal orgies; left my bed,

And, mix'd with Trojan dames, the dances led. Dryden.

ORGILLOUS.† adj. [orgueilleux, Fr. Dr.
Johnson.—The modern editors of Shaks-peare print this word orgulous, and Mr.
Steevens has shown that it is a very ancient word for proud or disdainful. The Saxons used orgellice in the same manner.] Proud; haughty. Not in use.

From isles of Greece
The princes orgillous, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships.

Shakespeare, Hen. V. Prol.

O'RICALCH.† n. s. [orichalcum, Lat. from the Gr. ὄρος, a mountain, and χαλκός, brass. Our word is sometimes improperly written auricalche, as if it were connected with aurum, gold.] Brass.

Not Bilbo steel, nor brass from Corinth fet,
Nor costly orichalk from strange Phœnicie,
But such as could both Phœbus' arrows ward,
And the hailing darts of heaven beating hard.

A massy idol of auricalk is placed upon a chariot with eight wheels richly guided.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 345.

O'RIEL.*† n. s. [oriol, old Fr. "porche, O'RIOL. } allée, galerie," Lacombe; oriolum, low Latin. Du Cange says, that he knows not the origin of this word.] A little waste room next the hall, where particular persons dine. Such is the description by Coles, Dict. 1685. And the sense of oriolum is much the same in Du Cange. It was a sort of recess. In our ancient vocabulary, the Prompt. Parvulorum, oryel is translated into the Latin cancellus, interdícula. This may serve to explain "the oriel window," which is sometimes found in modern publications.

Oryel, oriolum! — we may justly presume that Oriel or Oryal college, in Oxford, took name from such room, or portico, or cloister.

Cowel, in V. Oryel.

O'RIENCY.*† n. s. [from orient.] Brightness of colour; strength of colour.

In that they [angels] are sinless, their created power is in its pristine vigour and oriency, immaculate.

Waterhouse on Fortescue, p. 221.

Black and thorny plum tree is of the deepest oriency.

Evelyn, B. iii. ch. 4. § 12.

O'RIENT. adj. [oriens, Lat.]

1. Rising as the sun.

Moon that now meet'st the orient sun, now fly'st

With the fix'd stars. Milton, P. L.

When fair morn orient in heaven appear'd. Milton, P. L.

2. Eastern; oriental.

3. Bright; shining; glittering; gaudy; sparkling.

The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again transform'd into orient pearl;
Advantaging their loan with interest,

Oftentimes double gain of happiness. Shakespeare.

There do breed yearly an innumerable company of gnats, whose property is to fly unto the eye of the lion, as being a bright and orient thing.

Abbot on the World.

We have spoken of the cause of orient colours in birds; which is by the fineness of the strainer.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Morning light

More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white.

Milton, P. L.

In thick shelter of black shades inbower'd,
[He] offers to each weary traveller

His orient liquor in a crystal glass,

To quench the drouth of Phœbus, Milton, Comus.

The chiefs about their necks the scutcheons wore,

With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er.

Dryden.

O'RIENT.† n. s. [orient, Fr.] The east; the part where the sun first appears.

Such schemes as these were usual to the nations of the orient.

Mede, Paraphr. of St. Peter, (1643), p. 22.

The greatest and best built city throughout the orient.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 159.

The star of love, or the sun, makes all the orient laugh.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 251.

ORIENTAL. adj. [oriental, Fr.] Eastern; placed in the east; proceeding from the east.

Your ships went as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to Pequín upon the oriental seas, as far as to the borders of the east Tartary.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

Some ascribing hereto the generation of gold, conceive the bodies to receive some appropriate influence from the sun's ascendent and oriental radiations.

Brown.

ORIENTAL. n. s. An inhabitant of the eastern parts of the world.

They have been of that great use to following ages, as to be imitated by the Arabians and other orientals.

Grev.

ORIENTALISM.† n. s. [from oriental.] An idiom of the eastern languages; an eastern mode of speech.

Dragons are a sure mark of orientalism.

Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. I. Diss. 1. sign. c.

Scholars unacquainted with Hebrew will receive pleasure and instruction from a literal version of orientalism immediately presented to their eye, without the trouble of referring to a servile Latin translation.

Abp. Newcome, Ess. on the Transl. of the Bib. p. 283.

ORIENTALIST.*† n. s. [from oriental.] An inhabitant of the eastern parts of the world.

According to the received notion of the orientalists.

Biblioth. Bibl. i. 51.

Who can tell how far the orientalists were wont to adorn their parabes? Peters on Job, p. 123.

ORIENTALITY.† n. s. [from oriental.] State of being oriental.

His revolution being regular, it hath no efficacy peculiar from its orientality, but equally disperseth his beams.

Brown.

O'RIFICE.† n. s. [orifice, Fr. orificium, Lat.]

Any opening or perforation.

The prince of Orange, in his first hurt by the Spanish boy, could find no means to stanch the blood, but was fain to have the orifice of the wound stopped by men's thumbs, succeeding one another for the space of two days.

Bacon.

Their mouths

With hideous orifice gap'd on us wide,

Potrending hollow truce. Milton, P. L.

Ætna was bored through the top with a monstrous orifice.

Addison, Guardian.

Blood-letting, Hippocrates saith, should be done with broad lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice by stabbing or pertusion.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

O'RIFLAME.† n. s. [old Fr. oriflamme; probably a corruption of auriflamma, Lat. or flamme d'or, Fr. in like manner as orpmint is corrupted.] A golden standard.

Ainsworth.

Yet holy Lewis with his Frenchmen strook

Into the Pagans such deep fright, that they,

At his illustrious oriflames look,

Unto his victories gave willing way.

Beaumont, Psyche, (1651), p. 277.

O'RIKAN.† n. s. [origan, Fr. origanum, Lat.]

Wild marjoram.

I chanc'd to see her in her proper hue,

Bathing herself in origan and thyme.

Spenser, F. Q.

O'IGIN.† n. s. [origine, Fr. origo, ORIGINAL. } Lat.]

1. Beginning; first existence.

The sacred historian only treats of the origins of terrestrial animals.

Bentley, Serm.

2. Fountain; source; that which gives being or existence.

Nature, which contains its origin,

Cannot be border'd certain in itself.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

If any station upon earth be honourable, theirs was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original.

Atterbury.

Some philosophers have placed the original of power in admiration, either of surpassing form, great valour, or superior understanding.

Davenant.

Original of beings! pow'r divine!

Since that I live and that I think, is thine. Prior.

These great orbs,

Primitive founts, and origins of light. Prior.

3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated.

In this sense origin is not used.

Compare this translation with the original, the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression.

Addison.

External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings.

Locke.

4. Derivation; descent.

They, like the seed from which they sprung, accurst

Against the gods immortal hatred nurst;

An impious, arrogant, and cruel brood,

Expressing their original from blood. Dryden.

ORIGINAL. adj. [originel, Fr. originalis, Latin.] Primitive; pristine; first.

The original question was, whether God hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image?

Stillfleet.

Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection, the knowledge and ability God at first gave him, would still have continued.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

You still, fair mother, in your offspring trace

The stock of beauty destin'd for the race;

Kind nature, forming them, the pattern took

From heav'n's first work, and Eve's original look.

Prior.

ORIGINALITY.*† n. s. [from original.]

Quality or state of being original.

Here also hangs the celebrated Madonna del Pesce of Raphael, one of the most valuable pictures in the world. I do not know how Amiconi came to doubt of its originality.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 43.

The owners really believed these pictures to be original, and among the best of the respective masters, to whom they were attributed; and it would have been the highest affront to have expressed a doubt of their originality.

Gough.

ORIGINALLY.† adv. [from original.]

1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause; from the beginning.

A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood.

Bacon.

As God is originally holy in himself, so he might communicate his sanctity to the sons of men, whom he intended to bring into the fruition of himself.

Pearson.

A present blessing upon our fasts, is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity.

Smatridge, Serm.

2. At first.

The metallic and mineral matter found in the perpendicular intervals of the strata, was originally, and at the time of the deluge, lodged in the bodies of those strata.

Woodward.

3. As the first author.

For that originally others writ,
May be so well disguis'd and so improv'd,
That with some justice it may pass for yours.
Roscommon.

ORIG'INALNESS. n. s. [from original.] The quality or state of being original.

ORIG'INARY. adj. [originaire, French, from origin.]

1. Productive; causing existence.

The production of animals in the originary way, requires a certain degree of warmth, which proceeds from the sun's influence. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

2. Primitive; that which was the first state.

Remember I am built of clay, and must Resolve to my originary dust. Sandys on Job.

To ORIG'INATE. v. a. [from origin.] To bring into existence.

The holy story originates skill and knowledge of arts from God.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653), p. 9.

To ORIG'INATE. v. n. To take existence.

I consider the address — as originating in the principles of the sermon.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

ORIGINA'TION. n. s. [originatio, Lat. from originate.]

1. The act or mode of bringing into existence; first production.

The tradition of the origination of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that origination excoigated by the heathen, were particular. Hale.

This eruca is propagated by animal patents, to wit, butterflies, after the common origination of all caterpillars. Ray.

Descartes first introduced the fancy of making a world, and deducing the origination of the universe from mechanical principles. Keil.

2. Descent from a primitive.

The Greek word used by the apostles to express the church, signifieth, a calling forth, if we look upon the origination. Pearson.

OR'ION.* n. s. [Latin.] One of the constellations of the southern hemisphere.

When with fierce winds Orion arm'd
Hath vex'd the Red-sea coast. Milton, P. L.

OR'ISON. † n. s. [orison, old French; oraison, modern; oratio, Lat. See ORAISON.] When written oraison, the accent is proper on the second syllable; not so, when written orison. Cotton, for the sake of the rhyme, in a burlesque couplet among the following examples, has indeed forced the accent upon the second syllable of orison. The word is usually found in the plural number. Dyer uses oraison in the singular.] A prayer; a supplication.

Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all my sins remember'd. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Alas! your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch.

He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and Te Deum sung. Bacon, Hen. VII.

My wakeful lay shall knock
At the oriental gates, and duly mock
The earthly lark's shrill orisons, to be An anthem at the day's nativity. Cróshaw.

His daily orisons attract our ears. Sandys on Job.
Lowly they bow'd, adoring, and began
Their orisons, each morning duly paid.
Milton, P. L.

So went he on with his orisons,
Which, if you mark them well, were wise ones.

The midnight clock attests my fervent prayers,
The rising sun my orisons declares.
Cotton.
Harte.

ORK.† n. s. A sea-fish. See ORC.

O'RL'OP. n. s. [overloop, Dutch.] The middle deck. Skinner.

A small ship of the king's, called the Pensie, was assailed by the Lyon, a principal ship of Scotland; wherein the Pensie so applied her shot, that the Lyon's orelop was broken, her sails and tackling torn; and lastly, she was boarded and taken. Hayward.

OR'NAMENT. n. s. [ornamentum, Latin; ornement, French.]

1. Embellishment; decoration.

So may the outward shows be least themselves;
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament. Shakspere.

2. Something that embellishes.

Ivorie, wrought in ornaments to decke the cheekes of horse. Chapman.

The Tuscan chief to me has sent
Their crown, and every regal ornament. Dryden.

No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession. Rogers.

3. Honour; that which confers dignity.

They are abused and injured, and betrayed from their only perfection, whenever they are taught, that any thing is an ornament in them, that is not an ornament in the wisest amongst mankind. Law.

The persons of different qualities in both sexes are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure. Addison on Italy.

To O'RNAMENT.* v. a. [from the noun.]

Dr. Johnson notices ornamented (without any example) as an adjective, which he thinks a word of late introduction, and not very elegant. Warburton, a little before the Dictionary of Dr. Johnson was published, appears to have employed it; and Shenstone had used it long before.] To embellish; to bedeck; to adorn.

Why droops my Damon, whilst he roves
Through ornamented fields and groves?

Shenstone, Prog. of Taste, P. 4.

Those august towers of St. James's, which, though neither seemly nor sublime, yet ornament the place where the balances are preserved, which weigh out liberty and property to the nations all abroad. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 60.

The font, remaining in its old situation near the chief entrance, is large and well ornamented.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 4.

ORNAME'NTAL. adj. [from ornament.] Serving to decoration; giving embellishment.

Some think it most ornamental to wear their bracelets on their wrists, others about their ancles. Brown.

If the kind be capable of more perfection, though rather in the ornamental parts of it than the essential, what rules of morality or respect have I broken in naming the defects, that they may hereafter be amended? Dryden.

Even the heathens have esteemed this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the Creator. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

If no advancement of knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost; every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere. Swift on Religion.

ORNAME'NTALLY. adv. [from ornamental.]

In such a manner as may confer embellishment.

O'RNATE. adj. [ornatus, Latin. This is an old word in our language; of which Milton seems to have been fond. It is in Huloet's Dictionary.] Bedecked; decorated; fine.

Not in rude and old language, but in polished and ornate terms.

Pref. to the Boke of Encydos, Caxton, (1490.)
Men — ornate with virtue and wisdom.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 12. b.

A graceful and ornate rhetoric, taught out of the rule of Plato. Milton on Education.

What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate, and gay,
Comes this way sailing? Milton, S. A.

To O'RNATE.* v. a. [orno, Latin.] To adorn; to garnish. Huloet.

This is the exposition of the noble philosopher; which I have written, principally to the intent to ornate our language with using words in their proper signification. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 200.

O'RNATELY.* adv. [from ornate.] Finely; with decoration; with embellishment.

With proper captations of benevolence
Ornately pollysh'd after your faculie.

Skelton, Poems, p. 35.

To utter the mind aptly, distinctly, and ornately, is a gift given to very few.

Sherry, Figures of Gramm. and Rhet. (1555), fol. ii. b.

O'RNATENESS. n. s. [from ornate.] Finery; state of being embellished.

O'RNATURE. † n. s. [ornature, old French; from ornatus, Latin.] Decoration.

His noble purpose was this: to save precious monuments of ancient writers, which is a most worthy worke; and so to bring them from darkness to a lively light, to the notable fame and ornature of this land.

Bale, Leland's New Year's Gift, (1549.)

A mushroom for all your other ornatures.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

ORNI'SCOPIST. n. s. [ὄρνις and σκοπεῖν.] One who examines the flight of birds in order to foretel futurity.

ORNITHO'LOGIST.* n. s. [ornithologiste, French; from ornithology.] One who understands the nature of birds; a describer of birds.

Soon after Mr. Adamson's Voyage to Senegal, Mr. Collinson first in the philosophical translations, and after him, the most eminent ornithologists in Europe, seem to have considered this traveller's having caught four European swallows, on the 6th of October, not far from the African coast, as a decisive proof that the common swallows, when they disappear in Europe, make for Africa during the winter, and return again to us in the spring.

Barrington, Ess. 4.

ORNITHO'LOGY. n. s. [ὄρνις and λόγος.] A discourse on birds.

O'RP'HAN. n. s. [ὀρφανός; orphelin, Fr.] A child who has lost father or mother, or both.

Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered:
Such is the state of man. Spenser.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shaksp.

Sad widows, by thee riled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.
The sea with spoils his angry bullets strow,
Widows and orphans making as they go. Waller.

Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpless orphan whom thou leav'st behind.

Dryden.

Collections were made for the relief of the poor,
whether widows or orphans.

Nelson.

O'RPHAN. adj. [orphelin, French.] Bereft of parents.

This king, left orphan both of father and mother, found his estate, when he came to age, so disjointed even in the noblest and strongest limbs of government, that the name of a king was grown odious.

Sidney.

O'RPHANAGE.† n. s. [orphelinage, Fr.;

O'RPHANISM.† n. s. from orphan.] State of an orphan.

Sherwood.

O'RPHANED.* part. adj. [from orphan.] Bereft of parents or friends.

So wept Lorenzo fair Clarissa's fate;
Who gave that angel boy, on whom he doats,
And died to give him, orphan'd in his birth.

Young, Night Th. 5.

For this orphaned world the Holy Spirit made the like charitable provision. Warburton, Serm. 20.

O'RPIMENT.† n. s. [auripigmentum, Lat.; orpiment, orpin, French.]

Orpiment is a compound of sulphur and arsenick. It is lamellar in one direction, and of a yellow colour. See Journal of Science, No. 20, p. 287.

For the golden colour, it may be made by some small mixture of orpiment, such as they use to brass in the yellow alchemy; it will easily recover that which the iron loseth.

Bacon.

ORPHA'NOTROPHY. n. s. [εὐτροφία and ῥοφή.] An hospital for orphans.

O'RPINE. n. s. [orpin, French; telephon, Latin.] Liverer or rose root, anacampseros, Telephum, or Rhodia radis. A plant.

Miller.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still:

Embeath balm, and cheerful galingale. Spenser.

O'RRERY. n. s. An instrument which by many complicated movements represents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies. It was first made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Litchfield, and so named from his patron the earl of Orrey: by one or other of this family almost every art has been encouraged or improved.

O'RRIS. n. s. [orris, Latin.] A plant and flower.

Miller.

The nature of the orris root is almost singular; for roots that are in any degree sweet, it is but the same sweetness with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not sweet in the leaf; neither is the flower any thing so sweet as the root.

Bacon.

O'RRIS.† n. s. [old French.] A sort of gold or silver lace.

Dr. Johnson. — If such a word as orris, in this sense, exists, (which I doubt,) it can only be a corruption of orfrais. See O'FRAIS.

ORT.* n. s. [See ORTS.] A fragment.

It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of his remainder.

Shakespeare, Timon.

ORTHODOX. } adj. [ὀρθός and δόξα;
ORTHODOXAL. } orthodox, French.]

Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical. Orthodoxal is not now used.

Be you persuaded and settled in the true protestant religion professed by the church of England; which is as sound and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any Christian church in the world.

Bacon.

An uniform profession of one and the same orthodoxal verity, which was once given to the saints in the holy apostles' days.

White.

Eternal bliss is not immediately superstructed on the most orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour saith, If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them; the doing must be first superstructed on the knowing or believing, before any happiness can be built on it.

Hammond.

Origen and the two Clemens, their works were originally orthodox, but had been afterwards corrupted, and interpolated by hereticks in some parts of them.

Waterland.

O'RTHOXOLY. adv. [from orthodox.] With soundness of opinion.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion.

Bacon.

O'RTHOXNESS.* n. s. [from orthodox.] State of being orthodox.

I proceed now to the second thing implied in being faithful: and that is purity, and orthodoxness of doctrine.

Killingbeck, Serm. p. 17.

O'RTHOXOXY. n. s. [ὀρθοδοξία; orthodoxie, French; from orthodox.] Soundness in opinion and doctrine.

Basil himself bears full and clear testimony to Gregory's orthodoxy.

Waterland.

I do not attempt explaining the mysteries of the christian religion; since Providence intended there should be mysteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good sense, to go about it.

Swift.

O'RTHODROMICKS. n. s. pl. [from ὀρθός and δρόμος.] The art of sailing in the arc of some great circle, which is the shortest or straightest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe.

Harris.

O'RTHODROMY. n. s. [ὀρθός and δρόμος; orthodromie, French.] Sailing in a straight course.

O'RTHOEPY.* n. s. [ὀρθός, right, and ἔπος, a word, Greek.] The art of pronouncing words properly.

Of orthography, or orthoepy, treating of the letters and their pronunciation.

Greenwood, Ess. on Eng. Gram. (3d ed. 1722,) p. 235.

As it has been frequently represented to me, that the unusual, though proper, expression of Elements of Orthoepy, the original title of this work, has prevented many from comprehending its real intention, I have consented to the printing of a new title-page.

Nares, Gen. Rules for the Pron. of the Eng. Lang. (1792,) Adv.

ORTHOGON. n. s. [ὀρθός and γωνία.] A rectangular figure.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments; your cylinder for vaulted turrets and round buildings; your orthogon and pyramid for sharp steeples.

Peucham.

ORTHO'GONAL.† adj. [orthogonal, French; from orthogon.] Rectangular.

Finding the squares of an orthogonal triangle's side.

Selden, Pref. in Drayton's Polyolbion.

ORTHO'GRAPHER. n. s. [ὀρθός and γράφω.] One who spells according to the rules of grammar.

He was wont to speak plain, like an honest man and a soldier; and now he is turn'd orthographer, his words are just so many strange dishes.

Shakspeare.

ORTHOGRA'PHICAL. adj. [from orthography.]

1. Rightly spelled.

2. Relating to the spelling.

I received from him the following letter, which, after having rectified some little orthographical mistakes, I shall make a present of to the public.

Addison, Spect.

3. Delineated according to the elevation, not the ground-plot.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation and the just dimensions of each face, and of what belongs to it.

Mortimer, Husb.

ORTHOGRA'PHICALLY. adv. [from orthographical.]

1. According to the rules of spelling.

2. According to the elevation.

ORTHO'GRAPHY. n. s. [ὀρθός and γράφω; orthographie, French.]

1. The part of grammar which teaches how words should be spelled.

This would render languages much more easy to be learned, as to reading and pronouncing, and especially as to the writing them, which now as they stand we find to be troublesome, and it is no small part of grammar which treats of orthography and right pronunciation.

Holder.

2. The art or practice of spelling.

In London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs; all which reduced to writing, would entirely confound orthography.

Swift.

3. The elevation of a building delineated.

You have the orthography or upright of this ground-plot, and the explanation with a scale of feet and inches.

Mozon.

The natural, and as it were the homogeneal, parts of grammar be two; orthology, and orthography: in both which parts of it, God hath had a special hand; as even by the heathen themselves is acknowledged: in the first of them, orthology; in teaching men the right imposition of names: in the second of them, orthography; in teaching them the rare invention of letters.

Fotherby, Athleom. (1622,) p. 346.

ORTHO'PNOEA. n. s. [ὀρθοπνοία; orthopnoëe, French.] A disorder of the lungs, in which respiration can be performed only in an upright posture.

His disease was an asthma or turning to an orthopnoea; the cause a translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs.

Harvey on Consumptions.

O'RTIVE. adj. [ortive, French; ortivus, Latin.] Relating to the rising of any planet or star.

ORTOLAN. n. s. [French.] A small bird accounted very delicious.

Nor ortolans nor godwits.

Cowley.

ORTS.† n. s. seldom with a singular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing; by Mr. Lye more reasonably from orda, Irish, a fragment. In Anglo-Saxon, ord signifies the beginning; whence in some provinces odds and ends, for ords and ends, signify remnants, scattered pieces, refuse; from ord thus used probably came ort. Dr. Johnson. — Orts is, throughout all England, one of the most common words in our language; which has adopted nothing from the Irish, though we use two or three of their words, as Irish. Orts is merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb opectan, turpare, vilefacere, deturpare. Oret, ort, means (any thing, something,) made vile or worthless. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 328.] Refuse; things left or thrown away.

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;

A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On object arts and imitations. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.

The fractions of her faith, arts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes.

Shakespeare.

Much good do't you then;

Brave plush and velvet men

Can feed on orts.

B. Jonson.

Thou son of crums and orts.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

The polluted orts and refuse of Arcadians and romances,
Milton, Eiconoclast. ch. 1.

Like lavish ancestors, his earlier years

Have disinherited his future hours,

Which starve on orts, and glean their former field.

Young, Night Th. 3.

O'RAL. n. s. [orvale, Fr. orvala, Latin.] The herb clary. Dict.

ORVETAN. n. s. [orvietano, Italian; so called from a mountebank at Orvieto in Italy.] An antidote or counter poison; a medicinal composition or electuary, good against poison. Bailey.

OSCHEO'CELE. n. s. [σχηον and κύλη.] A kind of hernia when the intestines break into the scrotum. Dict.

TO O'SCILLATE. v. n. [oscillo, Latin.] To move backward and forward.

The axis of oscillation is a right line, parallel to the apparent horizontal one, and passing through the centre; about which the pendulum oscillates. Chambers, in V. Oscillation.

OSCILLA'TION.† n. s. [oscillum, Latin.] The act of moving backward and forward like a pendulum.

Whose mind is agitated by painful oscillations of the nervous system, and whose nerves are mutually affected by the irregular pulsations of his mind. Bp. Berkeley, Stris, § 104.

OSCILLATORY. adj. [oscillum, Latin.] Moving backwards and forwards like a pendulum.

The actions upon the solids are stimulating or increasing their vibrations, or oscillatory motions. Arbuthnot.

O'SCITANCY. n. s. [oscitantia, Latin.]

1. The act of yawning.

2. Unusual sleepiness; carelessness.

If persons of circumspect piety have been overtaken, what security can there be for our wreckless oscitancy? Gov. of the Tongue.

It might proceed from the oscitancy of transcribers, who, to dispatch their work the sooner, used to write all numbers in cyphers. Addis. Spect.

O'SCITANT.† adj. [oscitans, Latin.]

1. Yawning; unusually sleepy.

2. Sleepy; sluggish.

His legal justice cannot be so fickle and so variable, sometimes like a devouring fire, and by and by convivient in the embers, or, if I may so say, oscitant and supine.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Dio. ii. 3.

Our oscitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again.

Decay of Chr. Piety.

O'SCITANTLY. adv. [from oscitant.] Carelessly.

Which those drowsy noddors over the letter of the Scripture have very oscitantly collected.

More, Conj. Cab. Dedic.

OSCITA'TION. n. s. [oscito, Latin.] The act of yawning.

VOL. II.

I shall defer considering this subject at large, till I come to my treatise of oscitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler, No. 63.

O'SIER. n. s. [osier, Fr. vitez.] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are used for basket-work.

The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place.

Shakespeare.

Ere the sun advance his burning eye,

I must fill up this osier cage of ours

With baleful weeds and precious-juiced flowers.

Shakespeare.

Care comes crown'd with osier, segs and weeds.

Drayton.

Bring them for food sweet boughs and osiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay-rick shut.

May, Virgil.

Like her no nymph can willowing osiers bend,
In basket-works, which painted streaks commend.

Dryden.

Along the marshes spread,

We made the osier fringed bank our bed. Pope.

O'SMUND. n. s. A plant. It is sometimes used in medicine. It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.

O'SNABURGS.* n. s. pl. White and brown coarse linens imported from Osnaburg in Germany. A cloth resembling them is manufactured in Angus in Scotland. See Dr. Jamieson's Scot. Dict.

O'SPRAY.† n. s. [corrupted from ossifraga, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius derives it from the Goth. os, the mouth of a river, and prey.] A large, blackish hawk, with a long neck and blue legs. Its prey is fish, and it is sometimes seen hovering over the Tweed. Lambe, Notes to the Battle of Floddon. Sir T. Hammer calls it the sea-eagle; of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fish in the water turn up their bellies, and lie still for him to seize which he pleases; a marvel which our old poetry has repeatedly noticed. But Mr. Harris has observed, from Penant, that the ospray is a different bird from the sea-eagle, though its prey is the same.

I think he'll be to Rome,

As is the ospray to the fish, who takes it

By sovereignty of nature. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Among the fowls shall not be eaten the eagle, the ossifrage, and the ospray. Lev. xi. 13.

TO OSS. v. n. To offer; to try; to essay; to set about any thing. It is thus used in Westmoreland, Lancashire, and Cheshire, and perhaps throughout the north. The origin of it I cannot find.

O'SSELET. n. s. [French.] A little hard substance arising on the inside of a horse's knee, among the small bones; it grows out of a gummy substance which fastens those bones together.

Farrier's Dict.

O'SSEOUS.* adj. [osseus, Latin.] Bony; resembling a bone.

To pursue the osseous and solid part of goodness, which gives stability and rectitude to all the rest. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 4.

A medullary, and consequently osseous, substance. Biblioth. Bibl. i. 157.

O'SSICLE. n. s. [ossiculum, Latin.] A small bone.

There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whose right constitution depends the due tension of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muscle, which serves to draw one of these ossicles, fix to the tympanum, be lost or abated, the tension of that membrane ceasing, sound is hindered from coming into the ear.

Holder on Speech.

OSSI'FICK. adj. [ossa and facio, Latin.] Having the power of making bones, or changing carnesous or membranous to bony substance.

If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its ossifick faculty, to thrust out callus, and make separation of its caries. Wiseman.

OSSIFA'TION. n. s. [from ossify.] Change of carnesous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.

Ossifications or indurations of the artery, appear so constantly in the beginnings of aneurisms, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them. Sharp.

O'SSIFRAGE.† n. s. [ossifraga, Latin; ossifrague, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The ossifraga, or ospray, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in churchyards, and eat what it finds in bones, which has been the occasion that the Latins call it avis bustaria. Calmet. See, however, OSPRAY.

Among the fowls shall not be eaten the eagle, the ossifrage, and the ospray. Lev. xi. 13.

TO O'SSIFY. v. a. [ossa and facio.] To change to bone.

The dilated aorta every where in the neighbourhood of the cyst is generally ossified.

Sharp, Surgery.

OSSI'VOROUS. adj. [ossa and voro.] Devouring bones.

The bore of the gullet is not in all creatures alike answerable to the body or stomach: as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and swallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other ossivorous quadrupeds, it is very large.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

O'SSUARY.† n. s. [ossuarium, Latin.] A charnel house; a place where the bones of dead people are kept.

Notable lamps, with vessels of oils and aromatic liquors, attended noble ossuaries.

Sir T. Brown on Urn-Burial, (1686.)

OST.† n. s. A kiln, where hops or malt OUST.† are dried. See OAST.

OSTE'NSIBLE.† adj. [ostendo, Latin.]

1. That is proper or intended to be shewn.

I take this opportunity of expressing my surprise, that this ostensible comment of the dumb shew should not regularly appear in the tragedies of Shakespeare. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 361.

2. Colourable; plausible.

He had, as dictator, an ostensible right to the custody and command of this; and under pretext of this ostensible, he by force of arms seized it.

Fownall on Antiq. p. 114.

OSTE'NSIVE. adj. [ostentif, Fr. ostendo, Latin.] Showing; betokening.

OSTENT. n. s. [ostentum, Latin.]

1. Appearance; air; manner; mien.

Use all the observance of civility,

Like one well studied in a sad ostent,

To please his grandam. Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.

2. Show; token. These senses are peculiar to Shakespeare.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there. Shaksp.

3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.

To stirre our zeales up, that admir'd, whereof a fact so cleane

Of all ill as our sacrifice, so fearfull an ostent
Should be the issue. Chapman.

Latinus, frighted with this dire ostent,
For counsel to his father Faunus went;
And sought the shades renown'd for prophecy,
Which near Albunia's sulphurous fountain lie.

Dryden.

- To OSTE'NTATE.* v. a. [ostento, Lat.]
To make an ambitious display of; to display boastingly.

It cannot avoid the brand of arrogance, as well as hypocrisy, to challenge and ostentate that beauty or handiness of complexion as ours, which indeed is none of ours by any genuine right or property.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 96.
Who is so open-hearted and simple, but they either conceal their defects, or ostentate their sufficiencies, short or beyond what either of them really are? Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 169.

So far I must needs ostentate my reading, as to assure you, that I have viewed with my own eyes, and transcribed from all the originals, whatever I have set down. Fleetwood, Chron. Preciosum. Pref.

- OSTENTA'TION. n. s. [ostentation, Fr. ostentatio, Lat.]

1. Outward show; appearance.

If these shows be not outward, which of you
But is four Volscians? —
— March on, my fellows;
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. Shakespeare, Coriol.

You are come

A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love. Shakespeare.

2. Ambitious display; boast; vain show.
This is the usual sense.

If all these secret springs of detraction fail, yet a vain ostentation of wit sets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him. Addison, Spect.

He knew that good and bountiful minds were sometimes inclined to ostentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, says he, that you do not your alms before men, to be seen. Atturbury.

With all her lustre, now, her lover warms;
Then out of ostentation, hides her charms. Young.
The great end of the art is to strike the imagination. The painter is therefore to make no ostentation of the means by which this is done; the spectator is only to feel the result in his bosom.

Reynolds.

3. A show; a spectacle. Not in use.

The king would have me present the princes with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, antick, or firework. Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

- OSTENTA'TIOUS. adj. [ostento, Lat.] Boastful; vain; fond of show; fond to expose to view.

Your modesty is so far from being ostentatious of the good you do, that it blushes even to have it known; and therefore I must leave you to the satisfaction of your own conscience, which, though a silent panegyric, is yet the best. Dryden.

They let Ulysses into his disposition, and he seems to be ignorant, credulous, and ostentatious.

Broome on the Odyssey.

- OSTENTA'TIOUSLY. adv. [from ostentatious.] Vainly; boastfully.

- OSTENTA'TIOUSNESS. n. s. [from ostentatious.] Vanity; boastfulness.

- OSTENTA'TOR.† n. s. [ostentateur, Fr. ostento, Lat.] A boaster; a vain setter to show. Sherwood.

- OSTENTA'TOUS.* adj. [from ostento, Lat. See OSTENT.] Fond of show; fond to expose to view.

Sometimes we ought to be thankful for an enemy. He gives us occasion to shew the world our parts and piety, which else, perhaps, in our dark graves would sleep and moulder with us quite unknown; or could not otherwise well be seen without the vanity of a light and an ostentuous mind.

Feltham, Res. ii. 53.

Such rude and imperfect draughts being far better in their esteem, than such as are adorned with more pomp, and ostentuous circumstances.

Evelyn, Pomon. Pref.

- OSTE'COLLA. n. s. [ὄστέον and κόλλα; osteocolle, Fr.] Osteocolle is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones.

Hill, Mat. Med.

Osteocolle is a spar, generally coarse, concreted with earthy or stony matter, precipitated by water, and encrusted upon sticks, stones, and other like bodies. Woodward.

- OSTEO'COPE. n. s. [ὄστέον and κόπιον; osteocope, French.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompass them. Dict.

- OSTEO'LOGER.* n. s. [from osteology.] A descriptor of the bones.

Osteologers have very well observed, that the parts pertaining to the bones, which stand out at a distance from the bodies, are either the adnate or the enate parts. Smith on Old Age, p. 176.

- OSTEO'LOGY. n. s. [ὄστέον and λόγος; osteologie, Fr.] A description of the bones.

Richard Farlow, well known for his acuteness in dissection of dead bodies, and his great skill in osteology, has now laid by that practice. Tadler.

- O'STIARY.† n. s. [ostium, Lat.]

1. The opening at which a river disembogues itself.

It is received that the Nilus hath seven estuari-es, that is by seven channels disburtheneth itself into the sea. Brown.

2. Formerly an ecclesiastical officer. [ostiarius, Lat. from ostium.]

The office of the ostiar was to open and shut the church doors, to look to the decent keeping of the church, and the holy ornaments laid up in the vestry. Weever.

- O'STLER. n. s. [hostelier, Fr.] The man who takes care of horses at an inn.

The smith, the ostler, and the boot-catcher, ought to partake. Swift, Direct. to the Grooms.

- O'STLERY. n. s. [hostellerie, French.] The place belonging to the ostler.

- O'STMEN.* n. s. pl. [from eastmen, as coming from a country east of Ireland, Ostmanni, low Latin. V. Du Cange.]
Danish settlers in Ireland.

Anlave was chief of the *Ostm*en in that island, and siled king of Dublin. Id. Ignition.

- O'STRACISM. n. s. [ὀστρακισμός; ostracisme, Fr.] A manner of passing sentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a shell which the voter threw into a vessel.
Banishment; public censur.

Virtue in courtiers' hearts
Suffers an ostracism, and departs;
Profit, ease, fitness, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.

Public envy is as an ostracism, that eclipseth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bribe to keep them within bounds. Bacon, Ess.
Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use.

Cleveland.

This man, upon a slight and false accusation of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever. Swift.

- O'STRACITES. n. s. Ostracites expresses the common oyster in its fossil state.

Hill, Mat. Med.

- To O'STRACIZE.* v. a. [from ostracism.]

To banish; to expel.
Therefore the democratic stars did rise,
And all that worth from hence did ostracise.

And. Marvel, Lachrym. Mus. (1650.)

- O'STRICH. n. s. [autruche, French; struthio,
Latin.] Ostrich is ranged among birds.

It is very large, its wings very short,
and the neck about four or five spans.
The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are stained of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them. Calmet.
I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakespeare.

Garvest thou the goodly wings unto the peac-cock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich?

Job, xxxix. 13.

The Scots knights errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat. Cleveland.

Modern ostriches are dwindled to meek larks,
in comparison with those of the ancients. Arbutnot.

- OTACOU'STICK.† n. s. [ὠτα and αἰσῶν;
otacousticon, f. otacoustique, French.]

An instrument to facilitate hearing.
Not vouchsafing to see or hear any thing but by perspectives and otacousticks.

Hammond, Works, iv. 993.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacoustick, is so directed backward, as to receive the smallest and most distant sound that comes behind her. Grew, Cosmol.

Using some otacousticon, and placing the mouth of it towards the sound. Smith on Old Age, p. 146.

- O'THER.† pron. [anther, Goth. oðer, Sax.
othar, Alem. autre, French; ετερος, ατερος, Greek.]

1. Not the same; not this; different. In this sense it seems an adjective, yet in the plural, when the substantive is suppressed, it has, contrarily to the nature of adjectives, a plural termination: as,
of last week three days were fair, the others rainy.

Of good actions some are better than other some. Hook.

— Will it not be received

That they have done't? —

— Who dares receive it other? Shaksp. K. Lear.

The dismayed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches, with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress. Knolles.

He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition, and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government. Locke.

No leases shall ever be made other than leases for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder. Swift.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else: in this sense it is a substantive, and has a genitive and plural.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels and this other's house. Shakspeare.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient. Bacon.

The confusion arises, when the one will put their sickle into the other's harvest. Leslie.

Never allow yourselves to be idle, whilst others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them. Law.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel,
And all was done — let others judge how well. Daniel.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other. South.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil. ii. 3.
Scotland and thou did each in other live,
Nor would'st thou her, nor could she thee survive. Dryden.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can. Locke on Education.

6. The next.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first;
A third is like the former. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

7. The third part.

Bind my hair up as 'twas yesterday?
No, nor the o'ther day. B. Jonson.
8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single sights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insolent. Glanville.

O'THERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If sir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

O'THERGUISE.† adj. [other and guise.] This is often pronounced and sometimes written otherguess.] Of another kind. It is a common expression in several parts of England; and in Cheshire forms part of the following proverb: "I have otherguess fish to fry than snigs [eels] without butter:" i.e. my time is better employed, I have something better to do than what you propose.

O'THERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves. Hooker.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce,
And former sufferings, otherwhere are found. Milton.

O'THERWHILE.† } adv. [other and while.]
O'THERWHILES. } At other times.

Some adventures shall follow; and otherwhiles, now one discommodity, now another shall appear. Homilies, Serm. on Matrimony.

Sometimes he shaves, — otherwhiles he cauterizes, he scarifies, lets blood. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

Sometimes he was taken forth — to be set in the pillory, otherwhile in the stocks. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 93.

O'THERWISE. adv. [other and wise.]

1. In a different manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God reveleth, as necessary for all Christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth. Hooker.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all. Hooker.

The evidences for such things are not so infallible, but that there is a possibility, that the things may be otherwise. Wilkins.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise. Sprat.

Thy father was a worthy prince,
And merited, alas! a better fate;
But heaven thought otherwise. Addison, Cato.

2. By other causes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisbon, and returned with the loss, by sickness and otherwise, of eight thousand men. Raleigh.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society. Hooker.
Men seldom consider God any otherwise than in relation to themselves, and therefore want some extraordinary motives to excite their attention and engage their love. Rogers.

O'TTER. n. s. [otep, Saxon; lutra, Latin.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the bevir; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canin; and in his tail, which is felin, or a long taper: so that he may not be unfitly called putoreus aquaticus, or the water pole-cat. He makes himself burrows on the water side, as a bevir; is sometimes tamed and taught, by nimbly surrounding the fishes, to drive them into the net. Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay. Addison, Spect.

Would you preserve a numerous finny race?
Let your fierce dogs the ravenous otter chase;
The amphibious monster ranges all the shores,
Darts through the waves, and every haunt explores. Gay.

O'VAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, an egg.] Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards. Addison on Italy.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun,
Does in an oval orbit, circling run;
But rarely is the object of our sight,
In solar glory sunk. Blackmore.

O'VAL. n. s.

A triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg. Watts, Logick.

OVA'RIOUS. adj. [from ovum.] Consisting of eggs.

He to the rocks
Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food. Thomson.

O'VARY. n. s. [ovaire, Fr. ovarium, Lat.] The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and inverted. Brown, Vulg. Err.

O'VATE.* adj. [ovatus, Lat.] Of an oval figure; marked ovally.

Two rows on each side of the belly consist of larger scales, ovate and imbricate. Russell, Acc. of Indian Serpents, p. 7.

OVA'TION.† n. s. [ovation, Fr. ovatio, Lat.] A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much bloodshed, or defeated some less formidable enemy. Dicit.

His ovation being the prime of his strength; his noise and report of his victories being the only means to persuade the reader that he hath obtained them. Hammond, Works, ii. 167.

Ovation was allow'd
For conquest purchas'd without blood. Hudibras, ii. ii.

Rest not in an ovation, but a triumph over thy passions. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 2.

O'UBAT. } n. s. [eruca pilosa.] A sort O'UBUST. } of caterpillar; an insect. Dicit.

OUCH.† n. s. [musca, nuca, low Latin, fibula; whence perhaps nouch, or nouch, and so ouch. Tyrrwhitt.] An ornament of gold or jewels; a carcanet; the collet in which precious stones are set. Dr. Johnson has cited an example from Bacon, in which the word is oes, not ouches. See O.

A Persian mitre on her head
She wore, with crowns and ouches garnished. Spenser, F. Q. i. li. 13.
Thou shalt make them to be set in ouches of gold. Ezod. xxviii, 11.

OUCH of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tusk. Ainsworth.

O'VEN.† n. s. [aufn, Goth. ofn, Icel. open, Sax. "Aphat (Heb.) signifieth to bake, and to seethe, and to dress meat: oven seemeth to be derived of this word." Leigh, Crit. Sacra, 1650, p. 15.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

Here's yet in the world hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking. Shakspeare.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing. Bacon.

O'VER hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situations of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon ope, a brink or bank; but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of nether, then over is from the Gothic ufar, above. Gibson's Camden.

O'VER. prep. [ufar, Gothic; ope, Sax.] 1. Above; with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, o'er other some can be!
Through Athens I am thought as fair as she.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous o'er the rest;
Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest.

High, over all, was your great conduct shown,
You sought our safety, but forgot your own.

The commentary which attends this poem will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures. Pope.

It will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by shewing the advantages which the Christian world has over the heathen. Swift.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority. Opposed to under.

The church has over her bishops, able to silence the factious, no less by their preaching than by their authority. South.

Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people. Dryden.

3. Above in place. Opposed to below.
He was more than over shoes in love. Shakespeare.
The street should see as she walked over head. Shakespeare.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care;
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.

4. Across; from side to side: as, he leaped over the brook.

Come o'er the brook, Bessy, to me,
She dares not come over to thee. Shakespeare.
Certain lakes and pits, such as that of Avennes, poison birds which fly over them. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The geese fly o'er the barn, the bees in arms
Drive headlong from their waxen cells in swarms. Dryden.

5. Through, diffusively.
All the world over, those that received not the commands of Christ, and his doctrines of purity and perseverance, were signally destroyed. Hammond.

6. Upon.
Wise governors have as great a watch over flames, as they have of the actions and designs. Bacon.

Angelick quires
Sung heavenly anthems of his victory
Over temptation and the tempter proud. Milton, P. R.

7. Before. This is only used in over night.
On their intended journey to proceed,
And over night whatso thereto did need. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

8. It is in all senses written by contraction o'er.

O'VER. adv.
1. Above the top.
Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give. St. Luke, vi. 38.

2. More than a quantity assigned.

Even here likewise the laws of nature and reason be of necessary use; yet somewhat over and besides them is necessary, namely human and positive law. Hooker.

When they had met it, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. Ex. xvi. 18.

The ordinary soldiers having all their pay, and a month's pay over, were sent into their countries. Hayward.

The eastern people determined their digit by the breadth of barley-corns, six making a digit, and twenty-four a hand's breadth: a small matter over or under. Arbutnot.

3. From side to side.

The fan of an Indian king, made of the feathers of a peacock's tail, composed into a round form, bound altogether with a circular rim, above a foot over. Grew.

4. From one to another.

This golden cluster the herald delivereth to the Tirsan, who delivereth it over to that son that he had chosen. Bacon.

5. From a country beyond the sea.

It hath a white berry, but is not brought over with the coral. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
They brought new customs and new vices o'er;
Taught us more arts than honest men require. Philips.

6. On the surface.

The first came out red all over, like an hairy garment. Genesis.

7. Past. This is rather the sense of an adjective.

Soliman pausing upon the matter, the heat of his fury being something over, suffered himself to be intreated. Knolles.

Meditate upon the effects of anger; and the best time to do this, is to look back upon anger when the fit is over. Bacon.

What the garden choicest bears
To sit and taste, till this meridian heat
Be over, and the sun more cool decline. Milton.
The act of stealing was soon over, and cannot be undone, and for it the sinner is only answerable to God or his viceregent.

Ep. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
He will, as soon as his first sunrise is over, begin to wonder how such a favour came to be bestowed on him. Atterbury.

There youths and nymphs in consort gay,
Shall hail the rising, close the parting day;
With me, alas! with me those joys are o'er,
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.

8. Throughout; completely.

Well,
Have you read o'er the letters I sent you? Shakespeare.

Let them argue over all the topics of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea! South, Serm.

9. With repetition; another time.

He o'er and o'er divides him,
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness. Shakespeare.
Sitting or standing still confin'd to roar,
In the same verse, the same rules o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Longing they look, and gaping at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight. Dryden.

Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone,
My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:
O kill not all my kindred o'er again,
Nor tempt the dangers of the dusty plain;
But in this tower, for our defence, remain. Dryden.
When children forget, or do an action awkwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect. Locke.

If this miracle of Christ's rising from the dead be not sufficient to convince a resolved libertine, neither would the rising of one now from the dead be sufficient for that purpose; since it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already. Atterbury.

The most learned will never find occasion to act over again what is fabled of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eastern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer. Watts.

He cramm'd his pockets with the precious store,
And every night review'd it o'er and o'er. Harte.

10. Extraordinary; in a great degree.
The word symbol should not seem to be over difficult. Baker.

11. OVER and above. Besides; beyond what was first supposed or immediately intended.

Moses took the redemption money of them that were over and above. Numb. iii. 49.

He gathered a great mass of treasure, and gained over and above the good will and esteem of all people wherever he came. L'Esrange.

12. OVER against. Opposite; regarding in front.

In Ticinum is a church with windows only from above. It reporteth the voice thirteen times, if you stand by the close end of the wall, over against the door. Bacon.

I visit his picture, and place myself over against it whole hours together. Addison, Spect.

Over against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker. Addison on Italy.

13. To give over. To cease from.
These when they praise, the world believes no more,
Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

14. To give over. To attempt to help no longer; as, his physicians have given him over; his friends, who advised him, have given him over.

15. In composition it has a great variety of significations; it is arbitrarily prefixed to nouns, adjectives, or other parts of speech in a sense equivalent to more than enough; too much.

Devilish Macbeth,
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power: and modest wisdom plucks me
From overcredulous haste. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw a satyr; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or overboldly affirm. Peacham.

These overbusy spirits, whose labour is their only reward, hunt a shadow and chase the wind.

If the ferment of the breast be vigorous, an overfermentation in the part produceth a phlegmon. Wiseman.

A gangrene doth arise in phlegmons, through the unseasonable application of overcold medicaments. Wiseman.

Poets, like lovers, should be bold and dare,
They spoil their business with an overcare:
And he who servilely creeps after sense,
Is safe, but ne'er will reach an excellence. Dryden.

Wretched man o'erfeeds
His cramm'd desires with more than nature needs. Dryden.

Bending o'er the cup, the tears she shed,
Seem'd by the posture to discharge her head,
O'erfill'd before. Dryden.

As they are likely to overflourish their own case, their flattery is hardest to be discovered: for who would imagine himself guilty of putting tricks upon himself? Collier.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein, to check our overconfidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our shortsightedness.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others overdiligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another, of cases and genders.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an overfondness of that darling invention, cashier all other arguments.

A grown person surfeiting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach: had this happened to him by an overdose of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the antipathy counted natural.

Take care you overturn not the turf; it is only to be burnt so as may make it break.

Don't overfatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby nauseate and grow tired of a particular subject.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas; one idea effaces another. An overgreedy grasp does not retain the largest handful.

O'VER.* adj. Upper. So overleather is upper leather. See OVERLEATHER.

Her over lippe wiped she so clement,
That in her cuppe was no fething sene
Of grease, when she drunken had her draught.

For these my hands from this my face shall rip,
Even with this knife, my nose and over lip.

To O'VER.* v. a. To get over; to get through: an elliptical expression in the north: as, I am afraid he'll not over it, i. e. will not recover from his illness.

To OVERABO'UND. v. n. [over and abound.]
To abound more than enough.

Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound.

The learned, never overabounding in transitory coin, should not be overdone.

To O'VER'CT. v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

Princes courts may overact their reverence, and make themselves laughed at for their foolishness and extravagant relative worship.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety, by overacting some things in religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned.

He overacted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed.

To OVERA'CT.* v. n. To act more than is requisite.

You overact, when you should underdo:
A little call yourself again, and think.
There while they acted and overacted, among other young scholars, I was a spectator; they thought themselves gallant men, and I thought them fools; they made sport, and I laughed.

To OVERA'GITATE.* v. a. [over and agitate.] To discuss or controvert too much.

What is fit to be determined in a business so overagitated, I shall shut up in these propositions.

To OVERA'RCH. v. a. [over and arch.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'erarching shades and pendant woods.

To OVERA'WE. v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by superiour influence.

The king was present in person to overlook the magistrates, and to overawe these subjects with the terror of his sword.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, overaw'd
His malice.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and sounding in your ears the empty title which inspired you with presumption, and overawed my daughter to comply.

A thousand fears
Still overawe when she appears.

To OVERBA'LANCE. v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancing of any factions.

The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherein we overbalance them in trade, must be paid us in money.

When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to overbalance them? Rogers.

OVERBA'LANCE. n. s. [over and balance.]
Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the return, encrease the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty overbalance of our exported to our imported commodities.

The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the overbalance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief.

OVERBA'TTLE.* adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trust. Dr. Johnson.—The explanation and etymology may be referred to the verb battel, and to the adjective battel; which see, in the present dictionary.]
Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in overbattel grounds; the fertile disposition whereof is good, yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly, through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth.

To OVERBEAR. v. a. [over and bear.] To repress; to subdue; to whelm; to bear down.

What more savage than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to overbear the laws?

My desire
All continent impediments would overbear,
That did oppose my will.
The ocean over-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erbears your officers.

Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To overbear.
Glo'ster, thou shalt well perceive,
That not in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be overborne by thee.

The Turkish commanders, with all their forces, assailed the city, thrusting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have discouraged or overborn the Christians.

The point of reputation, when news first came of the battle lost, did overbear the reason of war.

Yet fortune, valour, all is overborn,
By numbers; as the long resisting bank
By the impetuous torrent.

A body may as well be overborn by the violence of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulf of smooth water.

Crowding on the last the first impel;
Till overborn with weight the Cyprians fell.

The judgement, if swayed by the overbearing of passion, and stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or overbearing multitude of documents at one time.

The horror or loathsomeness of an object may overbear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty.

To OVERBEND.* v. a. [over and bend.]
To stretch too intensely.

Consumptions, upon intemperances and licentiousness; madness, upon misplacing or overbending our natural faculties; proceed from ourselves.

To OVERBID. v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have o'erbid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too.

To OVERBLOW. v. n. [over and blow.] To be past its violence.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustering storm is overblown.

All those tempests being overblown, there long after arose a new storm which overrun all Spain.

This ague fit of fear is overblown,
An easy task it is to win our own.

To OVERBLOW. v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.
Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what she was here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's overblown,
Through the wide world we'll make her graces known.

O'VERBOARD. adv. [over and board.] See BOARD.] Off the ship; out of the ship.
The great assembly met again; and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown overboard, there were hopes a calm should ensue.

A merchant having a vessel richly freighted at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading overboard.

The trembling dotard to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and overboard he threw;
This done, he seized the helm.

He obtained liberty to give them only one song before he leaped overboard, which he did, and then plunged into the sea.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superiour force in a sea engagement, the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships overboard.

To OVERBROW.* v. a. [over and brow.]
To hang over.

Strange shades o'erbrow the vallies deep.

OVERBUILT.* part. adj. [over and build.]
Built over.

On either side
Disparted Chaos overbuilt exclaim'd.

To OVERBULK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be crot,
Or shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To overbulk us all. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

To OVERBURTHEN. v. a. [over and burthen.] To load with too great weight.

If she were not cloyed with his company, and that she thought not the earth overburthened with him, she would cool his fiery grief. Sidney.

To OVERBUY.† v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He overbought it upon the false pretence of an appendant commodity.

Ep. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. i. C. 5.
He, when want requires, is only wise,
Who slights not foreign aids, nor overbuys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies. Dryden.

To OVERCANOPY.† v. a. [over and canopy.] To cover as with a canopy.

A bank —
Quite overcanopied with luscious woodbine. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.
Where'er the rude and moss-grown beech
O'ercanopies the glade. Gray.

To OVERCARRY. v. a. [over and carry.] To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was less easy to be overcarried by ambition. Hayward.

To OVERCAST. v. a. part. overcast. [over and cast.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they past,
The day with clouds was sudden overcast. Spenser.
Hie, Robin, overcast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron.

Our days of age are sad and overcast, in which we find that of all our vain passions, and affections past, the sorrow only abideth. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

I of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in so serene a mansion find,
To overcast her over shining mind. Waller.

Those clouds that overcast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky. Dryden.

The dawn is overcast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

2. To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is encircled with a thread, overcast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it overcasteth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moss overcast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast. Spenser.

3. To rate too high in computation.
The king in his account of peace and calms, did much overcast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To OVERCHARGE. v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppress; to cloy; to surcharge.

On air we feed in every instant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and overcharge nature, maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much overcharges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment. Collier.

2. To load; to crowd too much.
Our language is overcharged with consonants. Pope.

3. To burthen.
He whispers to his pillow,
The secrets of his overcharged soul. Shakespeare.

4. To rate too high.
Here's Glo'ster, a foe to citizens,
O'charging your free purses with large fines. Shakespeare.

5. To fill too full.
Her heart is but o'ercharg'd; she will recover. Shakespeare.

The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupefy the brain of a man overcharged with it. South.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory overcharged to little purpose. Locke.

The action of the Iliad and Æneid, in themselves exceeding short, are so beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without overcharging it. Addison, Spect.

6. To load with too great a charge.
They were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks. Shakespeare.

Who in deep mines for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'ercharg'd, breaks, misses, or recoils. Denham.

To OVERCLIMB.† v. a. [over and climb.] To climb over.

The fatal gin thus overclimbe our walls,
Stuft with arm'd men.

Ld. Surrey, Tr. of Virg. Æn. 4.

The childhood of the cheerful morn
Is almost grown a youth, and overclimbs
Yonder gilt eastern hills. Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

To OVERCLOUD.† v. a. [over and cloud.] To cover with clouds.

The labour of wicked men is to turn blessing itself into a curse, to overcloud joy with sorrow at least, if not desolation. Abp. Laud, Serm. p. 84.

The silver empress of the night,
O'erclouded, glimmers in a fainter light. Tickell.

To OVERCLOY. v. a. [over and cloy.] To fill beyond satiety.

A scum of Britons and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'erclay'd country vomits forth
To desperate adventures and destruction. Shaksp.

To OVERCOME. v. a. pret. I overcame; part. pass. overcome; anciently overcomen, as in Spenser. [overcomen, Dutch.]

1. To subdue; to conquer; to vanquish.
They, overcomen, were deprived
Of their proud beauty, and the one moiety
Transform'd to fish, for their bold surquedry. Spenser.

This wretched woman, overcome
Of anguish, rather than of crime, hath been. Spenser.

Of whom a man is overcome, of the same is be brought in bondage. 2 Pet. ii. 19.

Fire by thicker air o'ercome,
And downward forc'd in earth's capacious womb,
Alters its particles; is fire no more. Prior.

2. To surmount.
Miranda is a constant relief to poor people in their misfortunes and accidents; there are sometimes little misfortunes that happen to them, which of themselves they could never be able to overcome. Law.

3. To overflow; to surcharge.

The unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores. Philips.
4. To come over or upon; to invade suddenly. Not in use.

Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
To OVERCOME. v. n. To gain the superiority.

That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings,
and mightest overcome when thou art judged. Rom. iii. 4.

OVERCOMER.† n. s. [from the verb.] He who overcomes.

Great rewards and rich gifts were appointed for the overcomers.

Powell, Hist. of Wales, (1584), p. 237.
OVERCOMINGLY.† adv. [from the part. overcoming.] With superiority; in the manner of a conquerour.

That they should so boldly and overcomingly dictate to him such things as are not fit.

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653), p. 73.

To OVERCOUNT. v. a. [over and count.] To rate above the true value.

Thou know'st how much

We do o'ercount thee. Shakespeare, Ant. & Cleop.

To OVERCOVER. v. a. [over and cover.] To cover completely.

Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
O'ercover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks and yellow chapsless skulls. Shakespeare.

To OVERCROW.† v. a. [over and crow.] To crow as in triumph. Spenser has also written overcraw, for the sake of the rhyme.

So spake this bold breure with great disdain:
Little him answer'd the oak again,
But yielded, with shame and grief adawed,
That of a weed he was overcraued.

A base varlet, that being but of late grown out of the dunghill, beginneth now to overcrow so high mountains, and make himself the great protector of all outlaws. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

Shall I, the embassadress of gods and men, —
Be overcrow'd, and breathe without revenge? Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

To OVERDATE.† v. a. [over and date.] To reckon or date beyond the proper period.

Had he redeemed his overdated minority from a pupillage under bishops, he would much less have mistrusted his parliament. Milton, Eiconoclast. ch. 11.

OVERDIGHT.† part. adj. [over and dight.] Covered over.

Day discover'd heaven's face
To sinful men with darkness overdight. Spenser, F. Q.

To OVERDO. v. a. [over and do.] To do more than enough.

Anything so overdone is from the purpose of playing; whose end is to hold the mirror up to nature.

When the meat is overdone, lay the fault upon your lady who hurried you. Swift.

To OVERDO.† v. n. To do too much.

Nature — much oftener overdoes than underdoes: — you shall find twenty eggs with two yolks for one that has none. Greuv.

To OVERDRESS. v. a. [over and dress.] To adorn lavishly.

In all, let nature never be forgot;
But treat the goddess like a modest fair,
Nor overdress, nor leave her wholly bare. Pope.

To OVERDRINK.* v. n. [over and drink: this is a Saxon compound, open-bīncan.] To drink too much; to become drunk.

To OVERDRIVE.* v. a. [over and drive.] To drive too hard, or beyond strength.

The flocks and herds with young if men should overdrive one day, all will die. Gen. xxxiii. 19.

To OVERDRY.* v. a. [over and dry.] To dry too much.

Meats condite, powdered, and overdried.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 70.

OVEREAGER.* adj. [over and eager.] Too vehement in desire.

I have seen sad examples of extravagance in the more modest and private, but overeager pursuits of these recreations, [games of chance].

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

OVEREAGERLY.* adv. [from overeager.] With too much haste or vehemence.

Pursuing them overeagerly into York.

Milton, Hist. of Engl. B. 5.

To OVEREYE.* v. a. [over and eye.]

1. To superintend.

My love hath lasted from mine infancy, And still increased, as I grew myself: When did Perseda pastime in the streets, But her Erastus overey'd her sports? When didst thou, with thy sampler, in the sun, Sit sewing with thy feres, but I was by, Marking thy lily hand's dexterity?

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

2. To observe; to remark.

I am doubtful of your modesties, Lest overeying of his odd behaviour, You break into some merry passion. Shakespeare.

To OVEREMPTY.* v. a. [over and empty.] To make too empty.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in new-fangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter, which might overempty their husbands' purses. Carew.

OVERFAL.* n. s. [over and fall.] Cataract. Tostatus addeth, that those which dwell near those falls of water, are deaf from their infancy, like those that dwell near the overfalls of Nilus.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

To OVERFLOW.* v. a. [over and float.] To cover as with water.

The town is fill'd with slaughter, and o'erfloats, With a red deluge, their increasing moats. Dryd.

To OVERFLOW.* v. n. [over and flow.] 1. To be fuller than the brim can hold.

While our strong walls secure us from the foe, Ere yet with blood our ditches overflow. Dryden.

Had I the same consciousness that I saw Noah's flood, as that I saw the overflowing of the Thames last winter, I could not doubt, that I who saw the Thames overflowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the same self. Locke.

2. To exuberate; to abound.

A very ungrateful return to the Author of all we enjoy, but such as an overflowing plenty too much inclines men to make. Rogers.

To OVERFLOW.* v. a. The participle overflowing is, among the examples, used, we see, by such excellent writers as Swift and Bentley; yet flow is not the participle of flow, but of fly.

1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppose thyself in as great a sadness as ever did lad thy spirit, wouldest thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert sure that some excellent fortune would relieve and recompense thee so as to overflow all thy hopes? Bp. Taylor.

New milk that all the winter never fails, And all the summer overflows the pails. Dryden.

2. To deluge; to drown; to overrun; to overpower.

The Scythians, at such time as the northern nations overflowed all Christendom, came down to the sea-coast. Spenser.

Clanius overflow'd th' unhappy coast. Dryden. Do not the Nile and the Niger make yearly inundations in our days, as they have formerly done? and are not the countries so overflown, still situate between the tropicks? Bentley.

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was overflowed and destroyed in a deluge of water that overspread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west. Burnet.

Thus oft by mariners are shewn, Earl Godwin's castles overflown. Swift.

OVERFLOW.* n. s. Inundation; more than fulness; such a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

Did he break out into tears? —

In great measure. —

— A kind overflow of kindness. Shakespeare.

Where there are great overflows in fens, the drowning of them in winter maketh the summer following more fruitful; for that it keepeth the ground warm. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It requires pains to find the coherence of abstruse writings: so that it is not to be wondered, that St. Paul's epistles have, with many, passed for disjointed pious discourses, full of warmth and zeal and overflows of light, rather than for calm, strong, coherent reasonings all through. Locke.

After every overflow of the Nile there was not always a mensuration. Arbutnot on Coins.

The expression may be ascribed to an overflow of gratitude in the general disposition of Ulysses. Broomer.

OVERFLOWING.* n. s. [from overflow.] Exuberance; copiousness.

When men are young, they might vent the overflowings of their fancy that way. Denham, Dedic.

When the overflowings of ungodliness make us afraid, the ministers of religion cannot better discharge their duty of opposing it. Rogers.

OVERFLOWINGLY.* adv. [from overflowing.] Exuberantly; in great abundance: A word not elegant nor in use.

Nor was it his indigence that forced him to make the world; but his goodness pressed him to impart the goods which he so overflowingly abounds with. Boyle.

To OVERFLY.* v. a. [over and fly.] To cross by flight.

A sailing kite Can scarce o'erfly them in a day and night. Dryden.

OVERFORWARDNESS.* n. s. [over and forwardness.] Too great quickness; too great readiness.

By an overforwardness in courts to give countenance to frivolous exceptions, though they make nothing to the true merit of the cause, it often happens that causes are not determined according to their merits. Hale.

To OVERFREIGHT.* v. a. pret. overfreighted, part. overfraught. [over and freight.] To load too heavily; to fill with too great quantity.

A boat overfreighted with people, in rowing down the river, was, by the extreme weather, sunk. Carew.

Grief, that does not speak, Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break. Shakespeare.

Sorrow has so o'erfraught This sinking barque, I shall not live to shew How I abhor my first rash crime. Denham.

OVERFRUITFUL.* adj. [over and fruitful.] Too rich; too luxuriant.

Rhyme bounds and circumscribes an overfruitful fancy. Dryden, Ess. on Dram. Poesy.

To OVERGET.* v. a. [over and get.] To reach; to come up with.

With six hours' hard riding, through so wild places, as it was rather the cunning of my horse sometimes, than of myself, so rightly to hit the way, I overgot them a little before night. Sidney.

To OVERGILD.* v. a. [over and gild.] To gild over; to varnish.

Gold doth men's thoughts to high attempts prepare,

And overgilds the danger of the warre.

Mir. for Mag. p. 640.

That head doth see

Wrong fairly to o'er-gild.

More, Life of the Soul, ii. 27.

To OVERGIRD.* v. a. [over and gird.] To bind too closely.

When the gentle west winds shall open the fruitful bosom of the earth, thus overgirded by your imprisonment, then the flowers put forth and spring; and then the sun shall scatter the mists, and the manuring hand of the tiller shall root up all that burdens the soil, without thank to your bondage. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. i.

To OVERGLANCE.* v. a. [over and glance.] To look hastily over.

I have, but with a cursory eye, O'er-glanc'd the articles. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

To OVERGO.* v. a. [over and go.]

1. To surpass; to excel.

Thinking it beyond the degree of humanity to have a wit so far overgoing his age, and such dreadful terror proceed from so excellent beauty. Sidney.

Great nature hath laid down at last, That mighty birth wherewith so long she went, And overwent the times of ages past, Here to lie in upon our soft content. Daniel.

2. To cover. Obsolete.

All which, my thoughts say, they shall never do, But rather, that the earth shall overgo Some one at least. Chapman.

OVERGONE.* part. adj. Injured; ruined. See the second sense of GONE.

Sad-hearted men, much overgone with care. Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

OVERGRASSED.* adj. [over and grass.] Having too much grass; overgrown with grass.

They bene like foule wagmoires overgrast, That if thy galage once sticketh fast, The more to wind it out thou dost swink, Thou mought aye deeper and deeper sink. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

To OVERGORGE.* v. a. [over and gorge.] To gorge too much.

Art thou grown great, And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd? Shaksp.

OVERGREAT.* adj. [over and great.] Too great.

Though putting the mind unprepared upon an unusual stress ought to be avoided; yet this must not run it, by an overgreat shyness of difficulties, into a lazy sauntering about obvious things. Locke.

To OVERGROW.* v. a. [over and grow.] 1. To cover with growth.

Roof and floor and walls were all of gold, But overgrown with dust and old decay, And hid in darkness that none could behold The hue thereof. Spenser.

The woods and desert caves, With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown, And all their echoes mourn. Milton, Lycidas.

2. To rise above.

If the binds be very strong, and much overgroom the poles, some advise to strike off their heads with a long switch. Mortimer.

To OVERGROW. v. n. To grow beyond the fit or natural size.

One part of his army, with incredible labour, cut a way thorough the thick and overgrown woods, and so came to Solymán.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

A huge overgrown ox was grazing in a meadow. L'Estrange.

Him for a happy man I own,
Whose fortune is not overgrown. Swift.

OVERGROWTH. n. s. [over and growth.] Exuberant growth.

The overgrowth of some complexion,
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason.

Shakespeare.

The fortune in being the first in an invention,
doth cause sometimes a wonderful overgrowth in riches. Bacon.

Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth as inmate guests Too numerous. Milton, P. L.

To OVERHA'LE. v. a. [over and hale.]

1. To spread over.

The welked Phœbus gan avail
His weary wain; and sowed the frosty night
Her mantle black through heaven gan overhale. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To examine over again: as, he overhaled my account.

To OVERHA'NDLE.* v. a. [over and handle.] To mention too often.

You will fall again
Into your idle overhanded theme. Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

To OVERHA'NG. v. a. [over and hang.] To jut over; to impend over.

Lend the eye a terrible aspect,
Let the brow overwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base. Shakspeare.
Hide me, ye forests, in your closest bowers,
Where flows the murmuring brook, inviting dreams,

Where bordering hazel overhangs the streams. Gay.
If you drink tea upon a promontory that overhangs the sea, it is preferable to an assembly. Pope.

To OVERHA'NG. v. n. To jut over.

The rest was craggy cliff, that overhung
Still as it rose, impossible to climb. Milton, P. L.

To OVERHA'RDEN. v. a. [over and harden.] To make too hard.

By laying it in the air, it has acquired such a hardness, that it was brittle like overhardened steel. Boyle.

OVERHA'STILY.* adv. [from overhasty.] In too great a hurry.

Excepting myself and two or three more, that mean not overhastily to marry. Hales, Lett. to Sir D. Carleton, (1618), p. 11.

OVERHA'STINESS.* n. s. [from overhasty.] Precipitation; too much haste.

His reply was, that it was well if the duke's overhastiness did not turn to his disadvantage. Reresby, Mem. p. 129.

OVERHA'STY.* adj. [over and hasty.] Too quick; in too great haste.

Not overhasty to cleanse or purify. Hammond, Works, iv. 505.

To OVERHA'UL.* v. a. [over and haul.]

1. [A sea term.] To unfold or loosen an assemblage of the tackle.

2. To examine over again. See To OVERHALE.

I have this day received your plain letter. — In it you have overhauled the whole affair, which is already before the public with all its circumstances. Louth, Lett. iv. to Warburton, (1765.)

OVERHE'AD. adv. [over and head.] Aloft; in the zenith; above in the ceiling.

Overhead the moon

Sits arbutress, and nearer to the earth
Wheels her pale course. Milton, P. L.
The four stars overhead represent the four children. Addison.

To OVERHE'AR. v. a. [over and hear.] To hear those who do not mean to be heard.

I am invisible,

And I will overhear their conference. Shakespeare.
They had a full sight of the infants at a mask dancing, having overheard two gentlemen who were tending towards that sight, after whom they pressed. Wotton.

That such an enemy we have who seeks
Our ruin, both by these inform'd I learn,
And from the parting angel overheard. Milton, P. L.

They were so loud in their discourse, that a blackberry from the next hedge overheard them. L'Estrange.

The nurse,
Though not the words, the murmurs overheard. Dryden.

The witness, overhearing the word pillory repeated, slunk away privately. Addison.

To OVERHE'AT. v. a. [over and heat.] To heat too much.

Pleas'd with the form and coolness of the place,
And overheated by the morning chase. Addison.
It must be done upon the receipt of the wound, before the patient's spirits be overheated with pain or fever. Wiseman.

To OVERHE'LE.* v. a. [over and hele.] To cover over. See To HELE, and To OVERHALE.

Thy rude voice, that doth so hoarsely blow,
Thy hair, thy beard, thy wings, o'erhel'd with snow. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

To OVERHE'ND. v. a. [over and hend.] To overtake; to reach.

As his fair leman, flying through a brook,
He overhent, nought moved with her piteous look. Spenser, F. Q.

To OVERJOY. v. a. [over and joy.] To transport; to ravish.

He that puts his confidence in God only, is neither overjoyed in any great good things of this life, nor sorrowful for a little thing. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

The bishop, partly astonished and partly overjoyed with these speeches, was struck into a sad silence for a time. Hayward.

This love-sick virgin, overjoy'd to find
The boy alone, still follow'd him behind. Addison.

OVERJOY. n. s. Transport; ecstasy.
The mutual conference that my mind hath had,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms; such as my wit affords,
And overjoy of heart doth minister. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

To OVERLA'BOUR. v. a. [over and labour.] To take too much pains on any thing; to harass with toil.

She without noise will over-see
His children and his family;
And order all things till he come,
Sweaty and overlabour'd home. Dryden.

To OVERLA'DE. v. a. [over and lade.] To overburthen.

Thus to throng and overlade a soul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That shall all that controul,
What is it but to rear

Our passions and our hopes on high,
That thence they may descry
The noblest way how to despair and die? Suckling.

OVERLA'RGE. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be overlarge, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthrifly. Collier.

To OVERLA'SH.* v. n. [over and lash.] To exaggerate. Dr. Johnson calls over-lashingly a mean word, not aware that Barrow had used overlash.

We are not accountable for every hyperbolical flash or flourish occurring in the fathers; it being well known that they, in their encomiastic speeches, as orators are wont, following the heat and gaiety of fancy, do sometimes overlash.

Barrow, on the Pope's Supr. iv. § 2.

OVERLA'SHINGLY. adv. [over and lash.] With exaggeration. A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too overlashingly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two-thirds parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is professed. Brerewood.

To OVERLA'Y. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such,
And some overlayeth the commons too much. Tusser.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being overlaid and oppress, but mercy which saveth from being touched with grievous miseries. Hooker.

When any country is overlaid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to disburthen itself, and lay the load upon others. Raleigh.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. B. Jonson.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or overlaid by the corruption of manners. King Charles.

Our sins have overlaid our hopes. King Charles.
The strong Emetrius came in Arcite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was overlaid. Dryden.

2. To smother with too much or too close covering.

The new-born babes by nurses overlaid. Dryden.

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.
They quickly stifled and overlaid those infant principles of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds. South, Serm.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy;
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'erlays your fire. Dryden.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mass,
And upward shoot. Dryden.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies; though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself. The fire may be covered and overlaid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered. Addison, Spec.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reason, advanced but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

4. To cloud; to overcast.
Phœbus' golden face it did attain,
As when a cloud his beams doth overlay. Spenser.

5. To cover superficially.

By his prescript a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, overlaid with gold. Milton, P. L.

6. To join by something laid over.

Thou us empower'd
To fortify thus far, and overlay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss.
Milton, P. L.

OVERLAY'ING.* n. s. [from overlay.] A superficial covering.

The overlaying of his chapters [was] of silver,
and all the pillars of the court were filled with silver.
Ezod. xxxviii. 17.

TO OVERLEAP. v. a. [over and leap.] To pass by a jump.

A step
On which I must fall down or else o'erleap,
For in my way it lies. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
In vain did Nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land;
If daring ships and men profane
The eternal fens overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

OVERLEATHER. n. s. [over and leather.] The part of the shoe that covers the foot.

I have sometimes more feet than shoes; or such shoes as my toes look through the overleather.
Shakspeare.

TO OVERLEAVEN.* v. a. [over and leaven.] 1. To swell too much.

What then so swells each limb?
Only his clothes have overleaven'd him.
B. Jonson, Epigr. 97.

2. To mix too much with; to corrupt.

Some habit, that too much o'erleavens
The form of plausive manners. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

OVERLIGHT. n. s. [over and light.] Too strong light.

An overlight maketh the eyes dark, insomuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness. Bacon.

TO OVERLIVE. v. a. [over and live.] To live longer than another; to survive; to outlive.

Musidorus, who shewed a mind not to overlive
Pyrocles, prevailed. Sidney.
He concludes in hearty prayers,
That your attempts may overlive the hazard
And fearful meeting of their opposite. Shakspeare.
They overlived that envy, and had their pardons afterwards. Hayward.

TO OVERLIVE. v. n. To live too long.

Why do I overlive?
Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain? Milton, P. L.

OVERLIVER. n. s. [from overlive.] Survivor; that which lives longest.

A peace was concluded, to continue for both the kings' lives, and the overliver of them.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

TO OVERLOAD. v. a. [over and load.] To burthen with too much.

The memory of youth is charged and over- loaded, and all they learn is meer jargon. Felton.
Men overloaded with a large estate
May spill their treasure in a nice conceit;
The rich may be polite, but, oh! 'tis sad,
To say you're curious, when we swear you're mad.
Young.

OVERLONG. adj. [over and long.] Too long.

I have transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods and parentheses overlong.
Boyle.

TO OVERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.] 1. To view from a higher place.

The pile o'erlook'd the town, and drew the sight,
Surpris'd at once with reverence and delight.
Dryden.

I will do it with the same respect to him, as if he were alive, and overlooking my paper while I write. Dryden.

2. To view fully; to peruse.

Would I had o'erlook'd the letter. Shakspeare.

3. To superintend; to over-see.

He was present in person to overlook the magistrates, and to overawe those subjects with the terror of his sword. Spenser.

In the greater out-parishes many of the poor parishioners through neglect do perish, for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Graunt.

4. To review.

The time and care that are required,
To overlook and file, and polish well,
Fright poets from that necessary toil. Roscommon.

5. To pass by indulgently.

This part of good-nature which consists in the pardoning and overlooking of faults, is to be exercised only in doing ourselves justice in the ordinary commerce of life. Addison.

In vain do we hope that God will overlook such high contradiction of sinners, and pardon offences committed against the plain convictions of conscience. Rogers.

6. To neglect; to slight.

Of the two relations, Christ overlooked the meaner, and denominated them solely from the more honourable. South.

To overlook the entertainment before him, and languish for that which lies out of the way, is sickly and servile. Collier.

The suffrage of our poet laureat should not be overlooked. Addison.

Religious fear, when produced by just apprehensions of a divine power, naturally overlooks all human greatness that stands in competition with it, and extinguishes every other terror. Addison.

The happiest of mankind, overlooking those solid blessings which they already have, set their hearts upon somewhat they want. Atterbury.

They overlook truth in the judgements they pass on adversity and prosperity. The temptations that attend the former they can easily see, and dread at a distance; but they have no apprehensions of the dangerous consequences of the latter.
Atterbury.

OVERLOOKER.† n. s. [over and look.] The original word signifies an overlooker, or one who stands higher than his fellows and overlooks them.

Watts.
The Holy Ghost hath made you overscers, overlookers, and watchmen over the flock of Christ.

Bp. of Chichester, Two Serms. (1576.) E. 6.
God then is present, and his angel seeth thee:
O wicked and dampned man, if thou contemne such overlookers!

Woolton, Chr. Manual, (1576.) I. i. b.

O'VERLOOP. n. s. The same with orlop.

In extremity we carry our ordnance better than we were wont, because our nether overloops are raised commonly from the water; to wit, between the lower part of the port and the sea. Raleigh.

TO OVERLOVE.* v. a. [over and love.] To prize or value too much.

I cannot so overlove this issue of my own brain,
as to hold it worthy of your majesty's judicious eyes. Bp. Hall, Dedication.

O'VERLINESS.* n. s. [from overly.] Carelessness; superficialness.

We lament the overliness of preaching; many ministers embasing themselves and their message by trite and impertinent discourses, without method. Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653.) p. 221.

O'VERLY.* adj. [oupenlice, Saxon, negligently. This is also a Scottish adjective; and Dr. Jamieson, noticing it, observes that overly must have been formerly used in English, as Somner mentions it in rendering the Saxon word. I will satisfy him, that it was a very common word; though Dr. Johnson has wholly overpassed it.] Careless; negligent;

inattentive; slight.

The courteous citizen bade me to his feast,
With hollow words, and overly request.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 3.
Not fearing the frowns of that overly host, she thrusts herself into Simon's house to find Jesus.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.
A kind of overly desire.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 317.
Not to content themselves with a slight and overly examination. Sanderson, Serm. Pref. p. 61.

OVERMASTED. adj. [over and mast.] Having too much mast.

Cloanthus better mann'd, pursu'd him fast,
But his o'er-masted gallea check'd his haste.
Dryden.

TO OVERMASTER. v. a. [over and master.] To subdue; to govern.

For your desire to know what is between us,
O'er-master it as you may. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
So sleeps a pilot, whose poor bark is prest
With many a merciless o'er-mast'ring wave.

Crashaw.
They are overmastered with a score of drunkards,
the only soldiery left about them, or else comply with all the rapines and violences.

Milton on Education.

TO OVERMATCH. v. a. [over and match.] To be too powerful; to conquer; to oppress by superior force.

I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with overmatching waves.
Shakspeare.

Sir William Lucy, with me,
Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth for aid.
Shakspeare.

Assist, lest I, who erst
Thought none my equal, now be overmatch'd.
Milton, P. R.

How great soever our curiosity be, our excess is greater, and does not only overmatch, but supplant it. Decay of Chr. Piety.

He from that length of time dire omens drew,
Of English overmatch'd, and Dutch too strong,
Who never fought three days but to pursue.
Dryden.

It moves our wonder, that a foreign guest
Should overmatch the most, and match the best.
Dryden.

OVERMATCH. n. s. [over and match.] One of superior powers; one not to be overcome.

Spain is no overmatch for England, by that which leadeth all men; that is, experience and reason. Bacon.

Eve was his overmatch, who self-deceiv'd
And rash, before-hand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with or his own.

Milton, P. R.

In a little time there will scarce be a woman of quality in Great Britain, who would not be an overmatch for an Irish priest. Addison, Freeholder.

TO OVERMEASURE.* v. a. [over and measure.] To measure or estimate too largely.

An argument, fit for great and mighty princes to have in their hand, to the end, that neither by overmeasuring their forces they lease themselves in vain enterprises; nor, on the other side, by undervaluing them, descend to fearful and pusillanimous counsels. Bacon, Ess. 29.

OVERMEASURE. n. s. [over and measure.]

Something given over the due measure.
To OVERMIX. v. a. [over and mix.] To mix with too much.

Those things these parts o'er-rule, no joys shall know,
Or little pleasure overmixt with woe. Creach.

O'VERMOST. adj. [over and most.] Highest; over the rest in authority. Ainsworth.

OVERMICKLE.  adj.* [over and mickle; Saxon, oefmickle.] Overmuch: a common word in the north of England.

OVERMODEST.  adj.* [over and modest.] Too bashful; too reserved.

It is the courtier's rule, that overmodest suitors seldom speed. Hales, Rem. p. 143.

OVERMUCH. adj. [over and much.] Too much; more than enough.

It was the custom of those former ages, in their overmuch gratitude, to advance the first authors of any useful discovery among the number of their gods. Wilkins.

An overmuch use of salt, besides that it occasions thirst and overmuch drinking, has other ill effects. Locke.

OVERMUCH. adv. In too great a degree.

The fault which we find in them is, that they overmuch abridge the church of her power in these things. Whereupon they re-charge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty which hath no limits or bounds. Hooker.

Perhaps
I also erred, in overmuch admiring
What seem'd in thee so perfect, that I thought
No evil durst attempt thee. Milton, P. L.

Deject not then so overmuch thyself,
Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides. Milton, S. A.

OVERMUCH. n. s. More than enough.
By attributing overmuch to things
Less excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st.

Milton, P. L.
With respect to the blessings the world enjoys,
even good men may ascribe overmuch to themselves. Greiv.

OVERMUCHNESS. n. s. [from overmuch.] Exuberance; superabundance. A word not used, nor elegant.

There are words that do as much raise a style, as others can depress it; superabundance and overmuchness amplifies. It may be above faith, but never above a mean. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

To OVERMULTITUDE.  v. a.* [over and multitude.] To exceed in number.

Nature — would be surcharg'd with her own weight,
And strangled in her waste fertility;
The earth cumber'd, and the wing'd air dark'd with plumes,
The herds would overmultitude their lards. Milton, Comus.

OVERNIGHT. n. s. [over and night.] This seems to be used by Shakespeare as a noun, but by Addison more properly, as I have before placed it, as a noun with a preposition.] Night before bed-time.

If I had given you this at overnight,
She might have been o'er'taken. Shakespeare.

Will confesses, that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading men overnight. Addison.

To OVERNAME. v. a. [over and name.] To name in a series.

Overname them; and as thou namest them I will describe them. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

To OVERNOISE.  v. a.* [over and noise.] To overpower by noise.

No tide of wine would drown your cares;
No mirth or music would overnoise your fears. Cowley.

To OVEROFFICE. v. a. [over and office.] To lord by virtue of an office.

This might be the pate of a politician which this ass overoffices. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

OVEROFFICIOUS. adj. [over and officious.] Too busy; too importunate.

This is an overofficious truth, and is always at a man's heels; so that if he looks about him, he must take notice of it. Collier on Reason.

To OVERPAINT.  v. a.* [over and paint.] To colour or describe too strongly.

Him whom no verse overpaints. A. Hall.

To OVERPASS. v. a. [over and pass.] 1. To CROSS.

I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'pass,
When on a sudden Torismond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryden.

What have my Scyllas and my Syrtes done,
When these they overpass, and those they shun? Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass with disregard.

The complaint about psalms and hymns might as well be overpast without any answer, as it is without any cause brought forth. Hooker.

I read the satire thou entitlest first,
And laid aside the rest, and overpast,
And swore, I thought the writer was accurst,
That his first satire had not been his last. Harington.

Remember that Pellean conquerour,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd, and slightly overpast'd. Milton, P. R.

3. To omit in a reckoning.

Arithmetical progression demonstrates how fast mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from seventy to sixty thousand able men. Raleigh.

4. To omit; not to receive; not to comprise.

If the grace of him which saveth overpass some, so that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgements of righteousness. Hooker.

OVERPAST. part. adj. [from overpast.] Gone; past.

What canst thou swear by now? —
— By time to come. —
That thou hast wronged in the time o'erpast. Shakespeare.

To OVERPAY. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.

'Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will overpay, and pay again,
When I have found it. Shakespeare.

You have yourself your kindness overpaid,
He ceases to oblige who can upbraid. Dryden.

Wilt thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
And with one heavenly smile o'erpay his pains? Prior.

To OVERPEER. v. a. [over and peer.] To overlook; to hover above. It is now out of use.

The ocean overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'beards your officers. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Your argosies with portly sail,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers,
That curtsy to them, do them reverence. Shakspeare.

Mountainous error would be too highly heapt,
For truth to o'erpeer. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind. Shakespeare.

They are invincible by reason of the overpeering mountains that back the one, and slender fortifications of the other to landward. Sandys, Journey.

To OVERPERCH. v. a. [over and perch.] To fly over.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls,
For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakespeare.

To OVERPICTURE.  v. a.* [over and picture.] To exceed the representation or picture.

She did lie
In her pavilion, (cloth of gold, of tissue,) O'erpicturing that Venus, where we see
The fancy outwork nature. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

O'VERPLUS. n. s. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than sufficient.

Some other sinners there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. Pref.

A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained still in the mortar. L'Esrange.

It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addison.

To OVERPLY. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriously.

What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, to have lost them overply'd,
In liberty's defence. Milton, Sonnet.

To OVERPOISE. v. a. [over and poise.] To outweigh.

Whether cripples who have lost their thighs will float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others overpoised by the hinder legs; we have not made experiment. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The scale
O'erpois'd by darkness, lets the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the summer's height,
Shortens tilt winter, and is lost in night. Creach.

OVERPOISE. n. s. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.

Horace, in his first and second book of odes, was still rising, but came not to his meridian till the third. After which his judgement was an overpoise to his imagination. He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he descended in his fourth by slow degrees. Dryden.

Some overpoise of sway, by turns they share,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryden.

To OVERPOLISH.  v. a.* [over and polish.] To finish too nicely.

A judicious ear would be offended with a style overpolished. Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 85.

OVERPONDEROUS.  adj.* [over and ponderous.] Too weighty; too depressing.

Neither can I think that, so reputed and so valued as you are, you would, to the forfeit of your own discerning ability, impose upon me an unfit and overponderous argument. Milton on Education.

To OVERPOST.  v. a.* [over and post.] To get quickly over.

You may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o'erposting that action. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

To OVERPOWER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppress by superiority.

Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be overpower'd. Milton, P. L.

As much light overpowers the eye, so they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with snow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.

Reason allows none to be confident, but him only who governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and can neither be surprised nor overpowered. South.

After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself outwitted by Cæsar; he broke with him, overpowered him in the senate, and caused many unjust decrees to pass against him. Dryden, Ded. to Æn.

The historians make these mountains the standards of the rise of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been standing, when it did so rise and overpower the earth.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Inspiration is, when such an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it.

Watts, Logic.

To OVERPRESS.† v. a. [over and press.]

1. To bear upon with irresistible force; to overwhelm; to crush.

Having an excellent horse under him, when he was overpressed by some, he avoided them. Sidney.

Michael's arm main promontories flung, And overpress'd whole legions weak with sin.

Roscommon.

When a prince enters on a war, he ought maturely to consider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not overpressed with many burthensome taxes. Swift.

2. To overcome by entreaty; to press or persuade too much.

To OVERPRIZE. v. a. [over and prize.] To value at too high price.

Parents overprize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection. Wotton.

OVERPROMPTNESS. n. s. [over and promptness.] Hastiness; precipitation.

[There is] an overpromptness in many young men, who desire to be counted men of valour and resolution, upon every slight occasion to raise a quarrel, and admit of no other means of composing and ending it but by sword and single combat.

Hales, Sermon on Duels, Rem. p. 71.

OVERQUIETNESS. n. s. [over and quietness.] A state of too much quiet.

To strenuous minds there is an inquietude in overquietness, and no laboriousness in labour.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 33.

OVERRANK. adj. [over and rank.] Too rank.

It produces overrank binds. Mortimer, Husb.

To OVERRATE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.

While vain shows and scenes you overrate,

'Tis to be fear'd, —
That as a fire the former house o'erthrew,
Machines and tempests will destroy the new.

Dryden.

To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to overrate the conveniences of our station, and in estimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather low than high; for our desires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our desires. Rogers.

To OVERREACH. v. a. [over and reach.]

1. To rise above.

The mountains of Olympus, Atho, and Atlas, overreach and surmount all winds and clouds.

Ralegh.

Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in such excess, that the floods overreached the tops of the highest mountains. Burnet.

2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A sagacious man is said to have a long reach.

What more cruel than man, if he see himself able by fraud to overreach, or by power to overbear the laws whereunto he should be subject? Hooker.

I have laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross overreaching. Shakspeare.

Shame to be overcome, or overreach'd, Would utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite.

Milton, P. L.

A man who had been matchless held In cunning, overreach'd where least he thought, To save his credit, and for very spite Still will be tempting him who foils him still.

Milton, P. R.

There is no pleasanter encounter than a trial of skill betwixt sharpeners to overreach one another.

L'Estrange.

Forbidding oppression, defrauding and overreaching one another, perfidiousness and treachery.

Tillotson.

We may no more sue for them than we can tell a lie, or swear an unlawful oath, or overreach in their cause, or be guilty of any other transgression.

Kettleworth.

Such a principle is ambition, or a desire of fame, by which many vicious men are overreached, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable course of action.

Addison, Spect.

John had got an impression that Lewis was so deadly cunning a man, that he was afraid to venture himself alone with him; at last he took heart of grace; let him come up, quoth he, it is but sticking to my point, and he can never overreach me.

Hist. of John Bull.

To OVERREACH. v. n. A horse is said to overreach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forwards, and strikes his toes against his fore shoes.

Farrier's Dict.

OVERREACHER. n. s. [from overreach.] A cheat; a deceiver.

To OVERREAD. v. a. [over and read.] To peruse.

The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon overread it at your pleasure.

Shakspeare.

To OVERRED. v. a. [over and red.] To smear with red.

Prick thy face and overred thy fear,
Thou lily-liver'd boy.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To OVERRIDE. n. s. [over and ride.]

1. To ride over.

The carter overridden by his cart,
Under the whele he lay full low adowne.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. To ride too much: as, the horse was overridden.

To OVERRIPE. v. a. [over and ripen.] To make too ripe.

Why droops my lord, like overripen'd corn,
Hanging the head with Ceres' pteuous load?

Shakspeare.

To OVERROAST. v. a. [over and roast.] To roast too much.

'Twas burnt and dried away,
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Since of ourselves, ourselves are cholericke,
Than feed it with such overroasted flesh.

Shakspeare.

To OVERRULE. v. a. [over and rule.]

1. To influence with predominant power; to be superior in authority.

Which humour perceiving to overrule me, I strive against it.

Sidney.

That which the church by her ecclesiastical authority shall probably think and desire to be true or good, must in congruity of reason overrule all other inferior arguments whatsoever.

Except our own private, and but probable resolutions, be by the law of publick determinations overruled, we take away all possibility of sociable life in the world.

Hooker.

What if they be such as will be overruled with some one, whom they dare not displease? Whitgift.

His passion and animosity overruled his conscience.

Clarendon.

A wise man shall overrule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the constellations and planets of the firmament.

Taylor.

He is acted by a passion which absolutely overrules him; and so can no more recover himself, than a bowl rolling down an hill stop itself in the midst of its career.

South.

'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unless where they are obliged by an overruling impulse of conscience and duty.

L'Estrange.

A man may, by the influence of an overruling planet, be inclined to lust, and yet by the force of reason overcome that bad influence.

Swift.

2. To govern with high authority; to superintend.

Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly overrule, as in other matters he is accustomed?

Hayward.

3. To supersede: as in law to overrule a plea, is to reject it as incompetent.

Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Cornish acre, and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. But this rule is overruled to a greater or lesser quantity, according to the fruitfulness or barrenness of the soil.

Carew.

OVERRULER. n. s. [over and ruler.] Director; governor.

Then did proof, the overruler of opinions, make manifest that all these are but serving sciences.

Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

To OVERRUN. v. a. [over and run.]

1. To harass by incursions; to ravage; to traverse over in a hostile manner.

Those barbarous nations that overrun the world, possessed those dominions, whereof they are now so called.

Spenser.

Till the tears she shed,
Like envious floods o'erran her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world.

Shakspeare.

They err, who count it glorious to subdue By conquest far and wide, to overrun Large countries, and in field great battles win, Great cities by assault.

Milton, P. R.

The nine
Their fainting foes to shameful flight compell'd,
And with resistless force o'erran the field.

Dryden.

Gustavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having overrun most of the rest.

Addison.

A commonwealth may be overruled by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad consequences upon your trade and liberty.

Swift, Miscell.

2. To outrun; to pass behind.

Pyrocles being come to sixteen, overrun his age in growth, strength, and all things following it, that not Musidorus could perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously.

Sidney.

We may outrun
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by overrunning. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Alhimaz ran by the way of the plain, and overrun Cush.

2 Sam. xviii. 23.

Galilæus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faster than the water can follow, the water gathereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he supposeth, holding the motion of the earth to be the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; because the earth overrunneth the water.

Bacon.

3. To overspread; to cover all over.

With an overrunning flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nah. i. 8.

This disposition of the parts of the earth, shews us the footsteps of some kind of ruin which happened in such a way, that at the same time a general flood of waters would necessarily overrun the whole earth. Burnet.

His tears defac'd the surface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'errun with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addison.

4. To mischief by great numbers; to pester.

To flatter foolish men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the same with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy state, when they are overrun with passion and drowned in their lusts. L'Estrange.

Were it not for the incessant labours of this industrious animal, Egypt would be overrun with crocodiles. Addison.

Such provision made, that a country should not want springs as were convenient for it; nor be overrun with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

5. To injure by treading down.

6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the disposition of the lines and words in correcting, by reason of the insertions.

To OVERRUN. v. n. To overflow; to be more than full.

Though you have left me,
Yet still your soul o'erruns with fondness towards you. Smith.

Cattle in inclosures shall always have fresh pasture, that now is all trampled and overrun. Spenser.

OVERRUNNER.* n. s. [over and runner.]

One who roves over in a hostile manner.

Vandal o'errunners, Goths in literature,
Ploughmen that would Parnassus new manure. Lovelace, Luc. Posth. (1659), p. 83.

O'VERSEA.* adj. [over and sea.] Foreign; from beyond seas.

Some far journey'd gentlemen, at their return home, like as they love to go in foreign apparel, so they will powder their talke with oversea language. Wilson, Arte of Rhet. (1553), B. 3.

To OVERSE'E. v. a. [over and see.]

1. To superintend; to overlook.

He had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutors nouriture to oversee. Spenser.

She without noise will oversee
His children and his family. Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass by unheeded; to omit.

I who resolve to oversee
No lucky opportunity,
Will go to council to advise
Which way to encounter, or surprise. Hudibras.

OVERSEEN. part. [from oversee.] Mistaken; deceived.

A common received error is never utterly overthrow'n, till such times as we go from signs unto causes, and shew some manifest root or fountain thereof common unto all, whereby it may clearly appear how it hath come to pass that so many have been overseen. Hooker.

Such overseers, as the overseers of this building, would be so overseen as to make that which is narrower, contain that which is larger. Holyday.

They rather observed what he had done and suffered for the king and for his country, without farther enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overseen in doing. Clarendon.

OVERSEER. n. s. [from oversee.]

1. One who overlooks; a superintendent.

There are in the world certain voluntary overseers of all books, whose censure would fall sharp on us. Hooker.

Jehiel and Azariah were overseers unto Coniah. 2 Chron. xxxi. 13.

To entertain a guest, with what a care,
Would he his household ornaments prepare;
Harass his servants, and as o'erseer stand,
To keep them working with a threatening wand.
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial provision for the poor.

The churchwardens and overseers of the poor might find it possible to discharge their duties, whereas now in the greater outparishes many of the poorer parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

To OVERSET. v. a. [over and set.]

1. To turn bottom upwards; to throw off the basis; to subvert.

The tempests met,
The sailors master'd, and the ship o'erset. Dryden.

It is forced through the hiatuses at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into horrible perturbation, even when there is not the least breath of wind; oversetting ships in the harbours, and sinking them. Woodward.

Would the confederacy exert itself, as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and overset the whole power of France. Addison on the War.

2. To throw out of regularity.

His action against Catiline ruined the consul, when it saved the city; for it swelled his soul, that ever afterwards it was apt to be overset with vanity. Dryden.

To OVERSE'T. v. n. To fall off the basis; to turn upside down.

Part of the weight will be under the axle-tree, which will so far counterpoise what is above it, that it will very much prevent the oversetting. Morimer.

To OVERSHA'DE. v. a. [over and shade.]

To cover with any thing that causes darkness.

Dark cloudy death o'er shades his beams of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears us. Shakspeare.

No great and mighty subject might eclipse or overshade the imperial power. Bacon.

If a wood of leaves o'er shades the tree,
In vain the hind shall vex the threshing-floor,
For empty chaff and straw will be thy store. Dryden.

Should we mix our friendly talk,
O'er shaded in that favourite walk;
Both pleas'd with all we thought we wanted. Prior.

To OVERSHA'DOW. v. a. [over and shadow.]

1. To throw a shadow over any thing.

Weeds choak and overshadow the corn, and bear it down, or starve and deprive it of nourishment. Bacon.

Death,
Let the damps of thy dull breath
Overshadow even the shade,
And make darkness self afraid. Crashaw.

Darkness must overshadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness, and blot out three days. Milton, P. L.

2. To shelter; to protect; to cover with superiour influence.

My overshadowing spirit and might, with thee I send along: ride forth, and bid the deep Within appointed bounds. Milton, P. L.

On her should come
The Holy Ghost, and the Power of the Highest O'er shadow her. Milton, P. R.

OVERSHA'DOWER.* n. s. [from overshadow.] One who throws a shade over any thing.

Your nobility in a right distance between crown and people; no oppressors of the people, no overshadowers of the crown.

Bacon, Lett. to the King, 2 Jan. 1618, Cab. p. 9.

To OVERSHOOT. v. n. [over and shoot.]

To fly beyond the mark.
Often it drops, or overshoots by the disproportion of distance or application. Collier on Reason.

To OVERSHOOT. v. a.

1. To shoot beyond the mark.

Every inordinate appetite defeats its own satisfaction, by overshooting the mark it aims at. Tyllotson.

2. To pass swiftly over.

High-rai'd on fortune's hill, new Alpes he spies,
O'er shoots the valley which beneath him lies,
Forgets the depths between, and travels with his eyes. Horle.

3. [With the reciprocal pronoun.] To venture too far; to assert too much.

Leave it to themselves to consider, whether they have in this point or not overshot themselves; which is quickly done, even when our meaning is most sincere. Hooker.

In finding fault with the laws, I doubt me, you shall much overshoot yourself, and make me the more dislike your other dislikes of that government. Spenser on Ireland.

For any thing that I can learn of them, you have overshot yourself in reckoning. Whigfite.

O'ERSIGHT. n. s. [from over and sight.]

1. Superintendence.

They gave the money, being told, unto them that had the oversight of the house. 2 Kings, xii. 11.

Feed the flock of God, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly. 1 Pet. v. 2.

2. Mistake; error.

Amongst so many huge volumes, as the infinite pains of St. Augustine have brought forth, what one hath gotten greater love, commendation, and honour, than the book wherein he carefully owns his oversights, and sincerely condemneth them? Hooker, Pref.

They watch their opportunity to take advantage of their adversaries' oversight. Kettlevell.
Not so his son, he mark'd this oversight,
And then mistook reverse of wrong for right. Pope.

This is the primary sense, which Dr. Johnson has overpassed.

The wastefull hills unto his throat

Is a plaine overture. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

In the center of the earth there is nothing but perfect darkness; nearer the upper region of that great body, where any overture is made, there is a kind of imperfect twilight. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 36.

The foundations, the walls, the apertions or overtures. Wotton on Architecture.

Under its base there is an overture,
Which summer weeds do render so obscure,
The careless traveller may pass, and ne'er Discover. Cotton, Wonders of the Peak.

2. Opening; disclosure; discovery.

I wish
You had only in your silent judgement try'd it, Without more overture. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

3. Proposal; something offered to consideration.

Mac Murugh moved Henry to invade Ireland, and made an overture unto him for obtaining of the sovereign lordship thereof. Davies on Ireland.

All these fair overtures, made by men well esteemed for honest dealing, could not take place. Hayward.

We with open breast
Stand ready to receive them, if they like
Our overture, and turn not back perverse. Milton, P. L.

Withstand the overtures of ill, and be intent and serious in good. Fell.

The earl of Pembroke, who abhorred the war, promoted all overtures towards accommodation with great industry. Clarendon.

If a convenient supply offers itself to be seized by force or gained by fraud, human nature persuades us to hearken to the inviting overture. Rogers.

Suppose five hundred men proposing, debating, and voting according to their own little or much reason, abundance of indigested and abortive, many pernicious and foolish overtures would arise. Swift.

4. A musical composition played at the beginning of an oratorio, concert, or opera.

The overture disposes the mind to that mood, which fits it for the opening of the piece. A. Smith on the Imit. Arts, P. ii.

Before the opening of the overture, it [the organ] gives that pitch-note in full, which always leads me to expect a succession of more solemn sounds than in reality succeed it. Mason on Church Music, p. 81.

To OVERTURN. v. a. [over and turn.]

1. To throw down; to topple down; to subvert; to ruin.

He is wise in heart and mighty in strength—which removeth the mountains, and overturneth them in his anger. Job.

These will sometimes overturn, and sometimes swallow up towns, and make a general confusion in nature. Burnet.

This he obviates, by saying we see all the ideas in God; which is an answer to this objection, but such an one as overturns his whole hypothesis, and renders it useless and as unintelligible, as any of those he has laid aside. Locke.

But he comes round about again, and overturns every stone that he had laid. Leslie.

If we will not encourage publick works of beneficence, till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room left for charity. Atterbury.

A monument of deathless fame,
A woman's hand o'erturns. Rowe.

Hist. Royal Soc. iv. 323.

OVERTURNER. n. s. [from overturn.] Subverter.

I have brought before you a robber of the publick treasure, an overturner of law and justice, and the destruction of the Sicilian province. Swift.

TO OVERVALUE. v. a. [over and value.]

To rate at too high a price.

We have just cause to stand in some fear, lest by thus overvaluing their sermons they make the price and estimation of Scripture, otherwise notified, to fall.

Hooker.

To overvalue human power is likewise an argument of human weakness.

Holyday.

TO OVERVEIL.† v. a. [over and veil.] To cover.

The day begins to break, and night is fled;

Whose pitchy mantle overveil'd the earth. Shakespeare.

Thou mak'st the night to overveil the day;

Then savage beasts creep from the silent wood;

Then lions' whelps lie roaring for their prey,

And at thy powerful hand demand their food.

Sir H. Wotton, Ps. 104. Rem. p. 386.

TO OVERVOTE. v. a. [over and vote.] To conquer by plurality of votes.

The lords and commons might be content to be overvoted by the major part of both houses, when they had used each their own freedom.

King Charles.

TO OVERWATCH. v. n. [over and watch.]

To subdue with long want of rest.

Morpheus is dispatch'd;

Which done, the lazy monarch overwatch'd,

Down from his propping elbow drops his head,

Dissolv'd in sleep, and shrinks within his bed.

Dryden.

OVERWATCHED. adj. Tired with too much watching.

While the dog hunted in the river, he had withdrawn himself to pacify with sleep his overwatched eyes.

Sidney, Arc. b. 2.

OVERWEAK. adj. [over and weak.] Too weak; too feeble.

Paternal persuasions, after mankind began to forget the original giver of life, became in all overweak to resist the first inclination of evil; or after, when it became habitual, to constrain it.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

TO OVERWEARY. v. a. [over and weary.]

To subdue with fatigue.

Might not Palinurus fall asleep and drop into the sea, having been overwearied with watching?

Dryden.

TO OVERWEATHER. v. a. [over and weather.] To batter by violence of weather.

How like a younker or a prodigal,

The skarfed bark puts from her native bay,

Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind!

How like the prodigal doth she return,

With overweather'd ribs and ragged sails,

Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind!

Shakespeare.

TO OVERWEEN. v. n. [over and ween.]

To think too highly; to think with arrogance.

To reach beyond the truth of any thing in thought; especially in the opinion of a man's self.

Hammer.

Shakespeare.

My master hath sent for me, to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I overween to think so.

Shakespeare.

Lash hence these overweening rags of France, These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives.

Shakespeare.

My eyes too quick, my heart overweens too much,

Unless my hand and strength could equal them.

Shakespeare.

Take heed of overweening, and compare Thy peacock's feet with thy gay peacock's train;

Study the best and highest things that are,

But of thyself an humble thought retain. Davies.

They that overween,

And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,

No anger find in thee. Milton, Sonnet.

Satan might have learnt

Less overweening, since he fail'd in Job,

Whose constant perseverance overcame

Whate'er his cruel malice could invent.

Milton, P. R.

No man is so bold, rash, and overweening of his own works as an ill painter and a bad poet. Dryden.

Enthusiasm, though founded neither on reason nor revelation, but rising from the conceits of a warmed or overweening brain, works more powerfully on the persuasions and actions of men than either or both together.

Locke.

Men of fair minds and not given up to the overweening of self-flattery, are frequently guilty of it; and, in many cases, one with amazement hears the arguing, and is astonished at the obstinacy, of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reason.

Locke.

Now enters overweening pride,

And scandal ever gaping wide.

Swift.

OVERWEENINGLY.† adv. [from overween.]

With too much arrogance; with too high an opinion.

Till he himself had been infallible, like him whose peculiar words he overweeningly assumes.

Milton, Eiconoclast. ch. 26.

TO OVERWEIGH. v. a. [over and weigh.]

To preponderate.

Sharp and subtle discourses of wit procure many times very great applause, but being laid in the balance with that which the habit of sound experience delivereth, they are overweighed.

Hooker.

My unsolv'd name, the austereness of my life, Will so your accusation overweigh, That you shall stifle in your own report.

Shakespeare.

OVERWEIGHT. n. s. [over and weight.]

Preponderance.

Sinking into water is but an overweight of the body, in respect of the water. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TO OVERWHELM.† v. a. [over and whelm.]

1. To crush underneath something violent and weighty.

What age is this, where honest men,

Plac'd at the helm,

A sea of some foul mouth or pen,

Shall overwhelm?

B. Jonson.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,

With the hell hated lie overwhelm thy heart.

Shakespeare.

How trifling an apprehension is the shame of being laughed at by fools, when compared with that everlasting shame and astonishment which shall overwhelm the sinner, when he shall appear before the tribunal of Christ!

Rogers.

Blind they rejoice, though now, even now they fall;

Death hastes amain; one hour overwhelms them all.

Pope.

2. To overlook gloomily.

Let the brow overwhelm it,

As fearfully as doth a galled rook

O'erhang and jutting his confounded base.

Shakespeare.

An apothecary late I noted,

In tatter'd weeds with overwhelming brows, Culling of simples. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

3. To put over.

Then I overwhelm a broader pipe about the first. Dr. Papin, Hist. R. Soc. iv. 288.

An overwhelm

Of wonderful on man's astonish'd sight.

Young, Night Th. 9.

OVERWHELMINGLY. adv. [from overwhelming.] In such a manner as to overwhelm. Inelegant, and not in use.

Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin, nor impertinently betray their souls to ruin for that which they call light and trivial; which is so indeed in respect of the acquiescent, but overwhelmingly ponderous in regard of the pernicious consequences. Decay of Chr. Piety.

TO OVERWING.* v. a. [over and wing.] To outreach the wing of an army; to outflank.

Agricola, doubting to be overwinged, stretches out his front, though somewhat of the thinnest.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

OVERWISE. adj. [over and wise.] Wise to affectation.

Make not thyself overwise. Ecc. vii. 16.

OVERWISENESS.* n. s. [from overwise.] Pretended wisdom; "science falsely so called."

Tell wit how much it wrangles

In tickle points of niceness;

Tell wisdom, she entangles

Herself in overwiseness;

And if they do reply,

Straight give them both the lye.

Sir W. Raleigh, Song in Percy's Rel. B. 3. S. 4.

TO OVERWORD.* v. a. [over and word.]

To say too much. See TO OVERSPEAK.

Life recover'd had the raime, And overwrestled his strong enemy.

Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 24.

OVERWROUGHT. part. [over and wrought.]

1. Labour'd too much.

Apelles said of Protegenes, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought; as well as underwrought: too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. Worked all over.

Of Gothick structure was the northern side, Overwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride.

Pope.

3. It has in Shakespeare a sense which I know not well how to reconcile to the original meaning of the word, and therefore conclude it misprinted for over-raught; that is, overreached or cheated.

By some device or other,

The villain is overwrought of all my money;

They say this town is full of cozenage. Shakspeare.

OVERYEA'RED. adj. [over and year.] Too old.

Among them dwelt
A maid, whose fruit was ripe, not overyeared.
Fairfax.

OVERZE'AL'D.* adj. [over and zeal.] Ruled by too much zeal. Not in use.

Thus was this good king's judgement overzealed.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 214.

OVERZE'ALOUS. adj. [over and zealous.] Too zealous.

It is not of such weighty necessity to determine one way or the other, as some, overzealous for or against the immateriality of the soul, have been forward to make the world believe.
Locke.

OUGH.T.† n. s. [aphit, that is, a whit, Sax.] This word is therefore more properly written ought. See Aught. The difference has arisen, as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, merely from the different usages of writing a or o for one: Saxon, ophit, oht. See also NOUGHT. Any thing; not nothing.

For ought that I can understand, there is no part but the bare English pale, in which the Irish have not the greatest footing. Spenser on Ireland.
He asked him if he saw ought. St. Mark, viii. 23.

To do ought good never will be our task;
But ever to do ill our sole delict. Milton, P. L.
Universal Lord! be bounteous still
To give us only good; and if the night
Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd,
Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark.
Milton, P. L.

OUGH.T.† verb imperfect; in the second person oughtest. [This word the etymologists make the preterite of owe, but it has often a present signification.]

1. [Preterite of owe.] Owed; was bound to pay; have been indebted.

Apprehending the occasion, I will add a continuance to that happy motion, and besides give you some tribute of the love and duty I long have ought you.
Spelman.

This blood which men by treason sought,
That followed, sir, which to myself I ought.
Dryden.

2. [Preterite of owe, in the sense of own.] Had a right to.

Where is the booty, —
And where is eke your friend which halfe it ought?
Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 16.
The knight, the which that castle ought.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 2.

3. To be obliged by duty. Know how thou oughtest to behave.

She acts just as she ought,
But never, never reach'd one gen'rous thought.
Pope.

Judges ought to remember, that their office is to interpret law, and not to make or give law.
Bacon.

We ought to profess our dependance upon him, and our obligations to him for the good things we enjoy. We ought to publish to the world our sense of his goodness with the voice of praise, and tell of all his wondrous works. We ought to comfort his servants and children in their afflictions, and relieve his poor distressed members in their manifold necessities, for he that giveth alms, sacrificeth praise.
Nelson.

4. To be fit; to be necessary.

These things ought not so to be. James, iii. 10.
If grammar ought to be taught, it must be to one that can speak the language already. Locke.

5. Applied to persons it has a sense not easily explained. To be fit, or necessary that he should.

Ought not Christ to have suffered? Luke.

6. Ought is both of the present and past tenses, and of all persons except the second singular.

O'VIDUCT.* n. s. [ovum and ductus, Lat.] A passage for the egg from the ovary to the womb.

Hist. R. Soc. iii. 498.

O'VIFORM. adj. [ovum and forma, Lat.] Having the shape of an egg.

This notion of the mundane egg, or that the world was oviform, hath been the sense and language of all antiquity.
Burnet.

OVI'PAROUS. adj. [ovum and pario, Lat.] Bringing forth eggs; not viviparous.

That fishes and birds should be oviparous, is a plain sign of providence.

More, Ant. against Atheism.
Birds and oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them for many years' laying.
Ray.

OUM'ER.* n. s. [ombre, Fr. umbra, Lat.] The shade. A northern word. See Grose and Craven Dialect.

OUNCE. n. s. [once, Fr. uncia, Latin.] A name of weight of different value in different denominations of weight. In troy weight, an ounce is twenty penny-weights; a penny-weight, twenty-four grains.

The blood he hath lost,
Which I dare vouch is more than that he hath
By many an ounce, he dropt it for his country.
Shakespeare.

A sponge dry weigheth one ounce twenty-six grains; the same sponge being wet, weigheth fourteen ounces six drams and three quarters.
Bacon.

OUNCE. n. s. [once, French; onza, Span.] A lynx.

The ounce,
The libbard, and the tiger, as the mole
Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw
In hillocks.
Milton, P. L.

OUN'DED.* adj. [ondé, Fr. from unda, OUN'DING.} Lat.] Waving; imitating waves. Not in use, except perhaps in the heraldick term oundy for wavy.

She rent. Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iv. 786.
Endenting, or barring, ounding, paling, winding. Chaucer, Pars. Tale.

OUPHE. n. s. [af, Teutonic.] A fairy; a goblin.

Nan Page, — and my little son, we'll dress
Like urchins, *ouphe*s, and fairies, green and white.
Shakespeare.

OUPHEN. adj. [from ouph.] Elfish.

Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
Ye moon-shine revellers and shades of night,
You ouphen heirs of fixed destiny,
Attend your office.
Shakespeare.

OUR.† pron. poss. [Sax. pe, nos, us; quasi weer, ure, vor, oppe, our, noster. Lye.] 1. Pertaining to us; belonging to us.

You shall Lead our first battle, brave Macduff, and we Shall take upon us what else remains. Shaksp.
Our wit is given Almighty God to know,
Our will is given to love him being known;
But God could not be known to us below,
But by his works which through the sense are shown.

So in our little world this soul of ours
Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
Doth use on divers objects divers powers,
And so are her effects diversify'd. Davies.
Our soul is the very same being it was yesterday,
last year, twenty years ago. Beattie.

2. When the substantive goes before, it is written ours.

Edmund, whose virtue in this instance,
So much commands itself, you shall be ours.
Shakespeare.

Thou that hast fashion'd twice this soul of ours,
So that she is by double title thine. Davies.

Reading furnishes the mind only with materials of knowledge, it is thinking makes what we read ours: it is not enough to cram ourselves with a great load of collections; unless we chew them over again, they will not give us strength. Locke.

Their organs are better disposed than ours, for receiving grateful impressions from sensible objects. Atterbury.

OURANOGRAPHY.* n. s. [ὀυρανός and γράφω, Gr.] A description of the heavens.

The ingenious Mr. Hooke, in his animadversions on Hevelius's ouranography, had omitted the chief objection Hevelius makes against these kind of sights. Hist. R. Soc. iv. 272.

OURSE'LVES. reciprocal pronoun. [the plural of myself.]

1. We; not others: it is added to we by way of emphasis or opposition.

We ourselves might distinctly number in words a great deal farther than we usually do, would we find out but some fit denominations to signify them by. Locke.

2. Us; not others, in the oblique cases.

Safe in ourselves, while on ourselves we stand,
The sea is ours, and that defends the land. Dryden.
Our confession is not intended to instruct God, who knows our sins much better than ourselves do, but it is to humble ourselves, and therefore we must not think to have confessed a right till that be done. Wh. Duty of Man.

OURSE'LF is used in the regal style.

To make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourselves
Till supper-time alone. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

We ourselves will follow
In the main battle. Shakespeare.

OUTRAGE.† n. s. [outrage, French.] At first outrage, both in old French and English; ultragium, low Latin, from ultra, beyond. This word also had formerly the accent on either syllable:

it is now constantly on the first.]

1. Open violence; tumultuous mischief.

He toke quarrell of his outrage.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

He wrought great outrages, wasting all the country where he went. Spenser on Ireland.

He doth himself in secret shrowd,

To fly the vengeance for his outrage due. Spenser.

In that beastly fury

He has been known to commit outrage,

And cherish factions. Shakspeare, Timon.

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,

And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd;

My charity is outrage. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. This word seems to be used by Philips for mere commotion, without any ill import, contrary to the universal use of writers.

See with what outrage from the frosty north,

The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings

In battailous array. Philips.

To OUTRAGE. v. a. [outrager, French.]

To injure violently or contumeliously;

to insult roughly and tumultuously.

Ah heavens! that do this hideous act behold,

And heavenly virgin thus outraged see;

How can the vengeance just so long withhold!

her modesty, and betrays her virtue, by giving too long an audience. Brome.

To OUTRAGE. v. n. To commit exor-bittances. Not in use.

Three or four great ones in court will outrage

in apparel, huge hose, monstrous hats, and garish colours. Ascham.

OUTRAGIOUS.† adj. [outrageux, French.]

It should, I think, be written outrageous;

but the custom seems otherwise. Dr.

Johnson.—So far from custom being otherwise, I find the ancient form of the word to be with eous, and not iout.

Milton writes it both ways; in the passage cited, outrageous. See also OUTRA-

GIOUSLY, and OUTRAGIOUSNESS, where the termination of eous is abundantly shewn. Our old lexicography has also this form.

1. Violent; furious; raging; exorbitant;

tumultuous; turbulent.

Tyranny is seynorye vyolent and outrageous.
Caxton, Boke of Good Maners, (1486,) f. ii. b.
 Under him they committed divers the most outrageous villanies, that a base multitude can imagine.
Sidney.

As she went her tongue did walk,
 In foul reproach and terms of vile desight,
 Provoking him by her outrageous talk,
 To heape more vengeance on that wretched wight.
Spenser.

They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
 Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild.
Milton, P. L.

When he knew his rival freed and gone,
 He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
 He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground;
 The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around.
Dryden.

2. Excessive; passing reason or decency.
 The outrageous decking of temples and churches with gold and silver.

Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue

Outvenoms all the worms of Nile.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

To OUTVI'E† v. a. [out and vie.] Dr. Johnson. — Bp. Hurd has made the following sound observation upon Addison's use of this word. "To vye is to contend with; to out-vye, to out-do any one, in vyeing with him. But the word seems to be of an ill composition, and should not, I think, be used thus absolutely. If employed at all it should be in some such way as this: 'in the affectation of pomp and pageantry he outvied others, i. e. in this respect, he strove or contended beyond them.' I know not if Addison had any authority for the use of it: he had, perhaps, done better to use the common word outstrip." Note on Addison's Remarks on Italy.] To exceed; to surpass; to outstrip.

For folded flocks on fruitful plains, Fair Britain all the world outvies.

Dryden.

it out-witting a man, when he is only out-knaved.

L'Estrange.

Justice forbids defrauding, or going beyond our brother in any manner, when we can overreach and out-wit him in the same.

After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself out-witted by Caesar and broke with him.

Dryden.

Nothing is more equal in justice, and indeed

more natural in the direct consequence of effects and causes, than for men wickedly wise to out-wit

themselves; and for such as wrestle with Providence, to trip up their own heels.

South.

OUTWORK† n. s. [out and work.] Parts of a fortification next the enemy; any work raised outwardly to fortify or defend.

Take care of our out-work, the navy royal, which are the walls of the kingdom; and every great ship is an impregnable fort; and our many safe and commodious ports as the redoubts to secure them. Bacon.

When the soul is beaten from its first station, and the mounds and outworks of virtue are once broken down, it becomes quite another thing from what it was before. South, Serm. ii. 369.

Death hath taken in the out-works,
And now assails the fort; I feel, I feel him,
Gnawing my heart-strings. Denham.

Rankled so sore and fester'd inwardly,
Till that the truth thereof I did outwrest. Spenser.

OUTWROUGHT. part. [out and wrought.] Outdone; exceeded in efficacy.

In your violent acts,
The fall of torrents and the noise of tempests,
The boiling of Carylids, the sea's wildness,
The eating force of flames, and wings of winds,
Be all outwrought by your transcendent furies.

To OUTZANY. v. a. [out and zany.] To exceed in buffoonery.

O, run not proud of this: yet, take thy due:
Thou dost outzany Cokely. B. Jonson, Epigr. 130.

To OWE. v. a. [eg aa, Iowe, or Iought, Icelandic.]

1. To be obliged to pay; to be indebted.
I owe you much, and, like a witless youth,
That which I owe is lost.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Let none seek needless causes to approve
The faith they owe. Milton, P. L.

A son owes help and honour to his father: and is a subject less indebted to the king. Holyday.

All your parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son.

Thou hast deserv'd more love than I can show,
But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe.

If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.

By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fall'n condition is, and to me owe
All his deliverance, and to none but me,
Milton, P. L.

3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.

O deem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,
Jove-hated Greece, and punish'd Greece in thee.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we now use own.

Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Fate, shew thy force; ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be; and be this so.

Shakespeare.

Nor poppy nor mandragora,
Not all the drowsy sirups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shakespeare, Othello.

If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crashaw.

To OWE. v. n. To be bound or obliged.
The rich man oweth of duty to do his mercy upon the poore creature. Dp. Fisher, Ps. p. 14.

O'WING. part. [from owe.] A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety some writers were aware, and having no quick sense of the force of English words, have used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say that money is due to me; they say likewise, the effect is due to the cause.]

1. Consequential.
This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomps of it.

2. Due as a debt. Here due is undoubtedly the proper word.

You are both too bold;
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen.

The debt, owing from one country to the other,
cannot be paid without real effects sent thither
to that value. Locke.

3. Imputable to, as an agent.

If we estimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find in most of them owing to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of struggles between nobles and commons, the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

OWL. † n. s. [ule, Saxon; hulote, Fr. OULET,] and Scottish. Dr. Johnson. — Icel. yla, or ylgia, an owl, from yla, to cry out. See To Howl.] A bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing
For a charm. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Return to her!
No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shaksp.
'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray
Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay;
Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bowser.

Then lady Cynthia, mistress of the shade,
Goes, with the fashionable owls, to bed. Young.

OWL-LIGHT.  n. s.* [owl and light.] Glimmering light; twilight.

Church history making an important part of our theologic studies, the antiquarian, who delights to solace himself in the benighted days of monkish owl-light, sometimes passes for the divine.

Warburton, Charge to the Clergy, (1761.)

OWL-LIKE.  adj.* Resembling an owl in look or quality.

Now like an owl-like watchman he must walk.

Donne, Sat. 2.

At this deep Sidrophel look'd wise;
And, staring round with owl-like eyes,
He put his face into a posture
Of sapience, and began to bluster.

Hudibras, ii. iii.

O'WLER. n. s. One who carries contraband goods: in the legal sense, one that carries out wool illicitly. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night: but rather, I believe, a corruption of wooller, by a colloquial neglect of the w, such as is often observed in woman, and by which good-wife is changed to goody. Wooller, ooler, owler.

By running goods, these graceless owlers gain.

We understand, by some owlers, old people die in France. Swift.

O'WLING.  n. s.* An offence against public trade.

Offences against publick trade are felonious, or not felonious. Of the first sort is owling, so called from its being usually carried on in the night, which is the offence of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom. Blackstone.

O'WLISH.  adj.* [from owl.] Resembling an owl.

Every one, while it lasted, was very gay and busy in the morning, and very owlish and very tipsy at night. Gray to Dr. Wharton, (1749.)

OWN. † n. s. [azen, Saxon; eygen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — M. Goth. agin, aihn; Icel. aigan, from eiigia, possidere. Serenius. Thus own from the obsolete owe, to possess.]

1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my own, my peculiar; but is, in reality, the participle passive of the verb owe, in the participle owe or own: my own; the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

Inachus in his cave alone,
Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.

I yet never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own.

Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings, xvii. 29.

For my own share one beauty I design,
Engage your honours that she shall be mine.

It is conceit rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit thee gloves made of her own spun yarn.

Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradistinction; domestick; not foreign: mine, his, or yours; not another's.

These toils abroad, these tumults with his own,
Fell in the revolution of one year. Daniel.

There's nothing sillier than a crafty knave outwitted, and beaten at his own play. L'Estrange.

To OWN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.

When you come, find me out,
And own me for your son. Dryden, Cleom.

2. To possess; to claim; to hold by right.

Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your cause upon our coasts unknown. Dryden.

Others on earth o'er human race preside,
Of these the chief, the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne. Pope.

3. To avow.

Nor hath it been thus only amongst the most civilized nations; but the barbarous Indians likewise have owned that tradition. Wilkins.

I'll venture out alone,
Since you, fair princess, my protection own. Dryden.

4. To confess; not to deny.

Make this truth so evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it. Tillotson.

Others will own their weakness of understanding. Locke.

It must be owned, that, generally speaking, good parents are never more fond of their daughters, than when they see them too fond of themselves. Lavo.

O'WNERSHIP. n. s. [from owner.] Property; rightful possession.

In a real action, the proximate cause is the property or ownership of the thing in controversy. Ayliffe, Paverger.

O'WNER. n. s. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; master; rightful possessor.

A bark
Stays but till her owner comes aboard. Shakespeare.
It is not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me. Shakespeare.

Here shew favour, because it happeneth that the owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years' profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process against him. Bacon.

They intend advantage of my labours
With no small profit daily to my owners. Milton, S. A.

These wait the owners last despair,
And what's permitted to the flames invade. Dryden.

A freehold, though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison, Freeholder.

That small muscle draws the nose upwards, when it expresses the contempt which the owner of it has upon seeing any thing he does not like. Addison, Spect.

Victory hath not made us insolent, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of restoring every one's right to their just owners. Atterbury.

What is this wit, which must our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope.

OWRE. n. s. [urus jubatus, Lat.] A beast. Ainsworth.

Ox. † n. s. plur. oxen. [oxa, Saxon; oxe, Danish. Dr. Johnson. — "M. Goth. auhs; Icel. oxe, uxe, taurus; Cambr. ych, bos; ab Icel. aka, Sueth. akea, currum agere. Sic Sueth. ock, jumentum; Icel. oke, jugales; ab aukan; Sueth. okea, augere, ut sit quatuor multiplicator gregis. Wacht. "Serenius. — "Videri possunt affinia Græco ζυγω vel ζυγάριον, augeo; quod proavi nostri, quorum opes in gregibus potissimum atque armentis consistebant, rem suam familiarem ex frequentiore bubuli pecoris foeturâ ingens incrementum capere judicarent. Ex auhs (Goth.) interim factum est ox; nam hs (Goth.) plerumque mutatur in x." Junii Goth. Gloss.]

1. The general name for black cattle.

The black ox hath not trod on his foot. Camden.
Sheep run not half so tim'rous from the wolf
Or horse or oxen from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves. Shakespeare.

I saw the river Clitumnus, celebrated by the poets for making cattle white that drink of it. The inhabitants of that country have still the same opinion, and have a great many oxen of a whitish colour to confirm them in it. Addison.

2. A castrated bull.

The horns of oxen and cows are larger than the bulls'; which is caused by abundance of moisture. Bacon.

Although there be naturally more males than females, yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen, and wethers, there are fewer. Grant.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

The frowning bull
And ox half-raised, Thomson, Summer.

OX-LIKE.  adj.* Resembling an ox in look or quality.

I made the might elephant,
Who, ox-like, feeds on every herb and plant. Sandys, Paraphr. of Job.

With ox-like eyes, Pope, Dunciad.

OXBA'NE. n. s. [buphonus.] A plant. Ainsworth.

O'XEYE. † n. s. [buphthalmus.] A plant. Miller.

Bring corn-flag, tulips, and Adonis' flower,
Fair oxeye, goldy-locks, and columbine. B. Jonson, Masque.

O'XEYED.  adj.* [ox and eye.] Having large or full eyes, like those of an ox.

Homer useth that epithet of oxeyed, in describing Juno, because a round black eye is the best. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 472.

O'XFLY. n. s. [from ox and fly; tabanus, Latin.] A fly of a particular kind.

O'XGANG of land. † n. s. Ordinarily taken for fifteen acres. It is sometimes called oxgate; and in the north, corruptly osken.

A carucate of land contains 100 acres; eight oxgangs make a carucate; and every oxgang contains fifteen acres. Kelham, Domesday Book Illustr. p. 169.

O'XHEAL. n. s. [hellebori nigri radix.] A plant. Ainsworth.

O'XLIP. † n. s. [Sax. oxan-hlippa, primula veris. This word should therefore be written oxslip; though Dr. Johnson, overpassing the Saxon word, has given it oxslip; as the editors of Shakespeare also have.] The same with cowslip, a vernal flower.

A bank whereon the wild thyme blows,
Where oxlip and the nodding violet grows. Shakespeare.

The cowslip then they couch, and th' oxslip, for her meet. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

O'XSTALL. n. s. [ox and stall.] A stand for oxen.

O'XTER.  n. s.* [oxtan, Saxon, probably from the Lat. axilla.] The arm-pit. Common in the north of England.

O'XYGEN.  n. s.* [ξέξος and γενέσμαι, Gr.; oxygene, Fr.] A principle existing in the air, of which it forms the respirable part, and which is also necessary to combustion. Oxygen, by combining with bodies, makes them acid; whence its name, signifying generator of acids.

O'XYGONE.  n. s.* [ξέξος and γόνια, Gr.; oxygone, Fr.] A triangle having three acute angles.

O'XYMEL. † n. s. [oxumelle, Saxon; oximel, old French; ξέξμελι, Gr. ξέξος, and μέλι.] A mixture of vinegar and honey.

In fevers, the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates, were pisans and decoctions of some vegetables, with oxymel or the mixture of honey and vinegar. Arbuthnot.

OXYMO'RON. † n. s. [ξέξμορον.] A rhetorical figure, in which an epithet of a quite contrary signification is added to any word.

Some elegant figures, and tropes of rhetoric, biting sarcasms, sly ironies, strong metaphors, lofty hyperboles, paranomasies, oxymorons, lie very near upon the confines of jocularity. Barrow, vol. i. S. 14.

OXY'RRHODINE. n. s. [ξέξρρδίνιον, ξέξος and ρόδον.] A mixture of two parts of oil of roses with one of vinegar of roses.

The spirits, opiates, and cool things, readily compose oxyrrhodies. Floyer on the Humours.

O'YER. n. s. [oyer, old French, to hear.] A court of oyer and terminer, is a jurisdiction where causes are heard and determined.

OYE's [oyez, hear ye, Fr.] Is the introduction to any proclamation or advertisement given by the publick criers both in England and Scotland. It is thrice repeated.

Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
Attend your office and your quality.
Crier hobgoblin make the fairy Oyes. Shakespeare.

O yes / if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry;
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag. Crashaw.

O'YLETHOLE. n. s. See EYELET. [It may be written oylet, from ocillet, French; but eyelet seems better.]

Distinguish'd slashes deck the great,
As each excels in birth or state;
His oyetholes are more and ampler,
The king's own body was a sampler. Prior.

O'YSTER. † n. s. [ortpa, ortpe, Saxon; oystre, old French.] A bivalve testaceous fish.

I will not lend thee a penny —
— Why then the world's mine oyster, which I with sword will open. Shaks. M. Wives of Windsor.

O Y S

Rich honesty dwells like your miser, sir, in a poor house; as your pearl in your foul oyster.

Shakspeare.

Another mass held a kind of oyster shell, and other bivalves.

Woodward on Fossils.

There may be many ranks of beings in the invisible world as superior to us, as we are superior to all the ranks of beings in this visible world; though we descend below the oyster to the least animated atoms discovered by microscopes.

Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

O Y S

Where oyster tubs in rows
Are rang'd beside the posts, there stay thy haste.

Gay.

O'YSTERWENCH.† } n. s. [oyster and wench,
O'YSTERWIFE. } or woman.] A wo-O'YSTERWOMAN. } man whose business is to sell oysters. Proverbially, a low woman.

Off goes his bonnet to an oysterwench. Shaksp.

O Z Æ

Who can despair to see another thrive
By loan of twelve-pence to an oysterwife?

By. Hall, Sat. iv. 2.

The oysterwomen lock'd their fish up,
And trudg'd away to cry, No bishop. Hudibras.

OZÆ'NA. n. s. [ὄζαινα, from ὄζω, Greek;
ozene, French.] An ulcer in the inside of the nostrils that gives an ill stench.
